The thought-waves of earth reach us in this way: you wonder why our lecturers and noted mediums have not said more on the the subject of obsession. The reason is, all mediums do not realize the nature of obsession, and many have never come in contact with it, while others are aware of it; these facts disprove the statement made in this arena that Spiritualism embodies a system of demonism; it does not; it embodies various grades or states of spirit development, from the earth bound, or lowest, to the infinite, or highest. Spiritual intelligences who do reformatory work, do not lose time in calling the attention of Spiritualists to obsessed spirits, but they set to work to relieve them. Many form into bands of mercy for visiting the lower strata and projecting their magnetic auras against the shadows which surround the obobsessed spirits. Others band together to attack the source of the evil in mortal life. There is no wrong on earth that does not carry its cry of woe, its petition for help to the listening ears of immortals and quick on the wings of love they respond and begin as best they can a course that will alleviate them, in time. Many mediums are the instruments of guides who are performing an especial work through them, and obsession does not belong to or fit in with their system of labors, although they may allude to it or recognize it as a factor on earth; they rest content in the knowledge that other guides and teachers are taking up the work of reform and cure.

Inebriation the Greatest Source of Earthly Misery.

The greatest source of earthly misery arises in inebriation, because its victim not only suffers, himself, but his family suffer with him and little children endure hunger, cold and every deprivation. Medicines are of little avail in the case of the periodical drinker; the root of the appetite is in the spirit; the paternal germ was evolved from a body vibrating with alcohol. The per cent of reformed inebriates from this class is larger than from another class. The habitual drinker may be bettered by administering a nerve tonic which will supply the defect of birth (that which emanated from the mother) and all victims to inebriation should be given spiritual treatments; since the root of their inebriation is in the spirit they require then, a spiritual cure; as the mother and the father impressed upon the embryo the states which dominated them at conception; as the mind and thought of the mother, (suffering during gestation with nerve defect), entailed upon her son her own lack of nerve energy, so also must the minds of strong-willed healers be brought in conjunction for a cure; the obsessed mortal or inebriate should sit quietly with healers who project a strong mental current on his afflicted spirit for his cure. He should be taught that the root of his disease lies in spirit. When he becomes soulfully illumined, when the darkness of spirit caused by the mother's brooding during gestation, is replaced by light, the condition which held him to the disease is broken and he is well. When the inebriate is lost to all sense of self-respect and he can not be reached in this way, a good and humane psychologist should throw a magnetic force over the boy, speak to his spirit and thus aid it to throw off the obsession.

In earthly precincts when the officer of the law arrests an inebriate, he should not take him to jail, to be kept a prisoner or fined a sum of money; instead he should be taken to a home or sanitarium, erected by the state, where strong magnetists and powerful psychologists may supply a nerve force and bring a mental illumination to his obsessed spirit for a cure; this lies in changing the mental and spiritual attitude of the inebriate. Instead of this, drunkards are arrested, placed in jail and made to pay money, then are allowed to go forth into a merciless community where they are despised for their infirmities, and where they soon fall again into the same error. Nothing is done by anyone, even by the law, to break the obsession which holds them victims.

The Word Evil as Applied to Spirit.

I would call your attention to the word evil, as applied to these obsessed disembodied spirits; neither that nor the word demon may be logically applied to them; since, on dissolution they still live in the earthly environment and are dominated by the earthly appetites, they are, then, earth-bound spirits and entitled to just the cognomen which fits their condition; it is hardly fair to call them demons, for every earth-bound spirit who comes to mortals is not essentially evil—far from it; they are often dominated by just a craving to get into the earthly atmosphere.

It is proper that the sequel or brighter side to the story of the earth-bound spirit be now presented.

Obsession is a state that belongs essentially to earth, it has no place in the spiritual spheres save as it is projected there from earth; its shadow may brood over a departed spirit only so long as the spirit may be unable to emerge from the shadow. The white light of the God-sun penetrates every atom of the spheres and shines upon the lowest and most depraved of spirit sinners. No soul is lost and no soul has ever been eternally lost, for each is reached by the God ray and though it may not at once reform, yet gradually the saving rays bring a knowledge which shows to the sinner his darkened condition and he begins to resurrect the spark of infinity from the mass of earthly shadow; he rises to his divine estate.

Evil spirits are the bug-bears of Spiritualism on account of the false belief that the spirit world is full of demons who are chained for all time to their condition. A belief in demonology holds millions of mortals enslaved by fear; it arrests their growth, for no person ever rose to exalted heights who was enslaved by fear; it chains the mind from exerting its faculties and stops the human progress. Let us reason together. The earth-bound spirit of hundreds of years ago and all those who accompanied him, have long ago emerged from earth's obsessing shadow and are climbing the hills of progression toward infinity; it could not be otherwise for nothing holds still, all is motion and activity—progression; it is the law governing earth-bound spirits and the law which brings them to their own.

Jottings From Chesterfield Camp.

It was a great pleasure to meet the president of the Indiana Association of Spiritualists, with his kindly, fatherly face and voice. His address at the opening of the camp on Saturday afternoon, did not change my estimate of him in the least. In his address he admonished the mediums to bear with each other's shortcomings and to be charitable to all, remembering that we were children of the same great spirit and equally beloved by it, and that we should try to help each other rather than hurt or injure, and that all mediums were good mediums.

Judge Levi Mock, it is expected will be re-elected for the coming year. The universal opinion expressed to me about him is one of great love and respect.

On Sunday, our beloved and respected brother and medium, Mr. Frank T. Ripley, gave many tests, consisting of names, dates and incidents, all of which were recognized and for which he received much applause. Frank T. Ripley has been re-appointed chairman of the meeting for the coming year. He is well liked by all who are here.

I have had the pleasure to meet and renew old acquaintance with Mr. Frank N. Foster, the veteran medium for spirit photography. He did a great deal of picture-taking Sunday after the meeting at the pavilion was over.

Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie's opening address Sunday was sublime, and was in the nature of a plea for the rights of children, she saying that few persons and parents ever considered the real rights of children. Her remarks on this topic brought the tears to the eyes of many of the 1,500 or more who heard her. She also criticised the use of the word "psychic" by some mediums, saying she did not approve of such use, as the word psychic was not synonymous with medium, and that the word medium was not a disgrace for anyone unless the persons who made use of it disgraced it themselves, and that all persons hated worse that which they did the most harm to.

The Rev. B. F. Austin of Rochester, N. Y., followed her with a lecture on "The Bible and Spiritualism," and he is certainly able to handle his subject. He will lecture for the camp throughout the week.

It is with feelings of great pleasure to me to have made the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Hans Throndsen of Louisville, Ky. They are both very good mediums and are well respected by the visitors at the camp. I hope to sit in one of his seances before I leave the camp.

Mr. Chase of Cleveland, O., is here with Mrs. McCoy of the same city; they will hold seances for trumpet and spirit paintings while here.

We expect a great camp this year, and that many of those now in the dark will receive our glorious light before the camp is over, through the instrumentality of our many mediums, and we do not believe that our array of talent can be surpassed by any camp this year.

Mrs. Lydia Jessup, the secretary of the association, is a very genial and pleasant little lady, and the gossip of the camp is that she is to be re-elected to her old place when the election comes off in August. I believe the association cannot do better, since she has both brains and experience, to make her the choice.

The annual election of officers of the Indiana State Association will be held on Saturday, August 5. H. B.

WINFIELD CAMP, KANSAS.

An Account of the Work Going On.

Our camp is progressing finely. Our scientific lectures given by our genial brother, W. J. Erwood, are attracting large and intelligent audiences. So far Mrs. Bryan and your humble servant have not had an opportunity to demonstrate our powers, but we are to materialize to-morrow night and Friday afternoon, and they or we will be full forms and most real in our materializations. We are only waiting our turn on this great and broad platform of the Kansas Association.

Mrs. Laura B. Payne of Texas, gave a very inspiring lecture, and was very generously applauded.

Mrs. Isa Kayner gave the most convincing proof of spirit return.

Max Hoffmann is here and giving verbal tests which are also convincing to the many seekers after truth.

Mrs. Bellman, Mrs. Powers Bethel and other fine and honorable mediums are with us, Mrs. Clara Stewart of Wisconsin, who is being anxiously looked for, has not arrived, but we sincerely hope she will.

Wm. W. Aber is also on the grounds. He gave his first seance last night. All are not permitted to enter his seance. He and his wife are selling seats to the public, by ticket only, which read thusly:

ABER'S TICKETS TO SEANCE.

Wm. W. Aber, Materializing Medium.

Read Carefully.

"The United States Constitution guarantees religious liberty and all citizens "have an inalienable right to worship, "or give utterance to the religious sentiment through any peaceable meeting, "or ceremony they may deem proper. "Though ready at all times to defend "himself, Wm. W. Aber does not court "religious persecution. It is therefore, "hereby understood and agreed between "Wm. W. Aber and the purchaser, holder or user of this ticket, that no guarantee is made as to the character, origin or mode of manifestations of any "phenomena occurring at the seance, "and Wm. W. Aber or the purchaser, "holder or user of this ticket may entertain or advance the spiritual or "other explanation of the phenomena, "and the other party shall in no way be "held responsible for such views or explanation. It is further understood "and agreed that the purchaser, holder "or user of this ticket, is during attendance at seance, simply as spectator, "and is to conduct him or herself in as "quiet and orderly manner as at any "other religious meeting, and to interfere in no way with the seance."

I have been informed by one of the spectators who attended Wm. W. Aber's seance last evening that Wm. McKinley materialized, but as this gentleman informed me of our illustrious president's appearance through Wm. W. Aber's organism, I noted a peculiar twinkle of the eye and a smile underneath his moustache that spoke volumes to Sister Bryan and myself. Would to All Good that rules our universe, that all mediums could see the great injustice done, not only to themselves but to the loved ones whom they are wronging, and see it before it is too late. The spirit world never before was so thoroughly aroused and determined to oust the dishonorable work from our ranks.

Mineral Park Camp-meeting a Success.

I want to write of the glorious times at Mineral Park Spiritualist camp-meeting. The programme so far has been carried out to the letter, which has given to the public a worthy intellectual feast. The attendance has been most encouraging, demonstrating to all the interest along these lines that deal with the real side of life.

Nettie Howell is one of those grand, good, unselfish souls whose heart and wish is to ever keep before the people the great truth that is the heart of all religions, and through experience has this noble sister learned the lesson that Spiritualism is the only ism that opens the door between this expression of life and the beyond. Long may she be given the power to reach the human hearts that are ever searching for light, strength and hope, and through her administration, supported by most competent brothers and sisters, will this camp of 1905 be a grand success.

I do not and could not call this camp-meeting a revival in any respect, but through this spiritual communion we have grown stronger, we have added to the already good through these weeks of intellectual intercourse, we have through comparison learned of a greater power, which through organization can never be limited. Through uniting our forces a mighty power is created anew, and out into this darkened sin-sick world, does this spiritual energy find its way, making possible through organization that which would be impossible if unsupported.

Brother Barrett has touched the soul of his audiences. He has made clear the way that so often is darkened by our unbelief and distrust—he has given to the weak strength, he has given to the strong courage, he has pictured life as it is and what it ought to be. He has lifted us into an altitude that makes us stronger, purer, and more considerate one of another—and let us all who claim to be Spiritualists, ever remember that now is the time to demonstrate our love for our leader and co-worker, Harrison D. Barrett, by supporting and making it possible for him to reach the world's people.

The Truth Seekers are to be congratulated in securing him as their speaker this fall. ADELAIDE K. BROOKS.

Los Angeles, Cal.

MR. JOHN W. RING.

He Sends a Ringing Message to the World.

To the Editor and Readers:—Have you felt a great wave of spiritual uplift-ment? It is most likely from Mineral Park Camp-meeting as it joins forces with the various other Spiritualist Camps which are in session. Surely this one ranks with the very best in every respect, beauty of surrounding, management and talent.

Harrison D. Barrett, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, J. L. Dryden, W. C. Bowman, Maud Lord Drake, Augusta Armstrong and Ada S. Horman with several local speakers, Mrs. C. M. Johnston of San Diego, Mrs. Mary C. Vlasek and others have furnished beautifully uplifting lessons of spiritual truth. The phenomena have been ably presented by John Slater, Mrs. R. Cowell. Mrs. Sudan Green, Mrs. Bryan and several others,—wish I could recall every name, as each is doing his and her work as best he or she knows, and thus the vast multitude is reached and ministered to and, we trust, fed.

Mrs. Nettie Howell, the manager—the soul of the camp—has done a truly wonderful work to so unify the forces as to make the great spiritual treat possible. She is possessed with the faculty of seeing and hearing without being moved, and by the quiet yet determined manner in which she has worked, the public is seeing the better side of Spiritualism and realize that it is a profound philosophy, a demonstrated science and at the same time a Humanitarian religion. The Fay Mills Fellowship and various kindred movements are doing great work, but the clear sighted can plainly see that they are serving Spiritualism in the dishes which they have made—tastes better to some, you know.

"Yours Truly" has worked in his usual earnest manner and seems to have touched some vibrations, among the children especially, of response. From here I go to San Diego for a week; there the society has a temple. Mr. C. A. Buss and Mrs. G. E. L. Smith and other of the workers have been here at camp. Then to Clinton, Iowa, for August 11, 12 and 13, and via Chicago to Lily Dale for August 22, where special arrangements have been made for a Lyceum Day; hope each camp will soon make this provision, and then I hope to make arrangements to remain in New York, Ohio and Indiana until convention time in October. Loving thoughts to one and all; please meet me in thought realm with loving devotion for the cause of education among the little folks especially.

Notes From a Worker in the Field.

We have come to this western city, surrounded by its mountain peaks, and one of the richest copper mining regions in the world, to spend a few weeks in the interest of our beloved religion and philosophy of the soul, in voicing the sentiments of the spirit world to those who are interested in our work. At our meetings yesterday we had very intelligent and appreciative audiences, and the outlook is that the interest in our cause will grow and expand until many more will be brought to see the truth as it is manifested in the teachings of Spiritualism.

We have working with us, and for some weeks before we came, one of the grandest and most convincing physical mediums in the world, Henry B. Allen, who has done more to cause skeptics to see, and start them out in the field of investigation along the lines of psychic research, than any other medium we know of. Among the old veterans in the movement, at this place, one whom everybody respects and loves, and one whose whole life has been devoted to this soul-inspiring work is Mrs. M. E. Logue—"Grandma Logue," as she is familiarly known. She has paved the way for other workers and her house has been always devoted and dedicated to the work of the angel world.

I find The Progressive Thinker a welcome visitor at several places here where we have called, and we hope to extend the interest in this, the richest mining city in the world, that many more waiting souls, already emancipated from both priestly authority and materialistic nihilism, are ready and eagerly looking for the living word of power that shall touch the sympathetic vibratory chord of their being and set them free. A POTENT REMEDY be born, and fewer fiends of licentiousness.

But the economic independence of woman alone will not solve this problem of human depravity. It will do much, but it alone will not eliminate that vilest of all passions in the human breast, which creates such havoc in this world, and which is the PRIME CAUSE of inciting unfleshed demons to their diabolical work of obsession in the other. So long as the present low ideals concerning marriage prevail, so long as men and women regard the marriage tie as a legitimate means of gratifying their animal propensities, so long will children be born with the stamp of the beast upon them. Strange, that an indulgence which is rightly regarded as low, vile and degrading outside of marriage, should become so eminently proper within it! Strange, that a few words said by a priest should have the power to transform purity to impurity, and vice into virtue! It can never be done. And so long as the fires of animalism are kept burning within the "sacred bonds of holy wedlock," so long will men be born with the uncontrollable impulses of the beast in their composition; so long will they go through this world leaving wreck and ruin in their wake, and entering the life beyond, begin there a career of which men little dream.

GO BACK TO FIRST CAUSE.

Would you put an end to the evil obsessing influences which seek to ruin and degrade the weak and unwary? Then go back to first causes. Begin at the beginning. Begin with the child, here in this life. Teach him the truth regarding his own nature. Teach him to subdue the animal propensities which may be in him, to hate those low bestial impulses and cast them out as he would a slimy serpent coiled in his bosom. Give the young people high and pure ideals of marriage, and of the duties and responsibilities of parentage. Teach them that marriage is a spiritual relation, in which the baser nature should have no part; that pure love is of the mind and soul, and seeks not nor desires the gratifications of the beast. When they grow up they will not become the parents of moral perverts, nor perpetuate in their offspring a monstrous abnormal appetite which would put the very brutes to shame.

But, you say, not one parent in forty is qualified to give such instruction. Very true. The place for it is in the public schools. These things should be taught in every grammar grade and high school, in every college, normal school and university. Text books should be prepared, by those qualified to do so, a series for boys and one for girls, which not only give physiological instruction, but what is even more important, moral training, and lofty ideals of wedlock and parentage.

No subject is of more vital importance, yet our young people are taught everything save these which they most imperatively need to know. Where knowledge should prevail, dense ignorance reigns. The young are left to grope their way alone, and to populate the earth with the victims of their blind passion and ignorance.

We boast of our educational institutions, but to the moralist and humanitarian the whole system, from the kindergarten to the university, is woefully deficient and one-sided. Its sole aim is the training of the intellect. The moral character it leaves where it found it—untouched. In this whole great scheme of education, ethics has no part. Some day we will see our mistake. We will learn that a knowledge of language, history, mathematics and physical science alone will never regenerate the race. These have their place, but "The proper study of mankind is man." And in the future, when we have grown wiser and more far-seeing, the study of man, socially, morally and spiritually, will occupy a far larger space in our school curriculum, than does any so-called branch of education at the present time.

During all the centuries agone, man's thought has been directed to the material universe, to the investigation of its wonders, the penetration of its mysteries, the study of its laws. Himself, the crown and glory of the whole creation, he has almost entirely overlooked. But the day of awakening is at hand. The mental power gained in the pursuit of physical truth is already being turned toward the moral and spiritual planes, with the realization that here are vast new fields to conquer, that in humanity are wonders and mysteries and possibilities far transcending anything in the material universe.

GREAT WORK FOR SPIRITUALISTS.

There is a great work for the Spiritualist along these new lines of thought. He alone understands the tremendous importance of well-endowed and fully developed moral character, and the far-reaching results which flow from a lack of these. He alone knows that the accident of death does not change the moral nature, that there is no such thing as "vicarious atonement," that "salvation from sin" is impossible, that the wrong-doer goes on into the future life with all his evil traits and tendencies, his sensual appetites and passions still upon him, there to continue his mischievous work and pernicious influence for no one knows what length of time.

Death is not the end. If the evil tendencies of men went down into the grave to rise no more, we might perhaps view them less seriously. But when we realize that, when once initiated, they go on and on into eternity, the problem of prevention becomes one which it behooves us to try to solve.

The spirit world has enough to do in the handling of the moral monstrosities which we have already sent to that shore. Probably all of its forces and a few thousand years of time will be required to redeem those who are already sunk in the depths of ignorance and depravity. Our work is here on the moral side. Our duty it is to dry up the sources of that great gulf stream of human depravity which is setting daily toward the shores of immortality. If this is not the work of Spiritualism in this world, then I do not know for what purpose Spiritualism is here. If it is not here to do away with ignorance, vice and crime, to educate, uplift and spiritualize humanity, then it is here to no purpose.

It is not enough to demonstrate the fact of life beyond death. It is not enough to dry the tears and comfort the bereaved heart of the mourner. It is not enough to point to the shining heights occupied by angel bands in the land supernal. These things are well, but they fall far short of the mission of Spiritualism. Spiritualism is not a religion of selfishness. It teaches the brotherhood of man. If it teaches anything, it teaches that men are bound together by ties that neither death nor aught else can sever; that humanity is a unit, a whole, a great living, breathing, sensitive organism, the well-being of which depends upon the well-being of every component atom. It teaches that there is, and there should be, no true and perfect happiness, no lasting peace for the few so long as there is pain and suffering for the many; that the ignorance and consequent suffering of the low and depraved must ever be a source of sorrow to the more highly unfolded spirit, prompting to continuous effort in the work of redemption.

And this is as it should be. We want no selfish spirit world, whose throngs of ecstatic beings roam forever the Elysian fields, wrapt in their own joy, and deaf to the cries of suffering and distress. Such a world would be no better than the orthodox heaven, with its stony-hearted angels singing hallelujahs to the Lamb, while their brethren are writhing in torment just over the wall.

We cannot escape from our relations one to another. The pain of one is the pain of all. Then up, and at work! Wipe out the causes which produce wickedness. Give the human soul a chance. Start it right, then surround it with the environment which will develop all that is highest and best in its nature, that it may not become a source of pain and sorrow to others, but may add through intelligent effort to its own happiness, and to that of the whole human family, in this and all future worlds.

WANTED—100 SHAREHOLDERS

At $5 Per Share In a Syndicate for Publishing a New Book, by the Author of "A Wanderer in Spirit Lands."

The cost of publishing a first edition of 1,000 copies of this new book is estimated at $500, and it is proposed that a syndicate of 100 members should be formed, each member to pay $5 per share and to receive in return a share in the profits from the sales of the book should it prove a success and the public demand for the book call for further editions. It is proposed that one-half of the profits from the sale of the book (after the expenses for publishing and circulating the book have been paid) should be set aside for the members of the syndicate and the other half of the profits reserved for the author's remuneration.

All persons who join the syndicate and pay $5 for a share can get that money back and practically receive the share for nothing if they will find eight subscribers at 75 cents each to purchase the book. All subscriptions collected will be credited to the person who obtains them and a full share or half share in the syndicate will be awarded to those who have obtained from four to eight subscriptions from purchasers of the book.

It is calculated that if the book is at all successful a much larger edition than 1,000 would be sold and as after the first expense of setting up of the type, etc., for the publication of the first 1,000 copies, the cost of producing the books will be considerably less, so that a fair profit on the sales after the first 1,000 may reasonably be expected.

Other books by this author have had a circulation of from 2,000 to 10,000 copies, and it is hoped the new book if it becomes widely read will reach as large if not a larger circulation.

Further information can be obtained from Rev. Nellie K. Baker, Portage, Wis., who is organizing the syndicate.

PRICE 75 CENTS PER COPY.

Wanted Subscribers for a New Book by the Author of "A Wanderer in Spirit Lands."

All who have read "A Wanderer" will read this new book, "The Story of the Guide Ahrinziman," with increased interest, as it enters much further into explanations and teachings concerning the subtle forces at work on the spirit side of life, and throws a new light upon many causes of the obsessions and other evils which are troubling the spiritual cause at the present time, while the story itself is of absorbing interest as the dramatically told life of a remarkable man whose history has been verified. The MSS. has been submitted to the criticism of leading literary men and to Orientalists of position as well as to advanced students of Eastern occultism and pronounced by them to be of great value and a remarkable and deply interesting story which all who read will enjoy to the last page.

It is proposed to publish the book at 75 cents per copy to all who subscribe now, and the secretary of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association has kindly consented to receive subscriptions. Should an insufficient number of subscriptions be received to warrant the publication of the book the money will in all cases be returned to the subscribers.

It is hoped that all interested in spreading spiritual knowledge will mention this book to their friends, as it is calculated to interest those who like a powerfully told story, as well as all who desire further knowledge from the spirit side of life.

The title of the book is "The Story of Ahrinziman."

Subscriptions to be sent to Rev. Nellie K. Baker, Portage, Wis., Secretary of Wisconsin State Association.

MAN AND HIS BODIES

As Viewed From a Theosophical Standpoint.

The majority of people are so absorbed in obtaining the wherewithal to clothe and feed their bodies that if they ever gave the matter a thought they congratulated themselves that they had only one body. Theosophy teaches, however, that man has several bodies, and that each one requires care and attention. And this statement, if taken seriously, has a tendency to make life a much more complicated affair than otherwise. For, just as a man may have a dress suit, a business suit, and a hunting suit, and never make the mistake of wearing the wrong suit on any occasion, so it is that he has different bodies, and that each is to be used for a special purpose, and for that alone.

There are three planes of nature on which man is at present evolving; they are the physical, astral and mental planes. Although advancement is necessary in order to learn to function consciously on the astral plane first, and later on the mental plane, it would be misleading to suppose that there is really any up or down about the matter. All three planes are interpenetrating, and the planes we do not ordinarily know anything about are a portion of the "unseen worlds" mentioned in the definition of theosophy.

It is not necessary to speak particularly concerning the physical body or the physical plane, because all are familiar with them.

The astral body of man—or body of desires and emotions—looks precisely like the physical body, but it is made of matter too fine to be seen by ordinary physical sight. Many ghost stories have as a basis for their origin the fact that some dead person appeared some place in his astral body, and was seen by some one who told of the occurrence.

In sleep the consciousness functions in the astral body, although until one learns to function consciously on the astral plane, the ordinary chaotic dreams we have give us no idea whatever of that world.

Each plane is divided into seven subplanes. The lowest subplanes of the astral plane are very unpleasant; sometimes the drunkard by his excesses develops astral vision on these subplanes, and the result is that he sees snakes. The highest subplanes are fair and beautiful, and we get more or less distorted descriptions of them from the accounts of mediums in spiritualistic seances, who tell us of that "happy summer land." The middle divisions of the astral plane have for their background the world as it looks to our physical eyes.

Aside from the human inhabitants of the astral plane, alive and dead, there are many other things pursuing a different line of evolution from ours. There are the nature spirits of all kinds for instance, which have been called in folk lore, fairies, elves, undines, and the like.

But what is of far more importance to man is the fact that on the astral plane are certain semi-intelligent entities called elementals, whose power of action is limited to the expression of certain kinds of emotions, as, for instance, one might belong to the anger type, and another to the devotional type.

Next in the order of evolution comes the mental plane. This is also called the heaven world, as it is the place in which all lofty and noble aspirations are realized after death. Glimpses of heaven experiences are sometimes gained in life by constant devotion to one's best ideals, by unceasing efforts at self-improvement, or attempts to aid in the bringing of happier conditions to others. All that is beautiful and true in music, art and science, or literature has been gathered on the mental plane and then brought back through the physical brain to the physical world.

On this plane one is much less liable to illusion than on the astral plane, and man functions on its lower subplanes in what is known as the mental body. It is possible by those who are sufficiently advanced spiritually to meet and converse with one another in their mental bodies, giving and obtaining information, while their physical bodies are thousands of miles apart. Telepathy gives us some idea of this possibility.

On the highest planes of the heaven world man functions in the causal body, or body of causes. And it is this body that belongs to him through all his incarnations. In the heaven world after death he builds into it the faculties which he has gained during the experiences of his earth life, and thus the evolving soul brings to each new birth a little more wisdom and knowledge.

A FADELESS FLOWER.

I wonder why I think of thee
At morning, noon and night;
I wonder why thy face so dear
Ne'er passes from my sight;
I wonder why I hear thy voice
In every whispering leaf;
To think of thee, to see thy face,
Can only bring me grief.

I wonder why my heart goes out
To thee as days of old;
I wonder why I mourn and cry
With sorrow yet untold;
I wonder why I call thy name
And pray for thee at night;
To call to thee, to weep and sigh,
Can give me no delight.

Ah! in the garden of my heart,
Hidden out of sight,
You dropped a seed one year ago
On a starry wintry night,
And bade me ever keep it there
To help it thrive and grow,
And though it's watered by my tears
Still I must love you so.

For since its roots are buried deep
Where none can know or see,
Its tendrils twine about thy heart
And bind me close to thee.
Never will it fade or die,
But always strong with love,
'Till transplanted to the higher life
To bloom for thee above.

Mineral Park Camp, California.

This is the third week of the most successful Spiritualist camp ever held on this coast. The talent has been first class and the attendance good. Sundays the grounds have been crowded. Harrison D. Barrett said he never attended a better camp. Everything was harmonious, and each and every one willing to do their best for the complete success of the camp. The weather has been all we could ask, regular California sunshine, tempered by the ocean breezes.

The management of this camp is in the hands of Mrs. Nettie Howell, and she is entitled to a great deal of credit, as she is assuming the financial responsibility, and bids fair to be more than successful.

Among the lecturers and speakers with us are Harrison D. Barrett, Hon. John L. Dryden, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. Ada S. Horman and John W. Ring, who has achieved such marked success in the children's lyceum work in Galveston, Texas. By the way, Brother Ring should be in the field all the time. He is an able, fluent speaker and truly has a message for all who are fortunate in hearing him. The musical program at every meeting has been first-class, and those taking part have received many appreciative compliments. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan, Adelaide K. Brooks and the Ammonn Quartette have in their own inspirational way taken us into that musical vibration which is so necessary in order to keep us in the line of harmony.

Mrs. R. Cowell, of Oakland, Cal., and John Slater of San Francisco, are prominent among our message-bearers. They are both convincing the skeptics and giving to those who know the truth many consoling messages.

The Progressive Thinker is in evidence and has a host of friends on the coast. Every one should take The Progressive Thinker.

May the assured success of this camp be an incentive to have another next season. The writer cannot close without a word of commendation for Mr. John Lillie as chairman for the first ten days, and Mrs. Augusta Armstrong, his successor; they are both stars in their line of work, and succeeded in keeping the large audiences good natured.

Spiritualism is getting hold of the people helping them to solve life's problem, and it takes camp life to bring them together to a broader and better understanding and a greater tolerance and sympathy for humanity.

Lake Brady Camp.

July 16 was a perfect summer's day, bright and balmy. A fair audience gathered to listen to Mrs. Cora Morrill of Grand Rapids, Mich. The morning session was opened by Mr. Hunger, the president, as chairman. After the opening song by the audience, led by Mrs. Flora Russell, "Sweet Falls the Spirit Message," Mrs. Russell rendered a solo, "I Dreamed a Dream."

Mr. Hunger then introduced the speaker. Her guides took for their subject, "Meditation, or True and Natural Prayer," illustrating the necessity of looking within and unfolding the soul gifts we possess, asking for aid from the great oversoul which is the only source of true help and true knowledge. The discourse was full of food for thought, and one could not listen without awakening a desire for more of the good, the pure and the true.

The afternoon lecture was preceded by the song, "The Home of the Soul." Mrs. Morrill began by quoting

"All are parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is, and God the soul."

Throughout the lecture the main idea was to impress the necessity of cultivating the spiritual side of our natures under the banner of Truth and Freedom. As a message bearer, Mrs. Morrill gives entire satisfaction, full names and accurates descriptions, which leave no doubt in the mind of the recipients that their loved ones are with them.

At 4 o'clock Dell Herrick gave a trumpet seance at D. R. Brown's, which was well attended, also one at his own cottage in the evening, the last at Brady for this season.

SEEING THE LIGHT

Rev. Dr. S. H. Libby Has Caught On.

Ever since the undersigned became satisfied of the truth of Spiritualism, he was at a loss to explain the attitude of the churches toward the subject. Of course, this attitude is based upon the presumption that Spiritualism is not true, but it was a presumption merely, unfounded upon any fair, continued, unprejudiced, scientific investigation of Spiritualism.

For some years past the orthodox churches have been aware that they were gradually losing their hold on the masses, and were unable to assign a reason for it. In my feeble way I have been trying all this time to assure them that the cause of it may be found in the fact that they have no present evidence of a future life; the pulpit and pew are skeptical on the subject of a future existence, and give up the question of immortality as one incapable of proof. The masses argue that if preachers and parishioners are not sure of life beyond death, there is no reason why they should give the subject much concern; that they can exercise their blind faith and hope as well outside the church as in it and at much less expense. "Let us eat, drink and be merry, for to-morrow we die" and will be a long time dead, is their argument, and as long as the church cannot successfully refute it, so long will the general interest in it decline.

But the church is beginning to get its eyes open to the light reflected by Spiritualism, as may be observed by a sermon preached in the North Congregational Church, Chicago, Sunday, July 16, as reported by the Tribune. The speaker, the Rev. S. H. Libby, spoke as follows:

"One reason why so many men are going past the churches to-day is that to many men has come a disbelief in a future life. Too many men are saying to themselves, either carelessly or sadly, that this life is about all they are going to get."

Yes, you are right, Dr. Libby, and the sooner your church with all other churches joins in the investigations (and when I say investigation I mean investigation) of the evidence, the Spiritualistic evidence of a future life which is now satisfying the greatest scientific minds of the age, the sooner your church with all other churches will fill your pews and keep them full of most interested and enthusiastic parishioners.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32 CHICAGO, ILL., AUGUST 5, 1905. NO. 819

MATERIALIZATION.

An Old Farmer Relates His Experience.

In reading over The Progressive Thinker I find a great deal on the subject of materialization.

Some think that there is no such thing as a materialized spirit. Only a short time ago I was at a religious meeting that was addressed by a celebrated D. D., and among other things, in speaking on the subject of spirit return he said that he would not believe that there was such a thing as a materialized spirit even if he should see one.

Now there are many persons living to-day who would be perfectly willing to come forward in any court of justice and testify that they have seen many such forms, and I am one of those persons. As I do not wish to make this letter very long, I will only speak of one of my personal experiences touching this all-important subject.

The seance was held at the house of G. B. Wallace, in the city of San Bernardino, Cal., Dec. 28, 1892. The circle was made up of just 16 persons. In this letter I will pass all preliminaries, and speak directly of the materializing part of the seance.

When they were ready to commence the materialization part of the seance Mrs. Miller, the medium, of Los Angeles, stepped into the cabinet and sat down in a small low rocking chair, and Dr. Wilcox, her manager, tied her hands very firmly together with a very strong ribbon, then she leaned back and went into the trance. They dropped the curtain and commenced singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Before they had got through the first verse a beautifully dressed lady opened the curtain and stood right in front of the cabinet. She appeared to be dressed in the most beautiful white silk. She stood there for perhaps thirty seconds, then the curtain dropped and she was out of sight. They kept right on singing, but before they had got through with the second verse a beautifully dressed lady opened the curtain and walked straight across the room to the third lady on my right. She appeared to cross that room with just as much ease as she could have done if she had been there in flesh and blood. When there she held out her hands to the young lady, and she took them; then she backed right up to the cabinet door and walked back and forth in front of the door, then went in the cabinet and the young lady went back to her seat and wept during most of the evening.

Now is it probable that she would have thus wept if she had not known who it was that took hold of her hands?

Well, every one can be his own judge so far as that is concerned, but the fact in the case was, it was her own mother, who had been on the other side only a short time.

After this the young lady's voice was beautifully charming. How she could sing so beautifully under the circumstances was a mystery to me, but she did, and that is all I know about it.

After this, several forms came out to different ones in the room, every one of whom could be seen by each person in the room equally well.

Finally one came to me and held out her hands, and I reached out and took them, and she pulled me along across the floor with as much strength as she could if she had been in flesh and blood. She walked across in front of the cabinet a time or two, then dropped my hand and went in, and I went back to my seat.

Now, I recognized this person as my wife, before she got within ten feet of me.

After this, several other forms came out to different persons in the room, all of whom were recognized instantly. Finally she came again, and when we got up near the cabinet she dropped a kiss on the back of my left hand. Then as before she went into the cabinet.

Again several others came out as before, then she came and when we got near the cabinet she dropped a kiss on my lips. My wife and I lived together about thirty-five years, and I think I know her kiss, but if others think not, all they have to do is to stand by their opinion and I will stand by the facts in the case, as I am a matter-of-fact man, and will settle down on nothing short of the facts in any case.

In a short time she came out the fourth time and when we got near the cabinet the curtains opened and she pulled me right in after her, and then she spoke. She said, "cross your arms." I did so, then two hands commenced platting down my hair, and several others commenced patting me on the arms and shoulders, while at the same time some one was ringing the bell down on the floor, while others were playing on the tambourine, so there could not have been less than five materialized forms in that cabinet at the same time. After they had done this for a short time, my wife said, "Put your hand down and feel the hand of the medium." I did so and found Mrs. Miller's hands tied as I had seen them a couple of hours before.

After this they kept on singing and in a few minutes a form came out of the cabinet with a common accordion in her hands, playing the most beautiful music. She passed right around over the circle and kept time to her music by touching the heads of the sitters.

When she got around, she went down into the cabinet and the seance closed.

When this last lady was going around over the circle Mr Wallace asked Dr. Wilcox (the manager) if he know who this last lady was. He said, "I do not, but she comes to us in this way very often, and I think it is a French spirit."

This last lady was not within six feet of the floor at any time while she was out of the cabinet, so the chance for hocus-pocus in her case was not very brilliant.

The one thing that interested me most in this spirit's case was the peculiar tinting of her dress. The material of which it was made appeared to be the finest silk, but the finest flower that ever grew never had more beautiful tints. All the rest of the women appeared to be dressed in the most beautiful white silk, but this French lady's case was an exception as stated.

Now what sort of nonsense would there be in a person's coming and telling me that there was no such thing as materialized spirits?

I am perfectly well aware that there are many frauds connected with the department of materialization, but Mrs. Miller was not one of them at the time of which I am speaking, if she ever was. I have been in many materializing seances, but have spoken of only one here. I might speak of others if occasion called for such action on my part.

MY VIEWS.

The Bible is largely a book of symbols. While I do not believe in all the miracles therein related, I believe in their symbolic representations. As every fable that has come down to us through the ages is based upon some fact, so every miracle teaches some vital truth in nature or life. While for me there is no food for the soul in the forms and rites of religion, I still have a more abiding and resting faith, than many of those who profess to believe in all the dogmas and creeds of the church. I look within and near and not to something without and far away for guidance. Intuition is my divine instructor, mediator and deliverer. It is in this way that God speaks to my mind.

I have learned that the fiery furnace will not burn me, nor the den of lions harm me, and that the same power that protected Daniel and the three worthies, is still extant. I have learned to follow the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night. I have witnessed the dividing of the waters and been allowed to pass through seas of sorrow, difficulties and disappointments, unharmed.

If we could read the signs of the times, fall in with the trend of the universal mind, how much easier life would be. Health is constantly striving to overcome disease, truth is ever battling with error.

I do not believe in any God with human attributes, nor in any mechanical theory of the creation of the universe, nor in any printed scheme of "the plan of salvation." The heart, and not the mouth, is the organ of worship. "God requires no external adoration from my soul." You cannot forestall fate, cheat destiny, or change the foreordained forces in the moral or physical world.

In the fight that mankind has made for liberty of thought, thousands have been tortured, beheaded and burned at the stake, and untold numbers imprisoned and banished. The finest literature ever produced has been written in exile, in prison, in degradation and suffering. But you cannot fetter thought, imprison an idea or banish truth. Seed that has lain dormant for centuries under proper conditions springs forth into life.

Error can be hemmed in, circumscribed but not obliterated. Even now there is darkness enough in the earth to put out the light; ignorance enough in India, China, and other parts of Asia, to blot out intelligence. There is cold enough stored in glacier and poles to freeze the life out of the animal and vegetable kingdoms.

There is the sunset of nations and of civilization as well as the sunrise. There is the dawn of the morning and the twilight of the evening. Nature in all of her courses moves in grand mysterious cycles. History is constantly repeating itself. Principles that are primal and fundamental never die.

Human nature must always, under similar circumstances manifest itself the same. "Nature always keeps her equipoise." The centrifugal and the centripetal forces are constant in their operations. Along with the progressive principle moves a certain sure reactionary spirit which sooner or later brings the world back to the place of starting.

Life and death, darkness and night, good and evil, balance each other. Because a man says that this civilization shall pass away the same as all prior civilizations have passed,—it is no sign that he is a pessimist,—on the contrary he is a progressionist. Has not each civilization, the same as each system of religion, been in advance of the one that preceded it?

"The world is growing better, not regularly and at measured pace, but by sudden movements, by great revolutions, terrible struggles, contests in which civilizations flitter and go out like bubbles on the water, and new nations and higher civilizations arise, take their place, in turn growing strong and then beautiful, then corrupt and weak, and then going the way of oblivion."

The same forces that built up the patriarchal family, the feudal system, kingdoms, empires and republics, are still at work today. No new powers have been added to the universe. Everything is old; only the combinations and discoveries are new.

There is a tendency for all forms of life, thought, actions, customs, institutions and civilizations to repeat themselves. Who has not noticed the continual rotation of fashions, art, decorations, styles of dress and living, and even the trend of thought. Today there is a tremendous backward step towards the teachings of Plato, Aristotle, and the philosophies of the ancient stories and mysteries. Churches are moving towards liturgy; Republics are gradually dropping democratic simplicity and assuming more and more the pageantry of royalty.

There is a vast difference between the unostentatious manner in which Jefferson was inaugurated president of the United States and the spectacular display attending the last inauguration of President McKinley, and the inauguration of President Roosevelt. Whatever is addressed to the senses moves the people more than that which is addressed to the judgment and understanding. Few ever stop to reason from cause to effect; if they did many an altar would be torn down, many a hero would be burned in effigy.

All true prophets have been unpopular in their day and generation. Every reform was once in the minority. Every principle of liberty, of religion, of freedom, and of morals, was once in the minority. But has not the verdict of the world, in all ages, finally put the seal of truth on the judgment of the minority? It is not political or religious principles that control the great masses of men, but political and religious prejudice.

People are all the while clinging to the non-essentials, in politics, in religion, and in all the matters that affect their personal and public interest. They believe that some political party is going to redeem the country. They believe that some church or creed or manner of worship is going to save their souls. They lay great stress on fast days, on some sacrament, on some ordinance appointed by man and not by God.

We are all hero worshipers. Shadows become substance. Gigantic systems of religion are built up and rest upon myth and fable. Some things can be reasoned out, some can only be felt by the heart and known by the intuitions. You cannot define God in words, you cannot picture Him in thoughts and in the imagination for He assumes no form. Nothing can be defined. Words are arbitrary. What is poetry? What is genius? What is sanity or insanity?

As one mystery clears up another deepens. We can only approximate at the truth. It is claimed that no mathematician can make a perfect angle. Every position taken by science is liable to correction. The line between the animal and the vegetable kingdoms cannot be drawn; even the mineral world appears to be no longer dead, inert matter, but living, moving substance. Every animal, tree and living thing follows its own individuality. Each successive generation and kind adheres well to the type. By what power? None can answer.

The longer we live the deeper our study, the more we doubt and the less we believe. The present is as little understood as the future; time is as mysterious to us as eternity. Civilization is the mother of all kinds of vice, pauperism and crime. She warms and nourishes within her bosom the very vipers that destroy her life. But it would seem that every animal that ever lived, every institution that ever existed, and every virtue that was ever exercised, was necessary in the great plan of the universe; and that every vice that has ever been tolerated was the natural outcome of life and the world in which we live.

Religious dogmas, political creeds, constitutions and revolutions, are born, not written or put up to order according to some preconceived pattern or model;—the seed that produced them had to be a long time sown, before the fruitage appeared. Not a word was ever used or a principle promulgated until there was a necessity for such word or principle. Crimes are defined, penalties imposed to restrain and punish the vicious;—if there had been no such classes, there never would have been a criminal code enacted or a jail or a gibbet.

Laws are the mirrors which reflect the general sentiment of the people. They form a correct likeness of the moral, religious, and intellectual state of the public mind. Religion, speech, morals, are all largely a question of geography and the age in which a man lives. Public opinion is greater than law, stronger than statutes and more binding than treaties. You cannot legislate what people shall eat, drink or wear. You cannot say what day they shall keep holy, or what kind of a doctor they shall employ or system of healing they shall adopt. People will have allopathy, homeopathy, hydropathy, Christian Science or mental science, and no law interfering with the choice of the individual will ever be successful.

Laws accumulate, creeds multiply, new parties, new sects continually arise, but the world is no nearer a general consensus of opinion than it was a thousand years ago.

A CHAPTER ON DREAMS.

An Explanation of Their Nature and Causes.

Dreams are, as a rule, involuntary impressions, or rather impressions uncontrolled by will of the sleeper.

All dreams have their causes, as experience and experiments have proven; and by taking note of dreams immediately upon awakening, we can, in a majority of cases, trace the cause.

Somnambulism and talking in our sleep were repeated occurrences with myself and brother when we were boys. I would be the best talker, in some unintelligible foreign lingo always, while my brother stalked out of bed in his sleep. Once we went with our father on one summer night to drive a small herd of cattle about ten miles into the city. My brother was eight and I was two years younger. About midday on our return home we encountered a shady nook and lay down to sleep for an hour, as we had had no sleep the previous night. Upon our wakening my brother had gone. We inquired about him of a passing stage driver who informed us that he was two miles on his way home, and in his stocking feet, and carried a large bundle. My father sent a passing man on horseback after him to bring him back. He returned, boy like, crying. He had taken our coats and shoes and a lot of goods we had brought from the city, but had forgotten his own shoes. He said that he went to sleep with anxious thoughts about getting home.

Experience has shown that what cranial organs are pressed or rested upon, are most easily brought into action during dreams. If one rests upon his back the weight of the head will depress the animal and social organs, while resting on the side, the organs of sublimity and hope are brought into action, and color the dreams.

Dreams originate, as a rule, from known experiences of late occurrences and of late forcible thoughts of the dreamer. They are then colored and shaped according to the organs pressed.

Experience has proven to all dreamers that they may wake, remember some of their dreams, but if they turn and thereby remove the pressure from the certain organs whereupon the dreamer rested, the dreams, if they do continue, take a far different form.

Whenever the head rests low, and the face is bent downward, the dreams will cause fear, and depressed feelings will appear; just like the pessimist, with bowed head, expects and fears the worst to happen.

Disturbances in the vicinity of the sleeper will also mingle with his dreams, and color them to a great extent. The moral man may experience vicious dreams, and the wicked one bending in prayers, which in most cases come from the pressure on certain organs.

Then again upon awakening, or in a semi-sleep, the sleeper's thoughts and will may shape the termination of his dreams. Our memories are treacherous with regard to dreams, they can seldom be fully remembered a few minutes after their occurrence. During sickness, when a man is more sensitive than at any other time (except the minute he enters into sleep), dreaded forebodings will appear in his dreams on account of his negative condition and prior dejected thoughts while awake.

Another phase of dreams may be traced to guardian spirits upon the plastic brain of the sleeper, or it may be impressions from absent friends or enemies telepathically conveyed. But in many cases, where the last above named cause is claimed, the dreams come from a still more subtle force, nemely, that "coming events cast their shadows or brightness before them," and, as the spirits read coming events through these sublimated elements, the sleeper may do the same if his organs are so attuned, which has been known from the time of Joel to the present day. If the sleeper is punctured with a sharp instrument or the sting of a poisonous animal, this also may color his dreams. Waking dreams are colored by thoughts and will of the dreamer, and elevating poesy and prose has been written under these conditions. An overloaded head or stomach intensifies dreams.

The law that pressure on a certain organ brings such organ into action, is acknowledged even in a waking state. An Emerson, Spencer, and many others of the great thinkers, in their sittings for photos press the organ of ideality with the forefinger, and when asked concerning such an attitude they could not tell why. They may claim that the organs of ideality, firmness and self-esteem draw the head towards those certain centres, as it naturally does, but nature seems to draw it towards rest or pressure.

In common parlance, man says that certain organs rule. This is incorrect. They are all physical organs, and simply matter, while the indwelling energy or power rules through the organs of the body as best they may. To illustrate: A procession passes by our dwelling; some panes of glass may be more clear than others, and we can have a far better view through the clearer ones than through the dull ones; and thus the indwelling energy or soul acts through our physical organs, while pressure stimulates in our waking hours and in our sleep.

As general thought waves are ever in motion, dreams at times are colored by them. The scientific or inventive dreamer acquires his knowledge by being happily so constituted that such thought waves are caught up and utilized by him. Such a person is in modern parlance termed a crank, and undoubtedly so designated on account of so many of such inventive dreamers not grasping the whole; or, at other times, the thought so conveyed is beyond his capacity of understanding; hence the failure where only part of such scientific thoughts are grasped, as of a single color being left out of the chromoscope.

THE IMMORTAL BARD.

Shakespeare When on Earth Was In Direct Communication With Advanced Spirits—So Says Louis James, the Renowned Actor, In the Dramatic News.

I have just arrived from Long Branch, and my purpose in coming to the city is to attend a book sale where I hope to secure some rare volumes which I mean to add to my library. Reading and the contemplation of Nature are now my principal enjoyments, although when I meet an old friend I can shake his hand with as keen a delight as ever. Do I still retain my love for Shakespeare? Indeed I do; but I do not care to give it too free an utterance for fear of being dubbed a pedant. I have played in all of his plays that hold the stage, and I am not without hope of meeting him when I shake off this muddy vesture of decay and rise to those heights of supernal life where all true poets and artists dwell.

Do I believe that such a glorious fate is in store for me. What a question. Does not everything point to the continuity of life? Physical science demonstrates that there is nothing lost, then why should the spiritual essence that molds, controls and animates matter be destroyed, when the baser part of us survives in some form? Having acquired a conscious individuality there is no power in the universe that can deprive me of it. It were the wildest madness to imagine that God created us only for the earth, and as a thinker I frequently conjecture what now may be the musings and aspirations of the poet-actor in his more exalted and sublimer state of being.

Since when did I become inoculated with this belief? I have always thought on these lines, but it is not often that I give expression to what I think. I do not wear my heart upon my sleeve for daws to peck at, nor do I think every man I meet is capable of understanding such a subject. No close student of Shakspeare can question the truth of the soul's immortality, and there is no doubt in my mind, but that during his residence on this earth he was in direct communication with those advanced spirits who have penetrated the arcana of existence, and who shaped his thoughts into those glorious forms that will forever bewitch and charm humanity by their beauty. Strong, healthy and happy as I am, I look forward to the change called death with unalloyed pleasure.

"Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither;
Ripeness is all."

What I have said may be too abstruse and mystic for publication; but those initiated in the occult will understand me, and for those who will not or cannot understand I am not concerned. The genius of the true actor is not dissimilar to that of the poet. He hears and sees with the ears and eyes of the soul, and very often when I sit on the veranda of my cottage at Long Branch, gazing on the sea when night has unloosed her hair and the stars shine shyly as they feast upon her sumptuous beauty, I hear and see things that warrant me in saying that the invisible world is peopled, and that we have only to open the doors of our souls to enjoy the companionship of the angels. Mors Janua vitae—Death is the gate of life eternal.

WILLIAM OXLEY.

An Appreciative Memorial Tribute by a Friend.

Th contemplation of the life and actions of a good man and the study of the various phases of his character are a never-failing source of profit and pleasure during the years he is with us in the flesh; and though a regard for his feelings may restrain the expression of one's appreciation, surely when he has departed from this field of strife one may be permitted to give vent to one's pent-up thoughts by dwelling for a short time on the excellences that have given so much delight and afforded so much exemplary instruction.

For the past eight years it has been my privilege to be so closely associated with Mr. William Oxley as to have every opportunity of becoming personally and intimately acquainted with all sides of his character—ar experience so valuable that I reckon it the greatest treasure of my life's history, and I deem it an honor to be permitted to pen a small tribute of reverence to him by delineating, however imperfectly, those qualities of heart and mind that commanded the admiration and affection of his fellows. His was truly an eventful life. Full of trials, difficulties, disappointments and bitterness such as fall to the lot of few. They were met with undaunted courage, borne with heroic fortitude, and conquered by patient perseverence, untiring energy and unwearying love. His brave heart encountered obstacles but overcome them, turned reverses into victories, carried him through the black shadows that lay in his path to the brightness of victorious day. To know him was to love him; to be loved by him was to possess a jewel of priceless worth.

In all his business dealings he was known for his untarnished honor, his spotless integrity, his perfect justice. His employes valued him as a master who not only dealt fairly with them but took an active interest in their personal welfare and exhibited an open-handed generosity in times of stress and trouble that proved him to be their friend.

Those who "sat at his feet" marked the breadth and activity of his mind which never paused in its search after Truth, refusing to be bound and fettered by the shibboleths of religion or the prejudices of the pseudo-scientific, welcoming every ray of light wherever found, treasuring every gem of knowledge wherever discovered. Verily, a "Master in Israel" he modestly claimed to be only a student—a student of life and its manifestations. Herein he never slackened; his penetrating glance perceived "Books in the running brooks, sermons in stones and good in everything;" his heart as constantly uplifted in loving adoration to the One Life that manifests itself in all, by all and through all.

His person is removed from us, but his work remains, his influence endures, the memory of him is sweet, and we glory and take comfort in the sure conviction that his transition is to a state of greater perfection, wider liberty, increased power, enhanced joy and a glory that shall never fade but shall endure through all eternity.

STRIKING DREAMS.

The Lessons of Sixty-five Years of Life.

To the Editor:—In reading your three volumes of "The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," I am more and more enlightened upon spiritual topics.

I am grateful to the unseen forces, for the privilege of studying the doctrines and sentiments of such intelligent mystic authors.

The subject is one that should interest all persons who believe in spirit life, and the spiritual world.

May the good angels surround you, and all of those spiritual writers of said books, with peace, happiness and prosperity in your earthly careers.

And may angel bands escort each one of the authors, through the valley and shadow of death to the celestial spheres, is the prayer of the writer.

All for the good you may do in spreading the light and the truth of spiritual knowledge.

As I am now in my declining years, I reflect much upon the experience I have had in raising a family of children, and of the great responsibility therein.

I have had dreams and visions through all the past years, that seemed to guide my life. Before I was ten years old, I had an important dream, that made a deep impression upon my mind, so much so, that I related it to my parents, and ever kept it in view. I thought in the dream, that myself and many companions left our homes, and soon arrived in a country of romantic scenery, containing hills, valleys, mountains, rivers and beautiful landscapes, covered with flowers and green verdure. But, with all such beauty around us, the land was covered with snakes, and it was so dangerous at times, that we crawled upon our hands and knees.

I was awakened by the dream, and thought it over, but went to sleep again, and dreamt the same experience over.

After Fort Sumpter was fired upon, I enlisted in the Union army, and followed Old Glory for more than four years, and the country and dangers I saw in my dream were ever before me, while in the Southland.

When our army was at Tullahoma, Tennessee, Rosecrans gave me a commission to go back with others to Ohio on recruiting service, but not long after that, I re-enlisted and went over that country again in a more extensive degree.

The double dream indicated to me, that I was to pass through that dangerous and beautiful land twice. I had other dreams, while quite young of seeing large crowds of men together, and frame stands for public speaking, and I would be walking in the midst of them.

All along life's eventful journey, manifestations through dreams have been made clear to me afterwards. It is a wonderful event, to have sixty-five or more years of life on this mundane sphere! In that many years, we meet multitudes of human beings, and form a short acquaintance with many individuals, but they are soon gone from our view, and they are lost from our memories. Memory's storehouse has been filled to overflowing, and in the great future, it may all come back to our senses, and we can exclaim, glad memory, or sad memory of life's reminiscences.

Many souls that we have known were so kind and social in their natures, that it was pleasant to enjoy their friendship and society.

On the other hand, men and women we have met, appeared to be selfish, narrow-minded and cruel in their demeanor and actions.

But hope, friends, love and friendship, with those with whom we have associated, have cheered us along life's rugged pathway.

May the spiritual light and truth in our lives ever grow brighter and more glorious, until we reach the perfect life over yonder, is my sincere desire.

Those are grand thoughts which pass through the brain, under the influence of spirit power. There is no power in the universe more lovely than love and spiritual power.

It is all in all, like God in nature.

It is cheering to aspiring souls to realize that we are eternal spirits, passing along to a higher destiny.

All doubts and fears pass away, when souls are born of the spirit.

When we learn through a spiritual source that in our continued life, we can realize a higher existence through progression of spirit influences, and meet our loved ones and friends over there, we rejoice in love unspeakable.

Then how precious is life, not only here but hereafter! Enlightened spiritual beings realize that there is an inward man, that endureth forever, while the outward perisheth and returns to the bosom of mother earth to mingle with its elements. That out of decayed bodies arises vegetable matter that produces the grass, the flowers, and the vegetables that sustain life in man and beast. In this manner the body may be resurrected. The spirit is the living principle in all things in nature. It causes the brain to think and the eyes to see, and behold God everywhere. Finite minds cannot comprehend all of the mysteries in earth and sky, but the spirit can progress more and more over yonder.

On the earth plane, aspiring souls desire to learn all they can about the past, present and future.

EVER LOOK UPWARD.

Tho small the praise tho' less the love,
Ever look upward.
Dull earth below,—the stars above;
Ever look upward.
No more we'll think of toil and strife,
When free from earth's turmoil, so rife;
Ever look upward.

Let not distress enwheel thee 'round,
Ever look upward.
If hard the cross,—more fair the crown,
Ever look upward.
The days and nights, so filled with pain,
Shall prove at last, our blissful gain;
Each teardrop wipes away a stain;
Ever look upward.

Tho' Life's sweet "Hopes" go drifting by,
Ever look upward.
Tho' scalding tears bedim the eye,
Ever look upward.
The tears that wet our faces here,
Shall prove pure gems, beyond, my dear;
They'll gain for us the higher sphere;
Ever look upward.

CITY OF LIGHT ASSEMBLY.

If the first week of the assembly portends the success of the coming weeks, then, of a truth, will the prediction for the most successful season of its existence be verified for 1905.

Each year in the past, since the grounds have taken on the semblance of a miniature city, we have thought nature could not improve upon this beautiful spot; each year the grass seemed greener, the trees and flowers more perfect, the lake more beautiful, the white and gold of the lilies floating on its calm bosom more intensified, their fragrance more subtile. This year, we have the aggregate of all past beauty plus the result of the new management's effort to make realistic the new name, City of Light, as given by the president, Mrs. Abby Louise Pettengill.

To this end the majority of cottages and other buildings have been painted white, and wherever it can be, this color-emblem of purity is utilized about the grounds.

During this first week of the assembly Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Mrs. Annette J. Pettengill, Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn and Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond have ministered most acceptably to the intellectual and spiritual needs of the large and interested audiences in the auditorium.

Pioneer Day was especially a "red letter day," particularly to the saintly pathfinders of the New Thought seated on the rostrum; dear old Aunty Purple, now 91 years old; Mrs. Mary J. Ramsdell, Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Smith, Mrs. Cummings and Mrs. Sully, of Buffalo, N. Y.

The heart-interest in all pertaining to Lily Dale is as young, fresh and green with these dear old pioneers as it was in the early days when, in the vigor of young manhood and womanhood, they cleared these now beautiful grounds of underbrush, and made bonfires of it and all debris that hindered the pitching of tents, which in those days was the only available method of gaining a habitation.

Most touching and beautiful were the tributes paid these dear old people by Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn and Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, platform speakers for Pioneer Day.

Among others who will appear as teachers of the new thought during the season are Rev. Thomas McClary, known as the Western Chautauqua lecturer, Gen. Elmer Littlefield, Susan B. Anthony, Rev. Anna Shaw and Dr. John Geddes of London.

Along with all this intellectual pabulum is interspersed refreshments of a lighter nature in form of rowing on the beautiful lakes of Cassadaga; semi-weekly dances, which occur on evenings of special excursion days, Wednesday and Saturday; cycling, auto-driving, bowling, and all else in which young and old alike take delight in this beautiful "City of Light"

The lyceum is also a feature of no little importance here, and the director and assistant were particularly fortunate in having the aid of Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn of Boston, in organizing lyceum work this season. While Mrs. Allyn is a recognized power on the platform, still it is evident to all who take cognizance of her work that with the children her power is superlative! Fannie Allyn would drop from the highest realms of eloquence, possible to the human mind—yea, from heaven itself, at the cry of distress from a little child, and an audience might wait until she had given relief if that were within her power.

The first public entertainment by the City of Light Lyceum was given Friday night. Much of the attendant success was due to Mrs. Allyn's indefatigable energy and effort to help the children. Her "Tribute to America" was most effective, especially the flag salute which has been adopted by many lyceum workers and publishers in some cases without giving credit to the author.

The Allyn Flag Salute has become a part of the daily exercises of the City of Light lyceum, and we warrant there will be no danger of patriotism for that same "Old Glory" dying out so long as the children join as with one voice in reiterating:

"Hail, Star-spangled Banner, the sign of the free,
Our hearts and our hands pledge allegiance to thee,
We salute thee and echo from shore unto shore,
One country united, one flag evermore."

The Meadville Band discourses sweet music several times each day and evening on the grounds, and accompanies the young folks as they trip the light fantastic at the regular dances.

Every hour of the day, and until 10 p. m., is filled; what, with conferences in the grove, thought exchange in Library Hall, lectures and classes in auditorium, no one day is long enough to take in all the good things offered for that particular 24 hours.

The program for entire season presents such attractions as insure interest to the last day.

MATILDA ORR HAYS.

ALWAYS SOME ONE BELOW.

On the lowest round of the ladder
I had firmly planted my feet,
And looked up in the dim, vast distance
That made my future so sweet.

I climbed till my vision grew weary.
I climbed till my brain was on fire,
I planted each footstep with wisdom,
Yet I never seemed to get higher.

For this round was glazed with indifference
And that one was glazed with scorn,
And when I grasped firmly another
I found under velvet a thorn.

Till my brain grew weary of planning,
And heart strength began to fail,
And the flush of the morning's excitement
Ere evening commenced to pale.

But just as my hands were unclasping
Their hold on the last-gained round,
When my hopes, coming back from future,
Were sinking again in the ground.

One who had climbed near the summit
Reached backward a helping hand,
And refreshed, encouraged and strengthened,
I took once again my stand.

And I wish—oh, I wish—that the climbers
Would never forget as they go
That, tho' weary may seem their climbing,
There is always some one below.

A Breezy Letter.

Things Seen and Heard at Lily Dale.

Lily Dale is to Spiritualism what Rome is to Catholicism. It is the center of this new thought wave ism of our century and it advocates, this city of light for all that is best and noblest in the heart and mind of the human race. To those first coming here who are as yet in darkness and unacquainted with this new thought movement, this common sense ism and religion of the heart, this little city at Cassadaga Lake will seem but a phantom, a show, a little watering town, perhaps that is all; while to the men and women of inquiring mind, lovers of truth and students of nature, especially those not satisfied with the unreasonable, to all of these this little city in white is a beautiful haven of light, the home of Spiritualism.

Here at Lily Dale we meet all classes of men and women, from the profound philosopher to the man of limited knowledge, rich and poor, nearly all bent on the same errand of inquiry. Here are taught and can be heard as well as seen, about everything known and written along the lines of spiritual philosophy. Here are engaged the best of lecturers and psychics known to the world, and any one coming here for a season with an honest endeavor cannot possibly go away unbenefited if not made a convert to the truth of the after life. Such a thing would be almost an impossibility. This little town is fairly impregnated with facts that cannot be gainsaid. Thousands there are who will substantiate this, the most skeptical are often converted to the truth of Spiritualism by the tests given them here.

In coming here everyone is struck with the beauty of the place and its surroundings. Stepping from the train at the small station the first that greets the eye immediately in front and looking eastward is a thick growth of woods stretching north and south half a mile, with here and there bits of houses peeping out. Looking to the north and south, spread out mirror-like are two large sheets of water, that in the sunlight look like silver. Beyond and stretching miles away we see the rich grain fields. Turning 'round, looking west is a great wall of beautiful hills reaching up some 200 feet and sloping gently back half a mile, covered with woods and grain fields, occasionally dotted by homesteads, the whole forming a most beautiful quiet, restful picture.

You now follow the throng ever coming and going during the camp season, a short walk on the road to the grounds. Passing over the iron bridge that spans the little stream that connects the two lakes and you are at the gates, where you purchase your 15 cents admission ticket and pass it to Mr. Johnson, the genial gate-keeper, who for twenty years has stood his post.

To the right and close to the gates is the camp and postoffice telephone and telegraph offices; adjoining these are meat and provision stores, restaurants; next the Sunflower printing establishment. Fronting these is Colwell Park at the southeast corner of which is the residence of Mrs. Abby Louise Pettengill, the president of the City of Light Assembly.

To this lady is due principally the present high standard and splendid condition of affairs prevailing at this camp. Being a person of means and refinement, she is giving her time and means in the uplifting of the cause. Too much cannot be said in her praise. She has won the hearts of the campers in endeavoring to do the best she can for its good.

Facing Melrose Park along Cottage avenue are many costly summer homes, and is also the large auditorium where are given two and three lectures daily during the camp season. At the north end of this avenue is Lincoln Park in the center of which is Maplewood Hotel, a large four-story building owned and managed by the association. There is also at the further end of the park and Cleveland avenue a large bowling alley, bathing house and boat house; here is also situated and owned by the society the waterworks and electric plant. Returning along Cleveland avenue is the library of 2,000 volumes and Library Hall where lectures are given and classes taught in the occult sciences. Back further is Lyceum Hall, school house and dance hall for the teaching of the young. There is also a large livery conveyance and fire engine on the grounds.

At the present time there are over 300 cottages, about 50 of which are occupied the year round. On the lake are several electric launches, a small steamer plying between the camp and the town of Cassadaga; also several yawl boats.

This little city of 25 years has grown from out a dense wood so thick that a team of horses could not enter. The first meetings were held in a bough-thatched auditorium, then came the canvas tent, until now we have a beautiful little city, entirely enveloped in maple forest consisting of forty acres, streets and avenues running at right angles. Leases for lots 40 x 50 feet are given by the association for 99 years, at $5 per year rental beside the state and county tax which are trivial.

In speaking of this class of campers, it is needless to say that you are made to feel at home at once, geniality and good will towards all is everywhere shown and felt. There is no necessity for police protection here, at least while the camp is in session, doors and windows are always left open; there has never been but one arrest made since the camp was opened and that was for disturbance by an outsider. There is no liquor allowed, brought or sold in or about the grounds except that used for medical purposes.

Speaking of honesty, the writer will relate an instance that occurred here last year. A lady wished it announced from the rostrum that she had lost her purse. The chairman, Mr. Barrett, informed her it was at the office. She remarked: "Oh, dear! must I go and get it?" These occurrences are common I am told. As for thieves and tramps, they fear and never molest here; they fear the spiritual campgrounds.

The first sounds from the camp that greet the ear on your arrival are the strains of beautiful music from a splendid 10-piece band engaged during the camp season.

For the benefit of the stranger, camper and mediums, meetings as of old are held in the thick of the forest at the north end of the camp three times daily, weather permitting. These meetings are principally held to convince the stranger, as they are wholly conducted by the mediums, consisting principally of test work and the development of their psychic natures. Here is where the eyes and ears of the strangers are opened and the cobwebs of the thought cells brushed away and started in motion. Laughable sometimes are the tests given by the younger mediums, while the older psychics often bring tears and joy, so strikingly true are they given. These meetings are highly enjoyed. This place was named Forest Temple.

The auditorium situated in Melrose Park and facing Cottage avenue is a large wooden, gravel-roof structure, three sides of which are open and provided with canvas curtains, open always in desirable weather. It has a seating capacity for 1,000, and standing-room for as many more, but it is known to have had upside and out upwards of 3,000 persons, filling the entire street and porches of the cottages on Cottage avenue, facing the auditorium, many times on state occasions.

Here from this rostrum some of the best minds of this country have poured out their thoughts of wisdom in eloquence. Men and women imbued by the spirit and God-given powers of wisdom have held forth here and given the world thoughts enjoyed to-day, not only by Spiritualists but by men and women in all the broader walks of life. Spiritualism is not confined to any creed or dogmas, it encompasses all that is of the mind and advocates spiritual growth through evolution on and up.

In looking over the programme for this season, beginning July 14 and ending September 3, space is too valuable in this most liberal free thought and broad-minded paper to be given in detail, for this already lengthy article. Suffice it to say contains some of the very best speakers and test mediums now before the public. We will, however, give a brief account from the opening lecture by Carrie E. S. Twing. This lady is one of the oldest spiritual lecturers in the field, always good, and too well known to need further comment here.

She was followed on the 15th by Mrs. Annette J. Pettengill of Boston. This lady is rarely gifted, excellent as lecturer, test medium, solo singer and psychometrist; comparatively new in the field, she brings now thoughts and ideas and by her winning personality, songs, and strong psychic powers captivated the entire camp from the start.

On the 16th, Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn of Stoneham, Mass., manager of the lyceum at Onset camp, paid us a visit; here we have one of the brightest, wittiest lecturers known to our ism. This lady bubbles over with wit that constantly keeps her hearers to the exploding point and good humor. She left for home on the 22d. How we all dreaded to see her go. With the lump in our throats we cheered our good-byes, she waving her farewell as the train rolled away.

On the 17th, Dr. John F. Geddes of London, Eng., Universalist minister and teacher of spiritual philosophy, gave us some excellent talks. Having spent over forty years in the study of the occult forces, he is very proficient along these lines.

Next Dr. H. P. Oliver of Philadelphia, Pa., who has written a work of 350 pages on theosophy and kindred thoughts, of value to those so interested, gave us a very interesting talk.

As to test and phenomena mediums, the camp and woods are full of them, many worthy of note, did space allow. "Conditions are such we do not get names."

This afternoon Cora L. V. Richmond arrived and gave us from the rostrum an answer to the question, "The Future of Mankind." Her prophecy based on the past was masterfully handled, showing her great knowledge of historical data. Mrs. Richmond is one of the oldest and commanding lecturers on Spiritualism living. She is to be with us but a few days.

Sunday, the 23d, Mr. J. Clegg Wright follows. Never to have heard that profound master of knowledge the spirit of John Shaw through the personality of Mr. Wright is to but half understand the phenomena of trance speaking. We do not understand it but see it in its highest conditions. Here you hear the eloquent language and profound knowledge of spirit John Shaw, given through a cultured brain, making it possible for the scholastic spirit entity to manifest itself through an organism equal to its own; and the writer has yet to note the difference between John Shaw the spirit and Clegg Wright the mortal man, excepting that Shaw holds forth in a sitting posture and closed eyelids, while in our earthly brother we see the penetrating, far-away look, graceful gesture and easy stride of the orator and teacher when holding forth, besides the keen wit and cutting sarcasm of the gifted Mr. Wright.

As to Prof. W. M. Lockwood, who has just arrived—Spiritualism without a Lockwood! Well, hardly. Mr. Lockwood is a scientist, an M. D., and a gentleman, one who has sacrificed remunerative positions to the cause he loves.

These two men, Wright and Lockwood, not forgetting others, have done much to enlighten the masses in this new ism as old as the world and known to man since Plato's time.

The speakers yet to follow are Thos. McClary, M. B. Little, Susie C. Clark, Laura G. Fixen, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, W. J. Colville, Wilson Fritch, Susan B. Anthony, Anna Shaw, John W. Ring, Geo. Littlefield, B. F. Austin and Lotta P. Cheney, together with excellent platform test mediums, all of which may be seen and heard for the great sum of 10 cents per day, with concerts all thrown in.

Spiritualism is expounded here at Lily Dale as nowhere else, and is sending out its rays of thought to all the civilized world. May it long continue in its good work, enlightening and lifting benighted humanity out of superstition and darkness into the light and truth of this beautiful knowledge. However, the writer ventures to say that Spiritualism has already penetrated every corner of the earth, that should every camp-meeting be wiped out, Spiritualism could not be obliterated at this time. The present psychic conditions of the human mind are evolving into that higher state from which there is no return. It is but fifty-seven years old, this new ism, but look about and note everywhere the progress. Wherever it becomes known, all dogmas give way to this truth of truths, beautiful, satisfying knowledge.

Spiritualism and Christianity.

To the Editor:—Your issue of July 22, pleased me immensely. The attempt to unite churchianity and Spiritualism, or rather to base Spiritualism upon the claims of Christianity, so ably shown up by A. H. Nicholas, of California. It is the most urgent need of the spiritual cause at present, to checkmate this deceptive, delusive practice, of trying to prove our now-a-days spiritual facts by the things of a like nature, said to have happened 2,000 years ago, and for which we are mainly dependent upon tradition as to truthfulness. It is like putting the cart before the horse!

The article by Brother Shafrenberger, on the same page, is also worthy of much praise. This is from a Spiritualist of forty years' standing, and who has been a continuous subscriber to The Progressive Thinker since No. 8.

A COMPREHENSIVE ANALYSIS.

Crime, Vice and Poverty Are the Result of Error.

Naturally every person [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune], looks for that which is to his own interest, and if that which appears to him as his interest is not so in reality it is because the man is mistaken. Hence, whenever there is a pathological state in society it is because of an error in the minds of men. Error itself is a pathological state in the brain, because whenever that organ is in a normal condition it always gives us teachings that are harmonious with the outer world. It is only when it is in an abnormal condition that it renders us false teachings.

The chief abnormal manifestations are vice and crime on one side and pauperism one the other. Without vices and crimes society would be healthy from the ethical point of view; without pauperism it would be healthy from the viewpoint of economics. To say that we wish to extirpate pauperism and solve the social question is to say in other terms that we wish to make society healthy and sound. Now, it is easy to demonstrate that vice, crime and pauperism proceed entirely from error. Vice is a past error of the organism. It destroys health to drink too much alcohol. The individual who misconceives this truth and therefore is deceived in regard to his own view falls into the vice of inebriety.

The same with crime. Acts are criminal because they are erroneous. If theft were really the most efficacious means for enrichment theft would conform to the nature of things; it would then be normal, and by virtue of its normality it would not be criminal. Theft is a dereliction because, far from attaining the desired end, wealth, it tends to the diametrically opposite end, poverty. Indeed, the society where everyone robbed would be the poorest imaginable. Wealth would be reduced to the minimum. The same with homicide, either individual, assassination; or collective, war. They are committed in order to augment well being, but they are the acts which most conduce to ill. If everyone would kill with impunity society would be the most frightful of hells, admitting that it could then exist. Homicide is therefore also a crime because it is an error.

It is scarcely necessary to demonstrate that pauperism also proceeds from error. When it is the consequence of vice it falls under the heading of vice. When pauperism is not the result of vice it is the result of imperfect social institutions. But this imperfection itself is the result of error, because if men have established imperfect institutions—that is to say, not harmonious with the real nature of things—it is not because they were designed to be imperfect, it is only because the men did not know how to make them perfect, because they were deceived, mistaken.

The immense minority of people imagine that there is an inevitable antagonism between the interests of the individuals of a society on the one hand and of the interests of the different societies on the other hand. Let us consider the individual as opposed to society. If the antagonism between their interests were real, the maximum of welfare for the individual would be attained when the society had disappeared, and the maximum of prosperity for the society when all the individuals had perished. These two propositions are equally absurd. Consequently there is no real antagonism between the individual and society. But man believes there is one. Now when he believes this he is mistaken. There is, therefore, no antagonism between the individual and social interest, but only between social interest and that which man, in error, regards as his interest individually. It is then error that produces unhappiness, and not the natural condition of society.

If the antagonism among individuals were real, each finding it to his advantage to destroy the others, humanity constantly would be on the way to extinction. Now this is not the case; humanity is on the way to constant increase. Again, if the antagonism between men were real, the destruction of humanity would increase with the increase of intelligence. If man is the natural enemy of man, the more mental faculties he develops the more rapidly would he destroy his enemies, and hence the more rapidly would our race disappear.

If the antagonism between men were real the establishment of social order would be the chimera of chimeras. This order would be contrary to the laws of nature, and hence unrealizable. Now we know that this is just the contrary to facts; social order extends ever to vaster and vaster territories and embraces a larger and larger number of individuals.

Assuredly antagonism can exist between individuals. If I love a woman, and that woman loves my cousin, there is real antagonism between my cousin and myself. If I wish to occupy a chair, and another person is equally ambitious for it, there is antagonism between that person and myself. These antagonisms are inevitable. They can cause cruel, terrible sufferings. But these sufferings remain in the order of the individual. They do not exist in social facts, and it is only upon social ground that solidarity can exist. On social ground action is complete.

Every one finds it to his greatest advantage in seeing universal right rule. This fact establishes among us absolute identity of interests. We have long understood that it is useful to practice what is right in regard to our neighbor. The great mistake consists in not understanding that all men living on the world are capable of exerting an influence on our destiny, are just as much our neighbors as our compatriots.

MEAT DIET.

All Sorts Should Be Discarded Entirely.

Editor The Traveler:—The lady corpen, and if she wrote to eat meat, fish, meat only twice a week this hot weather, for health, is just getting her eyes open, and if she wrote to eat meat, fish, lobsters and oysters, clams, etc., not any meals at all, neither hot nor cold weather, she would still be nearer right. It is all right to eat for solid foods eggs, milk, cream, butter, cheese and all fruits, vegetables, grains, greens, nuts, whole wheat bread and wheat coffee, but people should cut out all tea, coffee, beer, liquors, wines, drugged soda, "mineral" waters, etc.

These facts are not verified alone by human experience, but they are based on absolute spirit messages received by our most expert psychical researchers in the civilized world, from the most exalted angels in "God's" universe across the great "Divide."

We have always learned these facts through our best temple mediums who have been specially selected from the finest psychics in the world—and anyone who has heard Mrs. N. F. Willis or the other leading mediums employed by the distinguished psychical researcher, etc., Mr. Ayer, will readily recognize these facts as entirely authentic.

It has cost millions of dollars to secure this evidence, and it is worth one hundred times its cost, both in this world and the next. If people want to live healthy and happy, if they want to develop their mental and spirit powers as well as their physical strength, they will do well to follow the angels' advice. If people want to die and enter the spirit world like a tramp outcast, besotted by alcohol, poisoned by tobacco and bestialized by animal grub, all they have got to do is to smoke, chew tobacco, drink liquor and eat meat, fish etc. Eggs and milk are good, but meat and fish are N. G. We would like to bring these messages from the divine angels of heaven very near to the hearts of the people. Space will not allow us to specify the detailed technical reasons why meat-cannibal grub is not good for anyone, but we say that spirits in the higher spheres of heaven have said so, and anyone who has any faith in the hereafter would do well to so live on this earth that when they die and "pass in their checks" they may have such a pure, refined and ethereal spirit that they can go up into the higher spirit spheres of heaven and not be forced to grovel like beasts in the lower domains of spirit life. Old meat ideas are like much of the meat eaten by the ignorant—simply rotten. You will be stronger, better, wiser, healthier, more spiritual, if you leave off these follies and vices of diet and drink. These messages have come to the world "ex cathedra" ("by the voice of God"), and many witnesses can testify to their worth. I formerly ate meat, fish, chickens, ducks, turkeys, bears, deers, woodchucks, lobsters, scallops, oysters, etc., but when I knew the angels had spoken "ex-cathedra," I cut them all out as they ordered, and have never felt better in my life. THE WHEELS OF PROGRESS

Church Influence Cannot Stop the Forward March.

Let us turn to that age in the dim and misty past, when knowledge was kept hidden in the secret retreats and temples of man.

Here the initiated, drinking at its fountain, carefully guarded against a leakage to the outside world, lest the common people, getting a taste become wise, and in their new-found wisdom, one and all aspire to share in the ease, glory and pleasure of high office.

The world moved but slowly in its progress towards higher things.

Humanity at its best was little above the animal in its aims and desires. The people, bowing to priestly rule, submitted to the yoke, and were satisfied, because of their ignorance; and while worshiping the gods and their oracles, patronized the sandal wearers, the long-robed, the matted-haired care-takers, who tended the altar fires and sacrificed poor, harmless dumb brutes before idols of superstition.

Woman, the noblest figure in the kingdom of creation, was then a mere beast of burden, a slave to her lord and master; a piece of chattel to be bought, sold or exchanged at will.

Tyrants ruled and cast their shadows over nations of slaves.

With such a picture before you, would you, then, oh, liberty-loving souls in this land of freedom born, consent to stop the wheels of progress, to turn back the hands of time until they brought again that age of darkness and oppression, in which knowledge was a power in the hands of a few, directing the ignorance of the many?

Will you, freed men and women, place yourselves once more beneath the the thumbscrews of the church?

Will you stand passively by, allowing the soul's noblest aspirations to be warped, your inner voice hushed and your freedom shackled by priestcraft and ancient creed?

Can church activity in secret organization and parochial schools rear the coming generation in the same lap of ignorance that has kept their fathers kneeling in worship before painted idols, and in childish innocence faithfully swallowing the red wine and wafer, in firm belief that when fed by hand of priest it becomes the real flesh and blood of Jesus?

I say no!

America, where high ideals of thought and freedom of human effort are born of the soil and moves the spirit of man, refuses to be a footstool beneath the heel of the Roman church.

A thousand years of oppression could not make of the American Indian a slave such as was the negro; no more can the educated American of today be enslaved by religion, confused by its Latin phrase or bamboozled into accepting on blind faith a carefully arrayed creed, that has its root in a remote past, and which is already stretched beyond its limit of elasticity in the effort to make it reach modern times. All must soon acknowledge its usefulness has been outlived.

It is selfish desire for a life of ease beneath the thin veneer of pious regard, that moves the church in its insane desire to keep man's mind on a level with its dogmatized creeds and that tries to chain him down to a plane of thought which still sees in priestly robe and priestly office the infallible and divine, deeming sacred the meaningless praise to the glory of a personal God that becomes ridiculous through monotonous repetition?

What a Rot!

The soul of the seeker after truth revolts at such hypocrisy!

How pleasing to the "holy fathers" when their dear children of the church, in the full growth of noble man and womanhood, yet remain so child-like and bland.

Wisdom comes with years, but not to those who kneel in reverence to thoughts born of man in the foolish infancy of human knowledge, and in this enlightened age, palmed off on the unthinking as of divine origin, by men who know they are acting the living lie.

When ecclesiastical investigation of spirit power be attempted, and truth be found wanting, shall all be condemned?

Shall scientific demonstration of the individuality of spirit after it has been freed of earthly flesh be repudiated? Must evolution of life both in spiritual and material form continue to be ignored, by the very ones whose duty it is to enlighten the people?

Most emphatically, I say, No! Condemnation by the ignorant cannot kill truth.

After unnumbered ages of preparation, man has worked the downward slant out of the bodily eye, and in spite of the fact that many refuse to help in the making, in spite of surface investigation and church opposition, he is working it out of the spiritual eye.

A NOTED FREETHINKER.

Letter of Mrs. Sara T. D. Robinson, Widow of the First State Governor of Kansas, to the State Historical Society, Presenting That Body an Oil Painting of a Portrait of G. W. Brown, M. D., of Rockford, Ill.

Officers and Members of the State Historical Society of Kansas:—It is with extreme gratification I present you what is considered by all who have seen it, a very excellent oil painting in his advanced years of our long-time fellow laborer, George W. Brown, Esq., the founder, proprietor, editor and publisher of the Herald of Freedom, our first Free State newspaper and the only one which survived the pressure and the violence of proslavery aggression until our freedom was fully assured.

Mr. Brown had been for a long time connected with the Free Soil press in Pennsylvania before coming to Kansas in 1854. Through the influence of his Conneautville Courier, which still survives and reflects his views, he had the pleasure of aiding in making his the banner Free Soil county of Pennsylvania, his adopted state, in the great political contest of 1848. When the Missouri Compromise of 1820 was repealed, May 30, 1854, by which all the territories were again opened to slavery, he determined to locate in Kansas, establish a free press, and aided by volunteers from the free North re-establish the principles of that Compromise on Kansas soil.

Having enrolled 300 of his patrons and friends to accompany him, he located in Lawrence in the autumn of that year. With the first lumber sawed at the Emigrant Aid Company's mill, and timber cut and hewed by his typos, he erected on the town site of Lawrence the first frame building in this city, which for the time became his printing office. Eastern sympathizers with his Free Soil views, came to his support, and with ever increasing patronage he was enabled to continue its publication.

On that ever memorable May 21, 1856, Border Ruffians having first captured Mr. Brown while on his way to Kansas from performing a mission in the states to which he had been commissioned by the Territorial Executive Committee, they demolished his presses, threw the type in the river, and destroyed, or carried away, his large library.

Because of Mr. Brown's ability, energy and influence, with other Free State citizens, he had the honor of being indicted by a pro-slavery grand jury for high treason, and was held a prisoner with four others for four months, a goodly portion of the time guarded by a regiment of United States troops. Finally, without trial, there being no cause for prosecution, the action was dismissed.

Soon after the prisoners' release the ladies of Lawrence made a large national flag and publicly presented it to Mr. Brown. Miss Lydia S. Hall, late editor of the Lowell Offering, made the presentation speech, which was responded to by Mr. Brown. Governor Geary had just arrived in the territory and was present with his escort on the occasion and made a brief speech to the assembled multitude, as did other of our leading citizens. During the occasion the flag was raised to the summit of the staff, over the office where it waved to the breeze, quite unlike the red one which was placed there by ruffian hands, when the office was destroyed four months ago.

The Herald of Freedom was soon after the last incident revived, and was all the stronger because of the rough experience the editor had passed through. Survivors of those pioneer days well remember the vigorous editorials which appeared week after week from Mr. Brown's pen, which envious rivals and malicious libellers, without one word of truth in their statements, have represented as the work of others.

The Herald of Freedom, during all the period of its publication, was the store-house of political and state papers relating to Kansas, and has been the quarry in which subsequent historians have delved for information. Wherein they have followed the facts therein stored their histories are authentic; wherein they have departed from it their statements are not trustworthy. So important and valuable are the files of the Herald of Freedom your honored secretary, Mr. Martin, wrote a friend a few months ago: "The Historical Society could not keep house without the Herald of Freedom." Your former secretary, Mr. Adams, in numerous letters, was still more emphatic in commendation of the paper.

Hon. D. W. Wilder stated years ago to a printer in his employ: "The Herald of Freedom, on which I made such heavy drafts in compiling my Annals of Kansas, is the most faultless paper I ever saw."

"But it had its faults, I suppose," remarked the typo.

In an indignant tone Mr. Wilder replied: "I tell you, it is the most perfect in character, typography and general make-up of any paper I ever saw."

But it is the editor whose likeness, independent bearing and forcible character is so faithfully delineated in the painting, which the artist determined to perpetuate by his art, and which he has executed so gracefully, which I have caused to be transmitted to you, and hereby make you its custodian. It was he who projected the Herald of Freedom. It was he who incurred the expense of its publication; who wrote its editorials, had general superintendence of its mechanical department, who carefully reviewed whatever appeared in its columns, who excluded from its advertising pages every offensive matter, declining, even for double compensation, to advertise the sale of intoxicants. He ever warred upon wrong in all its forms. His principal enemies were law breakers.

It seems to me just that one so intimately identified with all our territorial history, for eleven of the best years of his life was a resident of Kansas, and a participant in every feature of our varying fortunes; whose pecuniary losses in the several Border Ruffian raids, probably equaled if they did not excel that of any other; and was the real founder of the city of Emporia; who organized and was the business manager in sinking three mineral oil wells in Miami county in 1860, the first in the state; who took the first two power printing presses to Kansas; established the first book printing office; the first book bindery; and the first blank book manufactory; and, finally, where all the great leaders were so grossly maligned he received his full share, because he was in the way of aspiring ambition; for these and many other reasons I might mention it seems to me eminently just that Mr. Brown's portrait have a prominent place in your Historical Society.

There is an added value to the portrait from the fact that the artist who executed it was born in Kansas, of a mother, the sister of the first Mrs. Brown, who, with her parents, was one of the pioneers from Pennsylvania. He was educated in our schools; was raised to manhood under the influence of our progressive institutions; and here was formed his love of art, which increased with years, and impelled him, after his graduation from the Art Institute of Chicago, to visit Europe, and spend many years under instruction of the great masters of art in its metropolitan cities. And this painting, while it preserves Mr. Brown's features to other generations, will also do honor to the limner, Henry S. Hubbell, his brush and fame, for all time, and remain a memorial of his skill and artistic genius.

Sincerely yours,

SARA T. D. ROBINSON.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

A GENUINE MATERIALIZATION.

"I saw a fog or misty substance. While I was thinking what it might be, it became illuminated, and out of that light I saw a most beautiful face of a young woman."

To the Editor:—I have been very much interested of late in reading your paper especially on the subject of materialization. I am glad you have brought this subject before the public, and I hope you will continue to do so until the minds of some of the Spiritualists are aroused to action in the matter, and more especially those that are leaders of our societies and camp-meetings.

We never shall have the respect of the intelligent portion of the public until we abolish the Punch and Judy shows from our ranks.

I was brought up a Spiritualist. I saw all of the so-called phenomena in Spiritualism years ago. I have fought against bogus materializations and made many enemies by so doing, but I know sometime that they will all be my friends again.

While writing this there comes to my mind a picture I saw after attending a materializing seance in New York City. I felt very sad during the first part of the performance to think that the people at that seance were being so deceived and their feelings so played upon; then there came a reaction, and I felt very much amused. It seemed as though I was at a vaudeville show.

The next morning when in my room reading a novel which I was very much interested in, there came over me a drowsiness, and I laid down my book, thinking I was going to sleep; but my attention was drawn towards the corner of the room, and there I saw a fog or misty substance. While I was thinking what it might be, it became illuminated, and out of that light I saw a most beautiful face of a young woman. I was much pleased to think I had been so favored. After thinking about it a while I took up my book again to finish my story, when this thought was given me: when we can find the right conditions and the material is fine enough to produce materializations we shall come and show ourselves in a like manner.

I had always doubted in regard to that phase of mediumship and I think that was in answer to my thought.

Brother Francis, I never had so much respect for you as I have at the present time. I think you have taken the right course towards helping our cause and I shall always do all I can to increase the numbers in your subscription list.

WORDS AND DEEDS OF KINDNESS.

Kind words are golden keys!
And hearts both sad and weary
Open unto such as these,
With moments sweet and cheery.
In all thy fleeting, lifelong days
Strive burdens to make lighter,
Let loving deeds and pleasant ways
Make every day glow brighter.

Warmth of the sunny hours
Give blossoms their bright beauty,
And love of the higher powers
Delight our souls with duty;
Beauties of the world below,
Dear angel souls are viewing
And urging us in realms aglow,
To constant strive in doing.

Work earnest on the cloudy days,
And faithful as the sunny,
Angels all shall sing thy praise
If you labor less for money;
When your labor is for love,
The joyous world is moving,
The records in the books above
Show angels are approving.

No day can ever seem so sad,
That's filled with glowing beauty,
No heart can ever be more glad
Than when overflown with duty!
Love fondly lingers everywhere,
A soul is stricken in blindness,
And joy is close akin to care
As love to deeds of kindness.

The gift of goodness is greater far
Than all the gifts of gold,
And the glisten of the gleaming sta
Not fairer to behold
Than gentle deeds and loving ways,
For kindness leads the light,
And blessed are those happy days
That make the world more bright.

WAR IN RUSSIA.

Retribution Following Perfidy, Oppression and Inhumanity.

The full doom of Russia is not yet at hand; yet retribution has never followed more swiftly or in more overwhelming force upon a nation guilty of perfidy, oppression and inhumanity.

The czar of all the Russians, the head of the church, the autocrat, lives in dread of violent death. His kindred and chief officials have been assassinated in his own capital. His armies are beaten in the field and his navies go down before the fleets of an enemy which he despises.

Murder and riot are rife in his realm. The provinces which he has held with an iron hand are breaking away from his authority, their people maddened to the point of desperation, not hesitating to try, all unarmed and undisciplined as they are, to give battle to his troops already affected with sedition.

People are driven to desperation by the characteristic arrogance and inhumanity of military autocrats, born to high station and who arrogate to themselves supreme power over the lives and fortunes of the Russians.

There is scant sympathy for the government of the Czar. Sympathy properly goes out to the people who have suffered long and bitterly for generations.

It is not our part to applaud the actions of murderers and rioters; but most assuredly we can find nothing to admire in the savage Cossacks whose barbarities in all parts of the empire have brought matters to this crisis.

Russia is the most tyrannical, cruel, despotic nation on earth—chiefly attributable to the effects of faith in "holy bible"; in its bloody narratives and devotion to Jehovah, god of wrath, god of war.

Russia is thoroughly Christianized, and its awful, bloody record is compatible with Christianity, founded on a case of murder, whose history since the days of Constantine shows what it is and has been in its practical effects upon Christian nations.

Neighbors, but Not Spirits.

Some Interesting Facts and Queries by Charles Dawbarn.

There is something fascinating as one watches the ever-changing forms evolved by the turning kaleidoscope, from its pieces of colored glass. A brilliant shape appears and then disappears. It seems a lesson in creation followed by dissolution, but of form only, for the raw material remains unchanged. It is really but a simple lesson in optics for the schoolboy, a lesson gathered through one of his five senses.

The philosopher presently drops the instrument and constructs a mental kaleidoscope that works outside and beyond his mortal sense limit. He calls his raw material "ether," and as he watches he discovers that, like the child's toy, if it is kept moving forms will appear and then disappear, leaving the ether absolutely unchanged by the process. He has neither sense nor instrument by which he can reduce the whirl in the ether to a cold-blooded scientific fact, but, all the same, his mental manhood is almost unlimited in its power, so he constructs for himself a deductive universe, and that is how the "unit" happened to be born.

Nobody ever saw, or ever will see a unit with his mortal eye. Still that unit is wanted so badly that science accepts him as an illegitimate child of Nature, and therefore not really entitled to be called a "fact" but capable of being brought up and trained to be useful round the house. The poor little unit is presently placed out to board in a molecule family, and thereby becomes a fairly respectable citizen of the scientific universe. And there I am going to leave him, for this is not going to be an essay on "the art of creating units out of the ether, and the consequences thereof." I just wanted an excuse to go on and be as deductive as I had a mind to, so if the scientist objects I shall just say "unit" whereupon he will subside.

The unit is accepted to-day because, if you are really smart, you can imagine him as doing almost anything you want him to do. He dances, or he would not be a unit. A unit who does not whirl about has gone to his own funeral. But if it's a slow dance he is quite a different unit to what he is when he starts a hornpipe. Every unit is a bundle of energy with a light fantastic toe of his own, and according to the dance the scientist christens him light, or heat, or magnetism, etc. And in these later days a very great scientist, watching him through his mental microscope, declares that every unit is a center of force, and just dancing himself down into a speck of solid matter. All of which is "deduction" with a vengeance, and I could not do any worse if I tried to—at least I think not—but I am going to try to,real hard.

We all know now-a-days that every mortal sense has its rigid limit. What we have not known, or thought much about, is that the mind has its limits too. And just as mortal sense is perpetually getting into trouble through its own limitations so we find "mind sense" getting itself twisted, distorted, colored and suggested as it tries to tell its tale through mortal brain. And just now I am thinking a great deal about these physical and mental sense limitations because thereby, seem, to me, to hang tales of interest to every reader.

If we start with the "unit" we can know, even by thought, no more about it than our mortal brain can express. But when it has become a piece of molecule we begin to recognize it, and give it names. No matter whether we christen it carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, or even radium, we perceive it is the foundation fact of substance. And herein is my text. I claim there is necessarily a great deal more to substance than our most learned scientist can discover, and prove as a scientific fact.

Here lies a piece of mineral. We can measure, weigh and analyze it to our heart's content. Its form is very definite to our eye and touch, and the schoolboy will tell us it's only a bit of rock, and good to throw at a dog or a bird. In fact we all recognize it as a piece of our planet, a chip off our Mother Earth. Some one presently notices that it pulls or pushes a needle suspended a few inches away. Yet he puts his finger between them and declares there is nothing there by which that rock can produce any effect at a distance. So we call that piece of solid rock "lodestone," and the effect it produces "magnetism." The trouble is that names don't explain anything. We have discovered a fact, a most wonderful fact. We even put the discovery to practical use, and evolve the mariner's compass.

We learn, after a time, that everything is a magnet, and, without any fingers, reaches out and touches something else at a distance, although with some forms there is much less of this effect than with others. Where there is a very great effect or power manifested we now call it "radio-activity," and in its extreme power where suns and planets act upon each other we call it "the attraction of gravitation." We presently discover the same mysterious fact everywhere around us.

Just as the supposed whirl in the ether resulted in substance, so we have learned to make a whirl in our atmosphere which results in thoughts flashing around the world, and the whirring wheels of our growing civilization. Effect at a distance is an accepted fact to-day, and yet every scientist knows it is an impossible, even an absurd assumption. The practical man coins his dollars out of it. The scientist uses it in a thousand ways, yet both alike poohpooh every explanation of the mystery, because the cause is outside the limit of moftal sense and scientific proof.

The solution of this mystery seems to me to be to-day within our grasp. Once acknowledge and realize the rigid limitation of mortal sense, and form loses its old boundary. That lump of mineral is very much larger than our mortal sense can grasp. It moves the needle simply because its own outmost touches the outmost of the needle. There is no gap between. The earth and the moon affect each other because they touch. And our sun touches the giant sun Alcyone which holds him to his orbit. Mortal man cannot sense the outmost of any form, but he can, if he will, mentally grasp the truth and learn its lesson. And that is the object of this article.

Let us now turn back to the first outburst from the ether which the scientist calls "vortex" and which, as I have many times asserted, is like the universal and infinite ether itself, a blending of substance, energy and intelligence. That vortex is itself only mentally discerned, and as mind is limited by mortal brain, that vortex is composed of something man's mind can grasp, and of something more that remains outside the limit. This truth remains a fact in nature, for at every step in creation and evolution there is something man can grasp, and a great deal remaining that is beyond him. We keep this in mind, and when at last, after innumerable blendings, the scientist actually discerns matter, we must remember he is only watching that matter so far as his five senses and his instrument will permit. That is his limit, but as we have seen it is not the limit of matter. And when he discerns what he calls the beginning of life, he watches only so much of life as he can sense. Surely we have a right to ask at this point, what of the matter, the form, the life he cannot sense?

The lodestone has a form beside the one he sees—a form so intangible to him he calls it "magnetism," and pronounces it an effect proceeding from the center he holds in his hand. But all the same the student is compelled to acknowledge that that outside form is an actual part of the lodestone, coming into existence under the same creative impulse, and at the same time as the part we call solid. This must apply to speck and mass alike. There is a part of everything man can think about, and a part that is altogether beyond him. When we realize that this fact applies to everything, we begin to also realize something of what it means to man.

Man, like the lodestone, and everything else, is partly visible and tangible to mortal sense, and the rest of him outside the mortal limit. Unless the reader recognizes this as a natural fact, he will not be interested in what follows. And if he has never comprehended that every atom in nature is in motion, and that we can only sense so much of that motion as we can physically and psychologically follow, he is hardly ready to advance through this gateway into the mysteries beyond.

The student will carefully note that we are not entering the realm of spirit or spirit return, for we must try to follow that which is not, and never was mortal, and yet is man. Surely this is a path into an untrodden land. If part of manhood is within mortal life and the rest of manhood outside, we have a right to ask how much the twain are in touch? Nay, manhood is not twain, but one. There is no separation save that we lose touch with a portion of manhood's form. But the portion of him beyond our sense perception will necessarily have very different experience from that limited by earth life.

There is yet another view to be taken of this manhood existing inside and outside mortal sense limit. It does not follow that it is another part of the man we know. Take the unit as the first appearance from ether that we can mentally realize as possible. That very unit has, so to speak, a core, which, as it goes on gathering into molecular form, is step by step evolving the world and its myriad expressions which our senses realize to-day. But that unit, like everything else, had also an extension our senses could not grasp. And that extension must also have had its unsatisfied potencies, which would lead it to become a molecule, and evolve experiences of world life, and climb up, step by step, into manhood. But its experiences and powers would be very different from ours, because its conditions and surroundings would all be within different vibrations. It would surely have sense limits such as, in all probability, would almost prevent contact with us, and shut out, for the most part, any possible knowledge of our world and its life expressions.

Let us remember that that life, if it exist as manhood, will have no more relation to spirit than our life of to-day. It will not be a copy of ours. It will have grown into what it now is by its own experiences and mastery of its surroundings, just as we have. It is built up from precisely the same raw material, and will be really an attachment to our world, and to everything within that world. It will be subject to the laws of matter we recognize, and to the life forces we call evolution. It follows that, as with us, there will have grown up races and nations with vastly different capabilities, and individuals of varied mental capacities. But they will not be spirits, in our sense of the word, nor be included in anything we mean by spirit return. Yet we should expect there would be instances where one form of such earth life might impinge upon the other. But until such existences were at least acknowledged as possible and even probable, any such contact would be crudely classed as spirit return, or else counted as another of life's mysteries.

I believe this impingement or slight contact is an actual fact in our everyday life, and I expect this article will induce many to watch for it, and perhaps find cases more sensitive and better fitted for such intercourse than the one I am now about to place on record.

I have an old friend of rather marked individuality. He is rigidly truthful, and at the same time very slow of speech, indeed almost painfully so. He seems to have no imagination, and very limited powers of description. He has remained politically and religiously unchanged since boyhood. The worthy old gentleman began to have experiences a few years ago which he would discuss with me, and ask me to explain them for him. He would every now and then see people driving horses before wagons and carriages on roads that had no relation to ours, for these teams would travel right across open fields, and through orchards without apparently noticing them.

At first, and while thus appearing only at a distance, there was nothing very extraordinary in the vision save the indifference of the drivers to our roads. These visions, at that time, were always in the bright sunlight, and while he was busy in garden or orchard, and I fancied from his descriptions that they were hallucinations due to some effect of bright rays upon his weakening eyes. So far as he could then judge these teams, drivers and passengers might all have belonged to our everyday life, but for their indifference to our roads. It seemed to me, in those days, as merely an interesting hallucination, and only remarkable as being the experience of about the last man among my acquaintances likely to exhibit mental eccentricity. I may say here that the worthy old man has never taken any special interest in the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism.

There was for a long time a monotony to these visions that left nothing new for discussion, and I gradually lost my interest in them. In the last year there has come a decided change that has revived my interest, and impressed me as possibly, or probably visions of actual life experiences, closely related, though somewhat different from ours. I hear nothing more of those horses, carriages and drivers—all a little too far off to be seen in detail—for now men, women and children come and go, and at times almost touching him. As I have said, the old gentleman has almost no imagination, and his powers of description are the despair of a questioner. So I can give little but the impressions left on my mind after many conversations with him regarding these experiences.

The living beings he has so far seen have been only horses and humanity, all of which he describes as like, and yet unlike those of our life. I could not get many details. The women and children had loose and almost shapeless dresses, often in bright colors. The men seemed to have much less variety in that respect. He particularly noticed on one occasion that they all wore shoes. Their faces, he said, were different from ours. He thought they were longer. Their mouths were very large, and when they talked he could see their tongues and irregular teeth. One man saw and spoke to him on one occasion, but it was in a language he could not understand. On another occasion he saw two of these visitors carefully examining the front of the house. They had loose and dark outer garments, and after a time each put his hand to his side, when he at once rose in the air, and passed out of sight. This last hint at some instrument or force unknown to us was very striking as coming from an old man with almost no powers of imagination.

Since the above was written the old man has passed on, and his experience here recorded will only be of real interest if there are others with similar visions.

We may note that in view of our own sense limitations it is possible, we may say certain, that just beyond our powers of perception are realms inhabited by forms of life, like and yet unlike those we know. The student may well accept them as a fact, but must remember we are not dealing with spirits or a spirit world when we make these explorations. By "spirit" we mean human beings who have lived and died from mortal life like ours, and whose occasional visits we call "spirit return." But these NEIGHBORS have not died, so far as we can judge.

It is not to be presumed the astronomer will discover evidences of any such human life through his newly invented ultra-violet lens, any more than he will be able to see beyond the mortal of earth life. It is the man or woman with the mental kaleidoscope—the born sensitive to these special vibrations—through whom alone we can hope to learn anything of our "neighbors who are not Spirits," if such there be.

If there are such actual neighbors, then it will undoubtedly be found that our lives and theirs sometimes contact, and influence each other. It may also be that certain physical and mental phenomena are partly the work of NEIGHBORS, and partly of returning spirits. We cannot to-day be certain, but we can all seek more light, and thus aid in this very interesting investigation.

PRODUCING LIFE.

All Is Life, and All Life Has Intelligence.

We seem to be drawing closer and closer to an epoch of discoveries that will disprove many of the old dogmas built upon the Genesis according to that much worshiped fetish, the Bible, and it is fortunate that many types of scientific investigation have reached thus far.

In the experiments and demonstrations of the scientist, Dr. Littlefield we have presented to our thought powers a new line of investigation, even that of producing life by chemical relation. This is the secret of Nature, a secret that is clearly understood in the higher spheres and is being given to mortals whenever a brain can be found capable of receiving the vibrations that will carry the knowledge.

One mistake is made in the outset, however, and that is that life is "produced." Here lies a stumbling block. Life cannot be "produced," not in the general acceptation of the word. Life is self-existent, is in every atom, molecule or electron. Subdivide infinitesimally as you may, still you have life. All is life, and all life has intelligence, has thought activities. Chemical relation is thought relation. That which co-relates for better expression does so from its inhering intelligence, or instinct, if you like the word better—it is intelligence just the same. All the thoughts of man have chemical qualities and the same is true of all the particles of Cosmos, cosmic work being carried on by the intelligence of its component parts. This is the God work, for all the God there is is Cosmos at work.

To do this work in its infinite varieties there must be infinite supply and various qualities and kinds. Earths are crystallizations from the air. Ethers hold in solution all solids. When we seem to be using only solids, we can attract and do attract finer particles of related etheric substances, through the law of chemical affinity, and blend them in our work unconsciously, because they are too fine for the physical eye or most powerful lens to detect, only the highly refined spiritual intelligences are able to discern them, our low grade physical senses cannot. So when biologists produce new activities which they term producing life they have by their laboratorial efforts set up co-relation of substances that have brought into co-ordination some of these higher energies and made manifest the inhering forces in forms which are directly generated by the chemical affiliations, held in place by the governing principle expressed as cohesion, adhesion, selection, etc., all intelligent processes.

If so be that these relations continue, if they are according to the exact and immutable laws of Nature, they will continue in manifestation; if not, if there is anything wanting in the compound to make a complete conjunction, there will be disintegration.

It would seem as possible to relate substances in the laboratory as in the garden or the field for demonstration of existing energies in the form of crystallizations, because no walls can exclude the higher, finer elements necessary to all forms; they will feel by the law of vibration the work that calls upon them for combined effort to a specific purpose for use, and they will speed to the opportunity gladly.

Thus we see what may be arrived at when the mortal brain is developed to be able to receive the vibrations sent by those who can direct the work of disclosing Nature's secrets and disproving many of the fallacies of pseudo scientists and misled theologians, to the breaking of the shackles which bind to narrowness and bigotry the masses and the nations.

Hail! then to every step in the evolution of experimentation that will lead us to the wide plateaus of Truth in its own exactitude.

THE REALITY OF THE UNSEEN.

The Significance of the New Thought Movement.

My wish is that we together take into consideration a few thoughts along progressive lines. We are perfectly cognizant of the many important changes now taking place in the religious field of action and thought. It is most interesting to note the New Thought movement—also the slow awakening to higher and clearer conceptions of the future life in spirit—that is taking root amidst the Christian churches. If you will in thought go back forty years, you who have been in close harmony with the teachings at that time will at once recognize, through comparison, the advance that has been made. Those in spirit who are interested along the progressive lines never for one moment lose sight of the activities that tend to enlighten man along life's many avenues of expression. We believe it to be our mission, for the present at least, to devote our time to this work—not that we are any more spiritual, or that we consider ourselves to be all-wise. We simply have this advantage, being a medium, we are in closer rapport with people who have passed through the change called death; and too, we have made a study of the laws controlling spirit manifestations both in the body and out of the body, and we do know, as far as our experience has brought us, what this change is.

In the first place, it is sometimes singular how advanced a mind may be in one direction, and how behind the times in another. In viewing this subject from an impartial standpoint, all must look beyond the present conditions and consider the case in all its bearings.

The conservative mind considers any innovation which sets aside the old order of things as being contrary to the law of orderly progression, but if the opinions of the conservative minds were considered as final, there would be neither growth nor development, simply stagnation. You see, at the very outset of life, man is confronted by the greatest of all mysteries, the problem of good and evil.

The secret power lies in going to the very heart of things—to the soul—and working from within outward, thus developing love, faith and hope, and in that way becoming "magnetic," by imparting these qualities to others. Get a clear mental conception of what you wish to accomplish, and steadfastly adhere to it. The thought force that you generate around you, which envelopes you like the fogs in the valley, is oftentimes all our spirit friends and loved ones have to work with. We note with much interest the sensation the New Thought Movement is creating—it is the fad of the present time—and not to be conversant with its teachings is to be classed unpopular or unprogressive. It is bringing into action a long misunderstood power, but not a new power. The foundation upon which Spiritualism is builded is the selfsame power and force—it is an old thought under a new name—that is all. "It sounds better," some one will say. We, being Spiritualists, take the stand that at the heart of man's life is the Divine Ideal, which is eternally steadfast, which knows naught of anything save good, and that at some time it will blossom forth in the light that is new only to those who have been living in the dark.

The manifesting spirit in all phases of spirit life holds these thoughts as a truth. They know whereof they speak, for their experiences have taught them these facts. Our spirit teachers know that in the life of man there is a constant process of development, each stage being perfect within its limitations, just as the unripened fruit is perfect in so far as it has developed.

There is a tendency among our American people to be ever looking for a something new. That is good. I am in perfect sympathy with the New Thought movement—but I am not in sympathy with any ism or people who wish to snuff out all lights but their own—especially so when all these lights are an outgrowth of the great light that Spiritualism has kept trimmed and burning for ages. In soul development there is no competition but there must be co-operation. Anyone who seeks development for himself regardless of others, bars his own progress and stands in the light of others. Let us learn to be thoroughly consistent.

Spiritualism is the mother of all religions. The many isms and cults that are interesting the thinking people today are simply the children that have "been borned" years ago and are now just beginning to venture forth. Do you know, I often think that we grow away from so much that is beautiful, in our haste for a great thing—some wonderful, out-of-the-ordinary demonstration of some sort. You here to-day, who are now passing through the valley of sorrows, you who have kissed the closed eyelids of some one you loved better than life itself, you who watched daily and hourly the passing disease that is to take this one away from you, can testify that after they have passed through the Open Spirit Gateway you would give your life for one little, tiny rap. Just a simple demonstration that they are with us—that they did not go away. The sweet, simple things in everyday life are the most sacred. You who are here for the purpose of seeing the phenomena, that you may be brought to a realization of the truth of these demonstrations, when you go let your heart be full of confidence and hope—put out and away from you all suspicion and doubt. We little realize all our spirit friends can do for us, if we will but trust them and the instrument through which they work.

The atmosphere we personally carry into a seance room has much to do with what we may receive while there. Do not censure the medium wholly for any failure, but see to it that you are in the right spirit to receive. We, as investigators, have much to do; it is our duty to assist in lifting the thin veil between the spirit and material world, and not take the position of unjust criticism! Can we measure the service rendered by the true soul, simple in heart, who sings songs of hope and love, faith and heroism into the barren lives of our people to-day? No, but let us be free—free to speak—free to do for each other in all avenues of life. Is it not something to have sent into some soul courage, resolution and enthusiasm for noble ideals, while teaching love, gentleness, nobility and faithfulness?

The poet of the people, dear Ella Wheeler Wilcox, preaches to millions of earth's children, and sings her words into the souls from generation to generation in a way which bears fruit and makes for progress, rightness and a freer life. These clearer minds open the eyes of the people to the beauty of life and make them lovers of the best wherever it is found. There are new demands, new possibilities—the questions of to-day; the home life about us, the struggles, the hopes, the fears of the present, the glorious promise of the future—all these invite our attention. The men who labor are coming to the front. The army of the poor is struggling up. We are gaining more sympathy. Our conception of these unseen forces is clearer to-day than ever before. We Spiritualists need more workers in the field. The world wants to be told of these things. The heart chord of this age will vibrate as those gone before, if we but find it.

The man with trained powers can control the untrained mass and use it for his own gain. This mighty influence is not only found here, but in the after life—there are to be found just as many schemes in the spirit land as there are here. Why? Because the two, the spirit and material are not separated in their relationship—one is a part of the other, and just so long as there is the great maddening craze for the almighty dollars, just so long will the soul passing out at that time of failure or success, at once turn about, and take up his interests again just where he left off before the little change called death took place. How does he do this? By getting in close touch with material workers and through them reaching the position he desires. You see, spirit has the advantage of being able to get at the workings of the mind of his subject, and through that channel he accomplishes much, while we in the body are obliged to guess at much that is not made clear to us. There are people, who, having passed out, take a much deeper interest in material things than when in the body. I know how difficult it is to grasp the reality of that which we cannot see with our physical eyes. It is very hard for us to realize how very partial our sight is—to understand that we are living in a vast world of which we see only a tiny part. We are, as it were, shut up in a tower and our senses are tiny windows opening out in certain directions—in many other directions we are entirely shut in—but clairvoyance opens for us one or two additional windows, and so enlarges our prospect and spreads before us a new and wider world which is yet part of the old one—though before we did not know it.

Our belief in another life is going to make all the difference in the world as to how we live in this one—it touches our ideals, our methods of thought, the aims and ends which we shall have in view—anything which promises us renewed certainty concerning another life is the most important thing that can be brought before the consideration of men. There comes a time to us all, when we need the protection of Spiritualism's sheltering wing—when the heart is quivering with sorrow, and with eyes dim with tears we look into the eyes of one who is dearer than life itself, and we see this one pass out and away into the great unknown, we turn in our anguish to Mother Spiritualism, who opens these gates not only for our loved ones to pass through, but this Mother assures us that these gates swing both ways and as she gathers us close in her embrace whispers, "Not lost, only gone before."

We as Spiritualists know that this life is only preparation and prelude to that which is to follow. So let us try to be patient and loving, and tender and true—try to bear, try to wait, try to consecrate ourselves; so that when we do wake up and see the results, we shall be glad with a great thanksgiving.

"May the manifestations of peace be always with you."—Phebe.

DR. W. P. PHELON.

Some Interesting Incidents Recalled.

Two interesting facts are recalled in connection with the late Dr. W. P. Phelon, of the Hermetic Brotherhood, who recently passed to the higher life in San Francisco, whither he had gone to establish a branch of the Brotherhood, and where he concluded to remain, though he had been a continuous resident of Chicago for a great many years previously—indeed, a lifetime, as lives usually are measured.

Dr. Phelon organized a circle something like thirty years ago, say about the middle or the latter part of the seventies, and of this circle he persuaded Mrs. H. S. Slosson to become a member. She was at that time a member of the Methodist church, and was fearful that the manifestations, which had begun to come to and through her, were the works of the devil, as claimed by her father. But in a supreme moment she broke over the barriers, and joined the circle. While everything was in an unsettled and primitive state, as far as manifestations were concerned, Dr. Phelon, when under control, predicted great things in Mrs. Slosson's career, telling her she would become one of the best and most famous mediums or psychics in the country. She paid very little attention to it at the time, and believed little or nothing in it. But events proved the Doctor to have been right. It will be remembered that when W. T. Stead was in Chicago ten or a dozen years ago, he had several sittings with her, and declared her to be "one of the best psychics or mediums he had seen in this country."

The other fact is, that in this same circle, a famous French physician, whose name I do not now recall, made the prediction through Dr. Phelon that a new religion would spring into life in a few years, which would claim to do healing, and would do it in some instances, and would have some kind of a scientific name. A few years later Mrs. Eddy promulgated her Christian Science, and among its converts later in her life was Mrs. Phelon herself, who claimed to do a great deal of her healing by means of it.

It may not be out of place for me to mention another prediction made through Dr. Phelon during the continuation of this circle. He stated that during the latter years of the nineteenth century and the beginning of the twentieth there would be four great wars, in one of which the United States would be engaged, and in another Great Britain would be a participant. We had the Spanish war, Great Britain had the Boer war, and then followed the war between China and Japan, and the fourth is the present war between Japan and Russia.

These predictions and verifications were certainly remarkable.

A little incident that happened during Dr. Phelon's residence in Chicago showed a lovely phase of his character.

A friend of his, unknown to him, had got into financial troubles, and was in danger of having her furniture taken by an installment house because of an unpaid balance of a hundred dollars. She had spent the morning in tears, expecting every moment that the furniture would be taken. Suddenly she stopped crying, and declared she would not shed another tear, no matter what happened. Fifteen minutes later the bell rang, and when she went to the door Mrs. Phelon was there.

"Well," she said, "I guess Gray Eagle (Dr. Phelon's control) was mistaken this time. He said that you were in tears, and that you were in danger of losing your furniture, and nothing but a hundred shines would stop it. You don't seem to be in tears, and—but is there anything in it?"

She soon found there was, and that Gray Eagle was right.

"He told me to bring the money," concluded Mrs. Phelon, "and there it is."

EARL MARBLE.

SOME POINTS EXPLAINED

To Persons of Opposite Mental States and Views.

A gentleman asked this question to-wit: If Jesus figured as chieftain of the creative Masters of this eternity, or as others put it, the Tutelary Spirit of this planet, why was he so weak at the time of his trials, when a manifested spiritual or physical strength would have established his claim beyond any future controversy?

Answer: The weakness of Jesus the Christ referred to was a governed condition from the spirit side of life, because his mission required submission to worldly rule which was thus to be brought under divine rule.

Moreover, as to personality, he was not the Mighty Chieftain in his fullness, only a detached part of him was incorporated in him, that is, in the physical form of Jesus of Nazareth, to thus represent on earth the love, power and goodness of the chieftain referred to.

The processes of such incorporations of soul powers and principles for such specific works need long and careful preparations which, in time, will be fully explained so as to qualify and make clear the differences and meaning of such expressions as re-embodiment, rebirth, etc. For the present this suffices.

After filling his earth mission and being re-united to his full system constituency, he was and is no longer weak but mighty. His armor is truth and all who are with him are true and faithful.

He has sent forth floods of infinite love and pity for all earth's afflicted and enslaved ones, and those who are receptive to this higher light and influx are thus strongly worked upon to aid their fellow brothers and sisters and help them to regain the necessary system poise, to lead lives and do works worthy of promotion to more elevated planes of co-operative usefulness and happiness.

Another asked, Why is it that there is so much stress laid in Spiritualism and in all new thought upon vibrations and thought, etc? Give us please, some form of procedure which we may better understand.

Answer: We could not, by any words of explanation cause you to understand these whys rightly until your own mental and spiritual attainments make such understanding possible, and will therefore simply say that good and evil desires and thoughts go from you in vibrations out into space, passing many vibratory lines and circuits, and mark themselves all the way, hence, are ever and always traceable and can never be erased. This is part of each individual's record upon which future delights or miseries depend. Therefore the stress laid upon thought.

Most certainly all desire and thought are also marked on each one's being, more exclusively on the brain, but it is a strange anomaly between what is meditated and marked on the individual and on the vibratory lines as said, and what is acted and spoken, and the troubles realized on earth and hereafter are traced to this misit in human reciprocity of thought and conduct mostly. Let your thoughts be pure and your words few and express your thoughts, be they what they may, then you are on the lines of your own circuits of an interactive life, and right, so far as in the unfoldment of your own consciousness you can comprehend right and wrong. As you advance to higher planes of thought and consciousness of life's great import, you can then see that past limitations were and are ever governed by each one's own conditions which form their environments and change commensurate with true individual progress.

The gentleman then replied: "Your explanation strikes us as truth, it is helpful and appreciated, but we would be pleased to know why so many parts or phases of so-called Modern Spiritualism are so distasteful, some even silly and ridiculous."

Answer: Just because the real, natural continuation of life is and has to be thus demonstrated. Mortals who, in their turns become returning spirits, are all assigned in the onward life, according to their own fitness. They speak from their own planes or viewpoints and as they may be able to use a physical instrument or medium, and what you are pleased to call silly and ridiculous, conveys the stern truth that change of planes of life's expressions does not change the real individual, the self is there free from masks and pretensions which on earth often lent dignity to otherwise shallow people.

The gentleman answered: "Well, this may be true. Thank you for your time and explanation."

PROF. L. M. LYDY.

A Tribute to an Arisen Brother.

Memorial service was held in West Side Spiritual Church, McDowell street, Columbus, Ohio, Sunday evening, July 23, in memory of our esteemed brother and co-worker, Prof. Levy M. Lydy, whose transition took place July 13, 1905, at his home, 203 S. Third street, after a very brief illness, at the age of 77 years. Prof Lydy was highly esteemed and dearly beloved by a large circle of cultured citizens, not only Spiritualists but of all denominations. But it was as a teacher of spiritual truth from a biblical standpoint that he was in his element and at his best.

Prof. Lydy was a teacher in some of the best schools in different sections of the country for over forty years, and endeared himself to both young and old by his earnest, zealous way of transmitting his knowledge to others. He was a frequent visitor to many of our homes and we shall miss him.

The speakers in his memorial service were his esteemed friends, Dr. C. S. Carr, Prof. W. P. Seymour and Rev. H. E. Boerstler. The church was beautifully decorated with blooming plants and cut flowers and a large and appreciative audience assembled to pay tribute to our arisen brother, and solemnly listened to the eulogies as they fell from the lips of our gifted speakers. Many were the tears that were shed and many words of comfort, for we know Brother Lydy still lives. We now see as "through a glass darkly, but by and by we shall see him face to face. Brother Lydy was an honorary member of the West Side Church for the past four years and a devoted and earnest worker in the cause of truth.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two-cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CLARY, St. Louis, Mo.

Physical Immortality.

Thus far in the history of man it has been found an unsolvable problem to permanently defeat Death. Whether an eternity of existence in flesh and blood form, on this ball of earth, were really desirable, even if practicable, is quite doubtful, if not entirely out of the question.

In view of the unlimited amount of human perversity and general "cussedness" exhibited by the human race, from Adam's time till the present, and still prevalent in variant manifestations, we surmise that old Adam himself, if he were living today, and however much he might have progressed intellectually, morally, physically and spiritually, would be tired of earth life, and long to be translated to higher, purer and more spiritual realms, where his freedom of growth would not be impeded by the clogging environments incident to earthly existence.

So when Prof. Albert P. Matthews of the University of Chicago, offers us everlasting life in the flesh if we will accept and adhere to the scientific system of dietetics now being worked out, we can only look askance at the offered gift, as of doubtful value at the best. For, we ask, would our best good be accomplished if we really possessed the offered fleshly immortality?

There is one thing that appears to be overlooked in the scheme of those who are working out the scientific system of dietetics that is to insure our earthly immortality. Will the exact observance of the perfected scientific rules of diet, render us immune not only from disease and bodily decay, such as now results from the wearing out of the bodily organs, and old age, but also bring us exemption from death by accident—such, for instance, as by drowning, a railway crash, the buliet of a burglar or other thug?

No doubt much may be done by judicious dietetic rules, etc., to conserve health and prolong life; but the whole analogy of nature, as we observe it in this present existence, indicates that the earthly body of man was never intended to become immortal nor will it ever become so.

And so we may as well come to the conclusion that instead of striving to make our bodies immortal, it were better that we exercise ourselves to the end of making our spiritual natures worthy of immortality.

A Test That Is a Test.

Rev. J. W. Stokes, down there in Dublin, Georgia, preached a sermon the other day, showing who were Christians. He made the following quotation to establish his point:

"Hereby know we that we dwell in Him, and He in us, because He hath given us of His spirit."—I. John 4:13.

That is a test for the Christian himself, but proves nothing to an outsider. If experience had not demonstrated that men can lie we might accept their statements that they "dwell in God, and God in them;" but in this age of the world it will not do to accept such interested evidence.

Jesus is represented as having given a test that is clear, pointed, and is probably reliable. It can be applied by any one, at any time, and anywhere. It should be convincing to saints and sinners alike. See Mark 16:17, 18:

"These signs shall follow them that believe, * * * They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them."

There is a test from Jesus himself that leaves no possible chance for mistaking who are Christians. Try them with a solution of corrosive sublimate, a deadly dose of prussic acid, or carbolic acid, and if it "shall not hurt them" they are believers we can trust! If they die will it not prove that Jesus was a false teacher, one whose instructions it is fatal to follow?

We commend this text to Rev. Stokes. It will be most valuable when applied to missionaries in heathen countries in distinguishing between the genuine and the pretender.

Rev. Charles William Pearson.

We learn from a press dispatch that the Rev. Charles William Pearson, formerly of Northwestern University, who three years ago achieved notoriety by declaring that the authenticity of the bible as an inspired work was doubtful, died in a London hospital while on a European trip a few days ago.

The late minister was pastor of the Unitarian Church of Quincy, Ill., and left that city for Europe a month ago. He was connected with Northwestern University for thirty years as professor of English literature.

His expression concerning the bible was the cause of his forced resignation in 1902. Subsequently he devoted himself to literature and poetry.

It will probably be said by the "goody goodies" and "holy" ones of the orthodox faith "God, in his infinite wisdom, removed this obstacle to the church, from earth for his heretical utterances."

By the way, this office has kept tab on this clerical gentleman and his "heretical utterances," as it aims to do upon the acts of all brave "men of the cloth" who have the courage of their convictions, and drop into these "heretical" inspirations, and from our "piled-for-reference" pile of clippings drag the following interesting bits of quotations which caused the church to criticise the Professor, and which was the real cause of his "requested resignation," and retirement from the professorship of the Northwestern University and the Methodist Church. The excerpt from our file says:

"As a parting shot to his orthodox critics who have taken him to task for his recent declaration that miracles of the bible are myths and legends, he also denied the divinity of Christ, and pronounced himself to be more in accord with the doctrines of Unitarianism than of Methodism.

"'I have decided to abandon the chair of English literature, which I now occupy at Northwestern University,' said Professor Pearson, 'and I will also quit the Methodist church. I love the Methodist church, but my views upon the bible are more in accord with those of the Unitarian church. I do not think I should be affiliated with the Methodist church any longer.'"

The real cause for his resignation was that he had studied and reasoned himself out of the orthodox idea of the "Divinity of Christ," and in the discussion of that question he spoke thus:

"Christ, like John Wesley, Martin Luther and John Knox, was a prophet of his race, but he was no more divine than these men. In the sense of His having performed good deeds which lived after Him He was divine, but I do not believe that portion of the bible which declares that He was the son of God.

"I believe in Christ just as I believe in King Arthur. I believe there was such a man as Christ because history tells us that there was, and I believe there was such a man as the chivalrous King of the Britons for the same reason. But I am compelled by reason to disbelieve the incredible stories of the miracles of Christ just as I am compelled to disbelieve the myths of King Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table."

But it was the work published by the Professor entitled "The Carpenter Prophet," that pulled away the hoodwink of Christ's divinity and led up to the resolutions of "ousiment."

Although he never before openly avowed himself as disbelieving the divinity of Christ, he came dangerously near it upon several occasions. In a pamphlet issued entitled "Creed and Practice" he says:

"As Bacon would rather believe all the fables in the Koran than not believe in God, so many people are so drawn to Christ that they compel themselves to believe anything rather than be cut off from the church.

"The religious atmosphere of the Methodist church has already been been cleansed, and I am now content to submit to the injury that has been done to my reputation for the cause of the right. Many prominent Methodists have already come to me and expressed the belief that the doctrines of the infallibility of the Holy Writ are incompatible with the good of the church."

Professor Pearson attended the prayer meeting just previous to his departure from the college and bade farewell to the students and faculty, when he arose to "testify," and in part said:

"This may be the last time I shall have an opportunity of addressing you, and I desire to make a few remarks at this time.

"I want you all to understand that I believe in Christ, I believe in prayer and I believe in the Holy Ghost, and everything I have said is for the benefit of the Christian religion which I love."

He paused a moment and bowed his head as though in prayer. When he attempted to resume his address his eyes filled with tears. His voice trembled. It was with difficulty that he continued.

"I think my statements have done good. I do not care to retract anything, and I regret nothing that I have written. God bless you all."

When the professor had concluded he turned and again resumed his place upon the platform with the faculty.

Professor Pearson received the same treatment imposed upon every brave, progressive man who has dared to raise his voice against the "iron-bound bucket, the moss-covered bucket" that has hung in the well of orthodoxy since its inception.

Not only has this been true of the Methodists, but of all other denominations, and no matter how advanced become the doctrines of the pulpits, the creeds and the "original doctrines" must not be tampered with or assailed by so direct a criticism as a doubt of the special divinity of Christ. It invariably lands the doubter in the middle of the road, on the outside of the fold.

It will be noticed in the first clipping—the late one—that Mr. Pearson was pastor of the Unitarian church of Quincy, Ill., and had gone to Europe.

Spiritualism has opened its welcoming arms to the reception of more Unitarian ministers than to any other members of the profession. This seems almost the preparatory school for Spiritualist speakers, and many now holding pastorships in the Unitarian church are preaching Spiritualism pure and simple, and none deny the great underlying principles of the spiritual philosophy.

We extend a glad "hand of fellowship," ever and always to the brave and true who dare to think and do.

Where Is Heaven?

The above question has racked the brains of genius for ages. For thousands of years heaven was located immediately above the cerulean vault which bounds vision. There God dwelt in his New Jerusalem to which the good would resort after a last judgment, which was to occur at the end of time. It was described as a gorgeous city, somewhat populous; its streets paved with gold, with God seated on an ivory throne, around whom the multitude gathered and sang holy, holy through a wasteless eternity.

When science came to the front with its telescope this heaven above the clouds proved to be an intellectual mirage, an optical delusion, based on a diseased imagination.

The location of hell was discovered by a sea captain on the Mediterranean. He swore in an English court in the 16th century that he was sailing past one of the active volcanoes then emitting flame, when he saw the devil with a sinner in his arms flying through the air and dive into the crater. That affidavit of course fixed the exact location of the home of the damned. Catholic priests, well posted in such matters, corroborated the captain's oath, historians telling us priests were in the habit of taking their congregations on important occasions to the mouth of a burning crater, and there, aided by their visual organs, they made them fully conscious of the misery awaiting those who wavered in their faith. By such methods the uncultured rabble were convinced Jesus was born of an immaculate virgin.

But locating hell does not solve the problem, Where is heaven? It remained for the editor of a secular paper coming under our observation the other day, in an obituary, to supply the desired information. He said:

"The good woman has gone to her home in heaven, beyond the stars."

He did not tell in what direction she went, but it was "beyond the stars." It was Boutwell, if we remember correctly, on the impeachment trial of President Johnson in 1868, who said: "Astronomers tell us there is a hole in the heavens, obstructed by no wilderness of worlds, through which a passage can be made to the most distant star." He then proposed to hurl the President through that opening, little dreaming he would throw him into heaven.

But heaven is a long distance from us, if the journalist's idea is correct. "Sirius," says the British Encyclopedia, " is nearest of the fixed stars, and is 2,000,000,000,000 miles from our earth." It adds: "A cannon ball, continuing the same velocity it acquired when discharged, would spend almost seven hundred thousand years in reaching that distant orb." The most distant star, "beyond which is heaven," is still many times more remote. Is it probable a spirit will ever return to earth after having made such a distant journey?

We apprehend the journalist is as much mistaken in his location of heaven as were the early Christians who placed it just above the "firmament," whatever is meant by that.

Heaven, the home of the spirits, is interblended within and all around us. Spirits are invisible to our normal senses; they are creatures of greatly refined matter, duplicates of ourselves. Says Milton:

"All heart they live, all head, all eye, all ear,
All intellect, all sense; and, as they please,
They limb themselves, and color, shape, or size,
Assume, as likes them best, condense or rare."

We are content to accept Milton's views as to the character of a spirit, and do not deem it necessary to go very far away to find its home, or heaven.

Trials Refresh Heathen Faith.

"From letters received by the Church Missionary Society from Japan, it seems the severe trial through which the island empire is passing is finding expression in greater earnestness in the performance of heathen rites."

We find the above floating through the secular press without credit. Where it originated we cannot guess, but in strict harmony with views expressed in these columns recently, it is given a place, because it doubtless relates a fact. It was a Christian nation whose aggressive acts led to the war in the Orient; and it was this so-called "heathen people" who have most signally triumphed over their Christian foe. It demonstrates it is not the religious faith of a nation, the God they worship, or the prayers they offer to him, that win great battles; but it is the unflagging bravery of the men behind the guns who believe they are in the right, and do not hesitate to lay down their lives in its defense.

The article designates the Japs as "a heathen people." Christians are in the habit of characterizing all persons and all nations who do not worship their junior God, as heathen, without regard to their virtues or vices.

Buddhism was introduced into Japan, from Korea, in A. D. 552. In process of ages this system of religious faith became mingled with the Confucianism of China. Shintoism seems but a merging of these two sects into a common faith, and the ambition of the believer is to attain absolute perfection. It may be questioned whether this modified religious faith is not better adapted to those people than is Christianity. Certain it is, it has built up a great nation until within the last fifty years remote from western civilization with its depressing vices. Call them heathen if it is necessary, and if because they discard the barbarism of the Old Testament Jehovah they are called atheists, no one should object; but remember they, like the Chinese, adore their ancestors and believe the spirits of such ancestors hover over and near them through life, and assist in individual and national advancement.

False Teaching.

To deny that the Lord set aside the seventh day of the week to be observed through all time as a day of rest is to deny the Bible as inspiration. Constantine, during the fore part of the fourth century, commanded the observance of the first day of the week as a day of rest, and the Christian world accept that decree as superior to the command of God. They wholly ignore the divine authority, and repudiate his requirement as inferior to that of a Roman emperor. Worse than all, the Christian clergy cite the command of the Lord, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," and apply it to Constantine's Sunday—the day of the sun—as if that was the day God wanted kept holy. How grossly unreasonable and false our Christian teachers!

Another Object Lesson.

There is nothing that so impresses the average Spiritualist as a Well Defined Object Lesson; and this one lucidly presents the Great Service The Progressive Thinker has been to the Cause of Truth, and it should be rewarded by each one sending a new subscriber. Read what follows About Mrs. Mabel Jackman, and you will consider it an Object Lesson of Great Importance, and will appreciate more than ever the great service The Progressive Thinker has been to Pure Spiritualism. It is a Friend to the True and a Foe to the Fraud.

MABEL ABER JACKMAN.

Her Sudden and Unexpected Departure From the City—Her Exposure Here in Chicago Entitles The Progressive Thinker to the Gratitude of Every Honest Spiritualist.

Members of the Scientific Church of Christianity, Indiana avenue and Thirty-seventh street, are becoming alarmed over the absence of their spiritual head, Mrs. Mabel Aber Jackman, who was care-taker over about $300,000 worth of property belonging to members of her congregation besides being the possessor of valuable realty and stock holdings.

According to Dr. J. R. Price, 5519 Indiana avenue, the friend and adviser of Mrs. Jackman, she has gone to San Francisco with her husband. It is reported that she went away with large sums of money entrusted to her care, but members of the flock refuse to discuss the report. Many admit, however, that they are much worried.

Is Treasurer of Church.

Mrs. Jackman is treasurer of the church of which she is also the head and it is said that $50,000 that had been donated to the church vanished when she did. It is said that Mrs. Lydia A. Simmons is complaining of the disappearance of $10,000 of her money. Mrs. Simmons is the mother of the young woman who was taken out of Mrs. Jackman's care to the county hospital.

Neighbors of the "divine healer" also say that when she left Chicago the express wagon which hauled away her baggage contained six trunks of prodigious size and that those trunks contained much church property, including vestments, hangings, the famous canary birds and the apparatus with which Mrs. Jackman claimed to work her cures.

Services at Mrs. Jackman's temple have not been discontinued because of her absence, however, and Sunday night Dr. Moore had charge of a prayer meeting there. No reference was made to Mrs. Jackman's absence during the service, but after the benediction was pronounced members of the church freely expressed their wonder and alarm at the continued absence of the "healer."

The Scientific Church of Christianity is a flourishing institution and recently Mrs. Jackman's congregation vacated the ruins of Trinity church, at Twenty-fourth street and Indiana avenue, and moved to its present fine quarters farther south. This despite the fact that the police had made a sensational raid on her religious establishment.

The raid, it will be remembered, resulted from the healing treatment accorded to the daughter of Mrs. Simmons, who was later taken to the hospital. The neighbors told the police that they were much alarmed by screams that emanated from the house from time to time, and investigation by the authorities revealed the fact that the girl was slowly dying. The girl recovered at the hospital, however, and returned to Mrs. Jackman.—Chicago Chronicle, July 25, 1905.

The above is from the Chicago Chronicle of July 25, another illustration of the remarkable career of this notorious woman. At one time she was prominent as a medium and a frequent contributor to The Progressive Thinker. For a while she resided at Spring Hill, Kansas, where under the auspices of the venerable Mr. Pratt, remarkable spirit manifestations are said to have occurred. Many accounts thereof were presented to the public. Later on we published startling descriptions of her materializations; but finally she was exposed in this city. Her confederate, a woman, was detected in the act of representing herself as the materialized son of one of the sitters present—a cruel deception!

As a medium she did not then sit in the cabinet, but was a living active factor on the outside, directing the circle and welcoming the spirits. The exposure on this occasion was complete.

The Progressive Thinker has made no mistake in its battle against the fake element that has afflicted our Cause so long. Through its large circulation and commanding influence, it has set Spiritualists to thinking as never before, and the angel world is rejoicing in consequence.

Opposed to Mediums.

At the time Mrs. Jackman's bogus materializations were exposed, the cry was raised in Chicago by the rotten fake element, that The Progressive Thinker is opposed to mediums! Mrs. Jackman railed against The Progressive Thinker, raising that cry from the rostrum where she held her meetings, and her ardent admirers took up the refrain, until the whole land heard the cry, and every medium who is exposed unites with Mabel Aber Jackman in saying, "The editor of The Progressive Thinker is opposed to mediumship." On the contrary, we who have had visions and seen spirits ever since our childhood (what the world calls a medium) are THE ARDENT ADMIRER AND CHAMPION OF ALL HONEST MEDIUMS. Bear that in mind, and impress it upon every one you meet. We are, however, unqualifiedly opposed to those materializing mediums who use false whiskers, wigs, illuminated drapery, dresses and head gear to represent your spirit friends. We make this explanation so you can know how this charge originated, and those mediums who utter it, YOU MAY SET DOWN AS MISERABLE FAKES, AND DRIVE THEM FROM YOUR PRESENCE.

The Service to True Spiritualism.

It has been of PRICELESS VALUE to Spiritualists. You all can now realize the great service that The Progressive Thinker has been to the CAUSE OF TRUTH by exposing the materializing methods of Mrs. Jackman. Had not this been done she would probably have been at the head of the movement today in Chicago, her ardent admirers and friends having stolen the name of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, and commenced doing business, and had it not been for The Progressive Thinker, and Dr. G. B. Warne, who carried the case into court, and after years of litigation had the miscreants enjoined from the use of the name, our Cause would have lost the respect of all honest Spiritualists.

Dr. Warne's great struggle in suppressing that fraudulent state institution entitles him to the commendation and gratitude of all Spiritualists throughout the land. Ever since then, he, as well as the editor of this paper has heard the cry, "They are opposed to mediums!" originating, as we have said before, with Mabel Aber Jackman and the rotten gang who actually stole the name of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association.

Supposing Dr. Warne and the editor had listened to the plaintive cry of a few misguided Spiritualists, "Don't say "anything about fraud! Let it alone! "Don't stir up anything that is unclean! "Do as the churches do—don't give publicity to any rascality in our ranks! "Let Mabel Aber Jackman alone! Let "the gang go on peacefully with their "nefarious work in connection with the "stolen name—the Illinois State Spiritualist Association!"

Supposing we had heeded that cry what would have been the result? Rottenness would have prevailed in our ranks to such an extent that the angels of heaven would weep. For that one service to the Cause of Truth Dr. Warne stands forth as the unqualified champion of honest mediumship, and no one in the whole ranks of Spiritualism is entitled to greater praise than he is.

We make this explanation so that honest Spiritualists may be able to discern the fake element when you hear their denunciations.

Note From Mrs. Bliss-Green.

To the Editor:—I demand space in your paper to say to the public that Geo. B. Warne or anyone else never sent to me asking for my version of the so-called expose. I remained in Chicago until July 22. Up to the time of my departure for Chesterfield to the present time nothing has come from Geo. B. Warne relative to question, until the appearance of the story of my so-called exposure in the last issue of The Progressive Thinker. In conclusion, permit me to say that I am still a medium and intend to remain such until I pass to spirit life.

MRS. BLISS-GREEN.
Chesterfield Camp, Ind.

Mrs. Bliss-Green says that when she returns to Chicago she will have something to say in self-defense. We will be pleased to publish anything she may write showing that the exposure was not as stated by those present. She must confine herself to strictly answering the charges made, taking up each in detail. Nothing extraneous thereto will be permitted in our columns. All our readers want are the absolute facts in reference to that one seance. We shall take pleasure in having Mrs. Bliss-Green present evidence that she is entirely innocent of the charges made.

NOTE FROM DR. WARNE.

The Documents Were Sent, as Stated.

In compliance with request of Bro. Wm. Nordsted I forwarded Mrs. Bliss-Green an exact copy of the Belmont avenue seance report which The Progressive Thinker published in its last issue. I also retained a copy of my own words which accompanied same, being as follows:

"4203 Evans Avenue, Chicago,
"July 13, 1905.

"Mrs. C. Bliss-Green:—Enclosed is copy of a statement forwarded me as an officer of the Ill. S. S. A. You are invited to send your version of the Belmont avenue seance, so that both sides may be considered at the same time by the public. I am told The Progressive Thinker refused to print this matter until your side was at hand. Kindly give this prompt attention.

"Yours truly,
"GEORGE B. WARNE."

Both papers were enclosed in an envelope plainly addressed to "Mrs. C. Bliss Green, 3156 Indiana avenue, City," and were delivered at that number by the postal authorities. Mrs. Green admits she was in Chicago nine days after the letter was sent her, or until July 22, ample time within which to have made answer.

GEORGE B. WARNE.

Extraordinary Manifestation.

A Passenger, Yet a Spirit Direct From the Celestial Regions, as Related in "Metapsychical Phenomena," Lately Translated.

Professor Richet narrates that he was staying at Carqueiranne, in October, 1900, when he received an extraordinary letter from a lady of his acquaintance who had only very lately come to live in Paris. This lady, whom he calls Mme. X., had lived up to that time a retired life in a convent, and had only known Professor Richet for a few months. In none of their conversations had the professor told her intimate details of his life, and she was wholly unacquainted with his private history.

The letter of Mme. X. stated that she had left Paris for a month in the forest of Fontainbleau, and that during the railway journey a strange event had befallen her. At the station of Melun it seemed to her that the door of her carriage opened, that a strange man entered it, and, sitting opposite to her, immediately began to talk of Professor Richet. She appeared to have been aware through it all that she was listening to the words of a ghost, but she experienced neither horror nor fear, and listened patiently to what the apparition had to say. He told her that he had been in his lifetime a great friend of Professor Richet, whom he had called "Carlos" and by whom he had always been called "Tony," and further told her that he was very well acquainted with Fontainbleau, and would accompany her in all her walks through the forest.

This was as much as the first letter told, but the letters which followed it quickly, one after another, revealed to Professor Richet a strange and moving story. A few of the passages given in the English version of Mme. X.'s letters are as follows:

"Tony showed me a tree today on which were engraved the letters A. B. and a date 1880 or 1883—the last figure was indistinct. Under the letters A. B. was the name Jucie. * * * He says he collaborated with you in some work. He says that when he was dead you went into his death chamber and kissed him on the forehead. He had not been previously ill—a feeling of suffocation in the chest, and that was all. He was only 30 or 32 years old when he died. * * * He adored Lucie, who seems to have been very charming, for Antonio (Tony) shows me her portrait—a medallion or a locket, which he used to wear—in which she seemed to have beautiful dark eyes and hair.

"I think Antoine lived a long time with Lucie at Fontainebleau; they were sadly happy there. The house they stayed at is no longer inhabited. It was a red and white cottage, quite close to the forest, which was just behind it. * * * The house stood alone; a tramway passes by there today.

"Tony also speaks about his father. His father loved his own fireside. He once lost a lot of money, when Antoine was grown up. * * * A short time before he died—a Wednesday—you and he were at a banquet together and drank each other's health. Tony then told you that he had not been feeling well and that he was in great need of a holiday. * * * Antoine told me again today that he loved Lucie dearly, 'and,' he said, 'I still watch over her, even now. Tell her no evil will ever befall her."

Such is a very brief and hasty summary of the revelations made to a solemn lady from a French convent by a spirit walking in the forest of Fontainebleau. For those of us who read them they have the color of romance—the pleasant, eerie feeling of a fireside ghost story. But for Professor Richet, the brilliant French physiologist and a member of the Academy of Medicine, they have an interest not only scientific, but one poignantly human and real.

He tells us that he had a friend whose name was Antoine B., and he says: "I am particularly anxious to point out a fact of which I am absolutely certain, which is that I had never pronounced the name of my friend Antoine B. in the presence of Mme. X."

Professor Richet found out, to his own surprise, that he and Antoine B. had been to Fontainebleau together in the year 1883.

"It is quite true," he tells us, "that, alone among all my friends, Antoine called me Carlos, and that I, on my side, called him Tony. This is a fact known only to me. It is also perfectly correct—and I am not aware of having related this fact to any person whatsoever—that when Antoine died, stricken to death in a few hours by a disease of the heart, I went into his death chamber and kissed him on the brow.

"He was 32 years old when he died, and his death was almost instantaneous. It would be impossible to describe his death more correctly than Mme. X. does in the words, 'A feeling of suffocation in the chest, and that was all.' In fact, toward 11 o'clock in the night he was seized by a thoracic oppression which made such rapid progress that he expired at 4 o'clock in the morning."

Regarding the "Lucie" of Mme. X.'s visions, Professor Richet tells us that the name of Antoine's wife was Marie, but that Tony freuently used to say to her, "What a pity you are not called Lucie!" It was his favorite name. The description of this Lucie, says Professor Richet, is exact.

The story related by Mme. X.'s ghost, in fact, is so wonderfully like the truth known to Professor Richet that we need not trouble to relate further similarities. But the story is incomplete—since the chief interest of it is Mme. X.—without the following postcript to the narration of Professor Richet: "One evening in May, 1903," he wrote, "I was dining with Mme X. and her family. * * Toward the close of the evening, shortly before I left, Mme. X. pronounced the following words—words which I wrote down among my notes as soon as I reached home: 'I see a woman standing near me. She has gray hair, she is about 50 years of age, but looks older than she really is. Her hair is quite gray. I believe it is Mme B. (Antoine's widow, though I am not quite sure yet. I see the figure 7 with her, which probably means that she will die in seven months or on the 7th of some near month.'

"Mme. B.," continues our professor, "died within seven weeks after Mme. X.'s prediction, on Tuesday, June 30, 1903.

"Mme. B. had black hair. I, who knew her well, had never noticed any gray in her hair; I did not know she was gray. Now, a few days before her illness took a serious turn, one of the members of my family, who had just been paying Mme. B. a visit, said to me: 'Mme. B. does not dye her hair any longer, so that one can now see how very gray she is!' Here," says the professor, "is a veritable premonition."

Of course, the whole interest centers in Mme. X. In some way, science thinks, she must have enjoyed the use of faculties, howbeit unconsciously, of which the normal mind has no knowledge. Psychical science both in England and France, is endeavoring to discover what those faculties are. But in France the ghost is not admitted. The spirit does not return to speak and show itself to human sense. In ourselves, in the undiscovered uses and powers of the amazing human mind, are all the ghosts and apparitions which have ever affrighted the children of men.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

He Is Simply Ignorant.

"The man who denies the Phenomena of Spiritualism to-day is not entitled to be called a skeptic; he is simply ignorant; and it would be a hopeless task to attempt to enlighten him."—T. J. Hudson, "Law of Psychic Phenomena," p. 206.

MRS. NETTIE HOWELL

Highly Honored at the Mineral Park Camp.

Bright and beautiful as is almost every day in balmy California, dawned the Socialists' Day at the camp. The many friends of Mrs. Nettie Howell, the soul of the camp, had a special matter in hand, as it had been learned that to-day marked another milestone in the mortal pilgrimage of the good sister. For some days secret plans had been working and to-day they must be culminated; great care must be taken for Mrs. Howell is everywhere present attending to the needs of the camp and the comfort of the campers. After the evening meal the dining room was transformed into a reception and banquet hall, a large table was spread and loaded with good things to eat, ferns and flowers—a profusion of pansies—brightened every corner magically touched by the deft hands of Mrs. Adelaide K. Brooks. A host of the friends arrived and by a pretext of business Mrs. Howell was brought to the room, escorted to the seat of honor made beautiful with a profusion of flowers, as all arose and greeted her, "Who are we. Look and see. We are the happy Spiritualists, don't you see." Mr. John W. Ring then accused Mrs. Howell of many things, such as doing good, promulgating Spiritualism, running camp-meetings and in a thousand ways making the world bright and beautiful and people happy. Mr. J. L. Dryden of San Diego, was the first to offer defense. Mrs. Ada S. Horman, Mrs. Augusta Armstrong, Mrs. Kate Hoskins, Mrs. R. Cowell of Oakland, and others endeavored to defend Mrs. Howell, but rather proved her "guilty" of every accusation. The court decided that since Mrs. Howell was "guilty" of every charge preferred, that she should be "tagged," and with impressive words, Mrs. R. Cowell "tagged" Mrs. Howell with a gold badge pin on the front of which was inscribed "Spiritualist Camp-meeting, California, July 18, 1905," and on the back, "Presented to Mrs. Nettie Howell as a token of appreciation for her devotion to Spiritualism." Mrs. Howell was very much moved but responded very gracefully in her own inimitable way. Refreshments were served and a most delightful evening was spent. J. W. RING.

Working During Sleep.

Some men have done their best mental work while "asleep." Condillac states that while writing his "Course of Studies," he was frequently compelled to leave a chapter incomplete and retire to bed, and that on awaking he found it, on more than one occasion, finished in his head. In like manner, Condoreet would sometimes leave his complicated calculations unfinished, and after retiring to rest would find their results unfolded to him in his dreams. La Fontaine and Voltaire both composed verses in their sleep which they could not repeat on awaking. Samuel Johnson relates that he once in a dream had a contest of wit with some other person, and that he was very mortified by imagining that his antagonist had the better of him.

The work done partakes in many cases more of the nature of imaginative composition than of scientific calculation. Thus, a stanza of excellent verse is in print, which Sir John Herschel is said to have composed while asleep, and to have recollected when he awoke. Goethe often set down on paper during the day thoughts and ideas which had presented themselves to him during sleep on the preceding night. Coleridge is said to have composed his fragment of Kubla Khan during sleep.

He had one evening been reading Purchas's Pilgrim; some of the romantic incidents struck his fancy; he went to sleep, and his busy mind composed Kubla Khan. When he awoke in the morning, he wrote out what his mind had invented in sleep, until interrupted by a visitor, with whom he conversed for an hour on business matters; but, alas! he could never again recall the thread of the story, and Kubla Khan remains a fragment.

Still more curious, however, are those instances in which the sleeper, after composing or speculating, gets up in a state of somnambulism, writes the words on paper, goes to bed and to sleep again, and knows nothing about it when he awakes. Such cases, the authenticity of which is beyond dispute, point to an activity of muscles as well as of brain, and to a correctness of movement which is marvelous when we consider that the eyes are generally closed under these circumstances. The late Rev. Mr. Spurgeon in his sleep prepared a sermon which he preached the next day, and he declared that if was not inferior to his usual productions. Mr. Spurgeon's intellectual work on the night referred to was done without that particular consciousness which was suspended when he went to sleep, and which returned when he awoke.

Many men have performed some of their greatest intellectual feats while they were asleep. Zeno recommended an examination of dreams as a means of acquiring knowledge of the true self. Although dreams are often, indeed in most cases probably, as Dryden says, but "a medley of disjointed things," they sometimes show evidence of intellectual capacity which surprises the waking self. Mathematicians while asleep have dreamed the correct solution of problems that had baffled them while awake, and authors have been in dreams directed to authorities which they had vainly sought to find when regularly engaged in their work.

Dr. Gregory states that ideas and phraseology occurred to him in dreams which were so apt that he made use of them in giving lectures before his college classes; and Sir Thomas Browne composed comedies in his dreams, which amused him greatly when he awoke. The dreamer often sees beautiful pictures, hears melodious strains of music, and feels, as it seems, the presence of departed or distant friends, as strongly and as vividly as if the external organs were in active exercise. Taste and smell are in a like manner excited in sleep.

The facts show that the activity of the organs of sense is not necessary to excite those impressions which were originally received through the senses, showing, too, that what is perceived is not the external object, but the effect which the object has produced upon the mind—a symbolical representation in consciousness, mental in its nature, of the externality. And thus, when the avenues of the body are closed, the impressions may be as vivid as when the senses are alive to the outward world; and, what is more wonderful, the imagination may, during this time, indulge in flights of fancy, the reasoning powers may be exerted in solving the most abstruse problems, or memory may be exercised in recalling from the dim past some long-forgotten incident.

Where there is thought there is consciousness. How can the mind prepare a sermon, or work out a mathematical problem, without being conscious of the process? The fact that it does not come into the ordinary chain of mental operations, would seem to imply that there is a deeper or a higher consciousness which is active even when the conscious life, as it is known to us, is suspended in sleep. The ordinary consciousness may be but a phase of a larger life, the more superficial aspects of which only come above the threshold of the "waking state" into ordinary thought and conduct.

Is not every person largely influenced by the so-called unconscious thinking that is done in sleep and in the waking state? How many great discoveries, wonderful inventions, profound conceptions, and deeds of sacrifice and heroism may be, to a considerable extent, attributable to the subliminal processes of the mind? In some cases, the individual but carries out unconsciously what was started in a conscious or semi-conscious state, as was probably the case with Mr. Spurgeon, who says that on going to the table he "felt a train of thought come back" to him with the notes, and that a "glimmering consciousness of the truth [of what had occurred] dawned upon" him.

In the depths of human consciousness are powers and potentialities of which people generally take no note. They are manifested in a way to attract attention only rarely, because perhaps such manifestation requires peculiar conditions that rarely exist. The conditions must be such as to admit of the exercise of a power which perhaps all men and women possess potentially, but with nearly all of whom it remains in a latent condition through life, only here and there, now and then, flashing into common consciousness.

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

"That Undiscovered Country."

It is a common impression among the laity that the oft-repeated expression, "That undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns," is from the Bible and therefore that fact or supposed fact settles the question of spirit return in the negative.

It is well to correct the erroneous impression of the source of this quotation. It is from the immortal Shakspeare, instead of the Bible. But Shakspeare, however great, did not "know it all." He was not infallible. There are some things that even his philosophy did not grasp or dream of. While we know as yet comparatively little about "that country," it has been discovered, and its denizens are surely opening up communication with this.

The above mentioned quotation from Shakspeare is altogether out of harmony with other portions of his Hamlet, which certainly suggests the possibility at least, of the "return of travelers" from that country.

But, granting that the quotation is Biblical in its origin, it would not be rendered any more true or correct in consequence, for we now know that not even the Bible is infallible.

Buelah Camp, Ohio.

Central Ohio Spiritual Camp Association closed a very successful season, June 25. All speakers and mediums filled their engagements according to programme, and harmony prevailed throughout the meeting. Buelah camp was a success, both spiritually and financially. Since closing, Prof. L. M. Lydy, our worthy vice-president has been called to the higher life, he having arisen July 13, 1905. Much of the success of our meeting was due to his official work. The officers extend hearty thanks to all the co-workers in the camp and to the editors of the Spiritual and local press who have so generously assisted in the work of the camp.

MRS. HATTIE G. WEBSTER, Secretary.
Columbus, Ohio.

Onset Camp, Mass.

Notwithstanding it was a rainy day, Onset opened its meeting before two large audiences, July 23. Dr. Geo. A. Fuller spoke in the morning. Mrs. N. J. Willis was the speaker in the afternoon. There were three band concerts. Mr. A. J. Maxham was the vocalist.

There are more people here than is usual at the opening. Everything looks like a successful season. HATCH.

LAKE BRADY CAMP, OHIO.

Brief Account of the Work and Workers

July 23 saw the largest crowd the new camp ever had. Besides the speaker of the day, Mrs. Morrill of Grand Rapids, Mich., we had present Mrs. Mattie E. Hull of Whitewater, Wis., and Mrs. Nina D. Challen of Toledo, Ohio, to help with the exercises of the day. In the absence of Mr. Hunger, our worthy president, Mrs. Holles acted as chairman, in which capacity she is very efficient. Mrs. Mattie Hull opened the morning session with an earnest invocation, Mrs. Flora Russell followed by rendering a solo, "Where the Roses Never Fade," in her usual pleasing manner, after which Mrs. Morrill was entranced by Robert Ingersoll, as had been previously announced. He took for his subject "The Advancement of Religion," beginning by outlining the religion of the ancients and describing the evolution from the old creed-bound belief to the present liberal ideas. He held the large audience from start to finish with his flow of eloquence and logical reasoning. Several in the audience who had heard the great agnostic before his transition, said they recognized his style of reasoning and forcible delivery.

The lecture was followed by Mrs. Challen with a few remarks and messages. She also opened the afternoon session with an invocation. By request of Mrs. Morrill, Mrs. Russell sang "Passing But Once This Way." Mrs. Morrill's guides took for their topic "The Reformation," telling of the wonful changes from 1450 to 1550 in the religious world then touching upon the various important points down to the present time. After the lecture she gave a number of messages which were as usual very convincing. She goes from here to Maple Dell camp for one week.

Scintillations From The Pilgrim's Pen.

In War Paint and with Raised Tomahawk, Figuratively Considered, Dr. Peebles writes of Durgha Prasad, of Hindu Castes, the Bubonic Plague, Hindu Speakers at Camp Meetings, Animal Flesh-Eating, the Unity of Races, Etc.

It may be well to here reiterate, that while the pages of The Progressive Thinker are invitingly open to materialists, Spiritualists, scientists and moral philosophers of every type, believing as we do in the potency of truth—believing that truth never suffers from the most crucial investigation; yet we must be held responsible for only such words as we personally indite, quoting in the meantime as applicable these words of Herbert Spencer: "Whoever hesitates to utter that which he thinks the highest truth, lest it should be too much in advance of the time, may reassure himself by looking at his acts from an impersonal point of view. He, with all his aspirations and beliefs, is not an accident, but a product of the time. He must remember that while he is a descendant of the past, he is a parent of the future; and that his thoughts are as children born to him, which he may not carelessly let die. He, like every other man, may properly consider himself as one of the myriad agencies through whom works the unknown cause, and when the unknown cause produces in him a certain belief, he is thereby authorized to profess and speak and act out that belief. The highest truth he sees he will fearlessly utter; knowing that, let what may come out of it, he is there playing his part in the world—the right of intellectual independence."—Editor.

In a most interesting letter just received from that eminent Hindu writer, author and editor, Durgha Prasad, residing in the Punjab, India, I am informed through him, and more especially through an exhaustive pamphlet, that a number of learned Brahmins of Bombay, Calcutta and other of India's cities, have combined to probe to the bottom, and expose the theosophy introduced into India by Madam Blavatsky and Col. Olcott; its origin in a Spiritualist family; its Blavatsky miracles; its pretensions; its inner-circle teachings; its misstatements; its internal contentions; its ignorance of the Sanscrit and of true Hinduism itself. One of these Brahmanic pamphlets, while dignified and erudite, is severely scorching in language. It lies before me. Truth is fearless.

The Bubonic Plague.

This Hindu Prasad further says that the plague is again in some parts of India on the increase, and that the official report of the British secretary states that since 1901, 1,022,290 have died of this disease. What a shocking statement! This disease, like the small-pox, is the child of filth, unfit diet and impure air—in a word, non-sanitation. It affects mostly the poorer classes. All efforts to check it by vaccinating, inoculation of serums, have proved a stupendous failure. The real remedy is cleanliness, hygiene, plenty of pure, fresh air and cheerful spirits.

In the correspondence with this Hindu Vedantist, he considers it questionable if ever a "genuine Brahmin, Nada Brahma, from the loins of a Brahmin family, ever visited America." If so, they lose their caste. Here are his verbatim words: "Brahmins who go to Europe or America are out-casted by the Hindus in almost every province of India; and if returning they have to undergo a ceremony, or series of ceremonies, to regain their caste. It is to bathe in the Ganges, etc. It is an established rule that our countrymen returning from England and coming to the Punjab, break their journey at Hardwar to get purified."

When Dr. Dunn and myself visited Benares, we went down very early one morning to bathe in the Ganges, and while bathing we saw the corpses of two adult persons and three children floating down the stream. We felt none the cleaner for our baths. Thirty years may have worked great changes, however, in Hindu lands, a vast region peopled with nearly 300,000 000 of human beings. It gratifies me to say that I have met many admirable Hindu characters. They are our elder brothers—Aryan brothers.

Hindu Speakers at Camp-Meetings.

It has been a sort of "fad" in the past years to get a Hindu speaker (Ritambharaprajna—truth-supporting) togged up in Oriental attire, to expound and exploit the Madhubhumibay (second stage of the Yoga) to occupy camp-meeting platforms where they relieve themselves of a mountain of long-suppressed volubility; and some of our sisters and weak-minded brothers will look up and exclaim in sweet lute-like tones, "How lovely!" Wasn't he just lovely!" Shades of Wright, Lockwood and Colville, where are you? Is it extravagant to say that there is more wisdom excreted from the perspiring armpits of Hudson Tuttle, Lyman C. Howe, Dean Clarke and others, than flows from the mouths of these gaudily-decorated, word-painting Sannyasins?

Meeting an American-traveled Hindu in a London vegetarian restaurant, we had an hour of straightforward conversation about India, America, their religions, their institutions, their customs, and their future. He pronounced "Spiritualism a superstition that India had outgrown hundreds of years ago." All mediums, he affirmed and re-affirmed, who "were not impostors were self-hypnotized," and the phenomena were "nothing but black magic, and old in India." Of course, our talk was spicy and pointed, if not bordering a bit at times upon the psychological bitterness of sarcasm. We agreed, however, that vegetables, and grains, and nuts, and fruits were better foods than the corpses of murdered animals, such as trichina-affected hogs, or tuberculosis-infected cows. The longer an animal has been dead, the less vitality—less life-force, there is in its corpse-carcass. I use smoothe, mild language, so as to give no unnecessary offense—but actually, I have seen hanging in meat-market, dead birds, fowls, meats, fly-specked, turning blue with decaying rottenness. All of you who eat this meat-market putrefying food, raise your hands!

What Swami Abhedananda Thinks and Writes of Spiritualism.

There is food for serious thought in a book (pages 11-14) by Swami Abhedananda, published by the Vedantic Society, (See London Light, Sept. 24). This Swami, who has figured extensively at Spiritualist camp-meetings, writes:

"Having spent some time with the mediums of all kinds that exist in America, I wish to say a few words regarding my experience. I have been invited by the Spiritualists to speak for them, and to attend their seances. I have accepted their invitations with great pleasure, in order to make some investigations for my own satisfaction. I have not found a single spirit in any seance nor a single medium, who could answer my questions satisfactorily.

"I have asked them about the life after death, the origin of the soul, the true nature of the soul, its relation to the Universal Spirit, etc.; such questions, however, have never been answered by them; on the contrary, on many occasions they have confessed their ignorance. * * * On another occasion I had a long talk with a spirit, and asked her many questions regarding the mode of living in the spirit world, and her answers to my questions were perfectly idiotic. The spirit said she went to school and studied books. I asked her, 'What books do you read? Can you mention the name of any book you read?' 'No,' she said, 'I do not know the names.'

"Supposing all the phenomena of Spiritism to be true and genuine, what have the Spiritualists gained by those communications, outside of the satisfaction of their idle curiosity? Have they learned any of the higher truths? Have they understood any of the laws that govern the spiritual nature of man? Have they known why human beings come to this earth, and why they go away suddenly? I have asked many of the mediums, as well as their spirit guides, and have found that they do not know anything regarding the origin of the soul. Therefore, how can we expect to know the absolute truth from these Spiritualists whose controls and guides themselves are ignorant, deceitful, and not wiser than the mediums? Vain is the hope of these Spiritualists who expect to know the absolute truth through communications from earth-bound spirits."

Spiritualists, how do you enjoy being told by a Hindu that your Spiritualism is "superstition," or "black magic," and that your spirit guides are "ignorant" or "deceitful"? What do certain camp-meeting committees pay this class of Hindu speakers? How many of them would it take to convert all intelligent Americans to Spiritualism and its germane truths?

Do not charge me with injustice to Aryan progenitors. Neither country nor color carry weight with those who are influenced more by the spirit than the flesh. I am no bigot. Some Brahmins have whiter, clearer skins than some American brunettes, New England born. Neither accuse me of prejudice against the Hindus or any of the genuine Swamis of India—Swami means Master, and is quite generally self-prefixed, as is "Prof." or "Rev." in this country.

As a whole, I hold not only Vedantists, but the Hindu characters in high esteem, and many, I am proud to confess, are my personal friends, who summer and winter under those Indian skies. Briefly, unblushingly stated, I am a Vedantist, and lifted up out of the mire of ecclesiasticism, and all theological superstitions, Vedantism, Spiritualism, and the illumined Christianities of the Christ and of the Buddha, constitute a trinity in unity. They are all good. The Veda, the Tri-Pitake and the New Testament are all inspired because their writers were, yet occupying different planes of consciousness. All tribes, nations and races are one in origin, and during the ceaseless cycles of the ages, destined I believe to be one in destiny. The great words of to-day are brotherhood, arbitration, fusion—fusion in thought and deed for the common good.

OUR GOVERNMENT.

The Essential Feminine Qualities Are Lacking in Our Government.

Henry B. Blackwell of Boston, in his address at the annual convention of the National Woman Suffrage movement, which has just closed in Portland, Ore., gave some sound reasons why women should be given a voice in governmental affairs. He said in part:

"A purely masculine government does not fully represent the people. The feminine qualities are lacking. It is a maxim among political thinkers that every class that votes makes itself felt in the government. Women as a class, differ more widely from men than any other class of men differ from any other. To give the ballot to merchants and lawyers and deny it to farmers would be class legislation, which is always wise and unjust. But there is no class legislation so complete as an aristocracy of sex. Men have qualities in which they are superior to women; women have qualities in which they are superior to men. Both are needed. Women are less belligerent than men, more peaceable, temperate, chaste, economical and law-abiding, with a higher standard of morals and a deeper sense of religious obligations. And these are the very qualities we need to add to the aggressive and impulsive qualities of men.

"Now the primary object of government is to keep the peace. War is the greatest curse that afflicts humanity. A purely masculine government never did and never will keep the peace. A government of men and women is needed in order to establish international courts of arbitration, and so make war and bloodshed forever unnecessary. A battleship lasts only fifteen years, costs more than all the land, buildings and equipments of Harvard University, Hampton and Tuskegee Colleges combined.

"We need an extended suffrage to check the growing corrupt use of money by trusts and corporate monopolies to control legislation. We must create a voting constituency too numerous to be bribed or coerced or manipulated in order to rescue our people from the encroachments of the money power."

Sundry Interesting Topics Discussed.

An Old Worker Visited—"No Frauds Need Apply"—The "Shepherdess of Paradise" Missing.

I found opportunity recently for a pleasant call upon Wm. Longhurst, who is now one of the two hundred and fifty-seven inmates of the "Home" under Episcopalian watchcare at the corner of Ellis avenue and Fifty-fifth street, Chicago.

This veteran brother, now in his eighty-third year, was long identified with the activities of South Side Spiritualism in our city, especially at No. 77 Thirty-first street during the presidency at that center of Brother Druliner and his predecessor, Brother Seckner.

Brother Longhurst is known to all his acquaintances as an outspoken Spiritualist of radical ideas. The truth of control by outside intelligences has been many times demonstrated through his own personality by strong Indian forces, as well as by an inspirational one understood to be that of Thomas Paine. I recall some very sudden, forcible and amusing seizures of his organism at gatherings in my own home and also in conference meetings. He was powerless to withstand the wave when it burst upon him with a cyclonic force, which sometimes shocked the nerves of his auditors, while any of them still accepting established orthodox views were often sorely tried by the criticisms of those ideas voiced through him. He seems to have enlisted for life service in the battle for Spiritualism, for a letter written about fifty years ago published in Emma Hardinge's Modern American Spiritualism, says of him:

"Mr. William Longhurst, formerly of Buffalo, a good speaking medium, now resides at Dubuque, Iowa, and has succeeded in getting up quite an interest."

As juror on a murder case in the latter city he saved from prison, if not from a severer penalty, an unfortunate young woman charged with the death of her own offspring, by insisting upon his right to question several of the witnesses himself, bringing out vital information not reached by lawyers for both prosecution and defense. He was led by an insistent impression to leave important business as an architect and journey two hundred miles and upon his arrival in Dubuque was just in time to be summoned for service on that jury.

The February number of the Occidental Mystic, published by Arthur S. Howe every month at No. 6 Cottage Row, San Francisco, recently came into my hands bringing a refreshing and commendable breeze of conviction in these words:

"Reputable mediums can secure advertising space by addressing the publisher. No others need apply. We can not conscientiously stand for truth in our editorial columns and at the same time advertise fraud." The moral heroism of such an utterance should save that publication from the graveyard of failure where several California predecessors in the advocacy of Spiritualism have been entombed in recent years. Brother Howe is a member of the official board of the California S. S. A., and should have the financial support of every honest Spiritualist on the entire Pacific Coast.

President Barrett recently went before the city council of Los Angeles upon the question of charging mediums a license fee, and urged that body to strike from the existing ordinance the words "clairvoyants, clairaudients, mediums and prophets," exempting those workers from the tax just as the Catholic, Protestant and Liberal clergymen go unburdened, while our own are left on the level of the saloon keepers and subjected to police domination.

Note the reply he received: "SEVERAL MEMBERS OF THE CITY COUNCIL ASSURED ME THEY HAD NO WISH TO DEAL UNJUSTLY BY OUR PEOPLE, AND THAT IF WE WOULD CLEAN OUR OWN HOUSE NONE OF OUR TRUE AND WORTHY PEOPLE WOULD BE TROUBLED."

Here is a lesson for Spiritualists the country over. Counterfeit mediums want the license tax because it will lessen competition from genuine psychics, who can not afford to pay it, while they will also have a greater measure of freedom from prosecution by city officials for getting money under false pretenses. Their confidence game will then have the sanction of the municipal law makers.

Attention, members of the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association! A sad loss and a sore bereavement has befallen a sister sect of our state. Chicago dailies announce that the "Church of Scientific Christianity," of Chicago, cannot find its "Shepherdess of Paradise," Mabel Aber Jackman. Coincidently Edward E. Jackman is also lost. In addition, $50,000 is reported to have dematerialized. As a token of fraternal sympathy with the new denomination in its darkest hours, you are hereby urged to hang crape upon your door knobs, clothe yourselves in sackcloth and ashes and forward resolutions of condolence to the Light of Truth for the ensuing thirty days. Has that publication's office been searched for its seraphic protege? God save Australia!

THE LATEST REVIEW.

Not Exactly in the Line of the "Higher Criticism."

In hunting for bright lessons in ancient literature, one often comes across many ridiculous things. Let us take the "Lord's Prayer" for instance, where the early Roman, who manufactured said prayer, feared and revered a mangod like many of their followers do today. They claimed it was a "him," that he lived in heaven, while at the same time they claimed that he was omnipresent; and that he was their father, which left them in the same predicament as Paddy's goat about his father, as they had never seen him, nor had they ever heard of any one else who had, except Moses, and he was no Christian.

Now if their presumed father was the owner (not a squatter or pre-empter, of it all, and it was his undisputed kingdom, why did they pray for his kingdom to come?

If his will was not done, it was his own fault, as he was considered almighty.

"As it is in heaven" is added. Well, if the work in heaven is exemplary, then the "Psychological Crime" and Brother Peebles' late works must be unconstitutional.

"Give us this day our daily bread," is their next desire. Why don't they work for it like honest men? After a while they may want butter also, and ice cream. If they expected to get what they prayed for, and being good providers, they ought to have added, and give us bread enough for to-morrow, or enough to last over Sunday.

"Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." This part must have been of late manufacture, as the herder of Egypt and Southern Europe had no fences, and in consequence no fence law, and there could be no trespass. If the sentence was written "sin," as in the German and Scandinavian languages, instead of trespass, those early Romans had many; two of which are very prominent, namely, one great sin in writing this prayer, and the other, by putting long skirts on women to designate the mark of servility, which disgrace is charged up against them to this day.

"Lead us not into temptation." This must have been a prayer to their devil, as he, poor fellow, their imagination's creation, is claimed to be their tempter from Adam to Paddy Rourke. (The said Paddy took no blame to himself; he said it was bad whisky.)

"But free us from evil" is added to the sentence. The greatest evil a Romanist fears is ghosts—the holy ghost included; and it seems useless to offer such a prayer, as millions of their own tribe have become ghosts since the monks manufactured this prayer; and then they strew laurel, lilies and adoration as a finishing touch, just like an artisan ends his frugal meal in a Chinese restaurant with ice cream and pie.

AS WE GROW OLD.

As we grow old—as all must do—
And life takes on a sweeter hue,
Things long forgotten come to cheer
The burden of each passing year,
And, as they one by one unfold,
Give recompense for growing old.

Our happy childhood days of yore
Unlock themselves from memory's store,
And once again we know the joys
We had when little girls and boys,
Without the after-sorrows rolled,
But put away when we grow old.

Again as merry tots we play,
And in the daisy meadows stray,
And bake our mud pies in the sun,
And home from school delighted run;
Again the fairy tales are told—
We all grow young when we grow old.

Kneeling before our cribs we see Ourselves in child's simplicity
Lisping our "Now I lay me," while
Dear mother, with her loving smile,
Bestows her good-night kiss to hold
More sacred still when we grow old.

Again we're in our childhood's home,
Without a wish to ever roam;
The dear old pictures and the clock,
The chair in which we loved to rock
While mother held us, we behold
With eager eyes when we grow old.

Once more we hear the birds that sung
Around our door when we were young,
And see the garden, yes, and smell
Its flowers. At the dear old well
We quaff its crystal water cold
With added thirst when we grow old.

Once more up in our high-chair seat
We feast on mush and milk so sweet,
And taste the cookies mother made.
Again, by her dear hands arrayed,
We march to Sunday-school inscrolled
Upon our hearts when we grow old.

As we grow old—as all must do—
Our childhood pleasures we review,
And in those happy days we seem
To live again all in a dream;
But 'tis a dream most sweet to hold—
When we grow young by growing old.

—H. C. Dodge.

TRUE CHARITY.

I gave a beggar from my little store
Of well earned gold. He spent the shining ore
And came again, and yet again, still cold
And hungry as before.

I gave a thought; and through that thought of mine
He found himself, the man, supreme, divine,
Fed, clothed and crowned with blessings manifold
And now he begs no more.

REMARKABLE INVENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342R, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

W. V. Nicum writes: "A few of the leading citizens of Dayton, Ohio have organized an association called 'Unity League,' which does not represent or adhere in strict accord to any particular church or ism in the world and yet represents all of them in so far as they obtain truth. Meetings will be held every Sunday evening. Various speakers will be presented throughout the year and a variety of topics of interest will be discussed and thus if possible disseminate truth wherever it may be found without conflicting with any religious views. The following is clipped from the Dayton Journal: "A very successful and interesting meeting of the Unity League was held last night at their new hall, 201 North Williams street. Mr. W. V. Nicum occupied the platform, and there was complete harmony between the speaker and his audience. Mr. Nicum's address was an earnest plea for and promise of individual freedom, for all who have the courage to stand upon their own feet in matters of morals and ethics. He gave strong emphasis to the idea upon which the league has been formed, assuring the utmost liberty of thought and expression of all phases of opinion upon the broadest lines. The general feeling was that the new league had been very successfully launched, with bright prospects for the future. Another meeting will be held at the same place next Sunday night to which the public is cordially invited.'"

O. Merritt writes: "It has been customary for our association to hold public meetings once a month, but the present month we were without a speaker with whom we wished to appear in public, so we concluded to hold a parlor meeting with home talent. Mr. and Mrs. Danstrong kindly gave us the use of their parlors, as they have done many times before, in the past fifteen years, where were congregated about forty ladies and gentlemen. Brother Robert Smuce, of Rockford, Ill., delivered the lecture, this being his first attempt outside his home circle. He did exceedingly well. Everyone was well pleased, so much so that we have had many inquiries as to when he will be here again. Mrs. West, of Elgin, was message bearer; she seemed at her best. All messages being recognized, and all receiving messages were pleased. The secret of our grand good meeting was—perfect harmony. Harmony always brings good results."

A. A. Averill writes from Lynn, Mass: "The visit of Rev. May S. Pepper to Unity Camp created a revival of interest in our midst. The wonderful manifestation of spirit power given through the method of reading sealed letters, and the astonishing accuracy of the messages given by Mrs. Pepper converts skeptics into believers wherever she goes. On July 9, a very large audience gathered, but on the 16th the largest number of people that ever visited the Camp on any Sunday, was present. President Caird made a short address before the lecture, stating that it was the desire of the association to erect an enclosed auditorium, with comfortable seats, and asked the co-operation of the public to that end, which appeal met with a very liberal response, resulting in a contribution, started with a generous sum by Mrs. Pepper, of $165, for that purpose. The popularity of this resort increases every season, the attendance this season being the largest we ever had, and we feel the need of a larger auditorium, one that shall be more protection in case of rain or very cold weather, and strong efforts are being made to collect the necessary funds to build such a one. Mrs. S. C. Cunningham, of Cambridge, another one of our most popular test mediums, was with us on July 23, and although it was a very cold, unpleasant day, the seats were more than filled, proving the esteem in which Mrs. Cunningham is held by the people of Massachusetts. She will be followed by Miss Harlow on the 30th; Mr. and Mrs. Kates, August 6, and 13, and Mrs. Richmond, of Chicago, the 20th and 27th."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

PROF. LOCKWOOD AT LILY DALE.—The many friends of Prof. Lockwood may be glad to learn that he is at Lily Dale giving a free course of lectures on "The Spiritual Hypothesis of Nature. These discourses are claimed by all who hear them to be among the most instructive and interesting of any given. The friends are invited to come to Lily Dale and hear them.

HELEN STUART RICHINGS, who has been in the far Northwest for several years, is returning to the lecture platform, and desires to correspond with societies wishing the services of an inspirational lecturer, psychometrist and dramatic artist. Terms most reasonable, especially for long engagements. Address P. O. Box 115, Seattle, Wash.

James R. Coutts writes from Butte, Montana: "The organized Spiritualists of Butte (and we are the only society chartered under the State Spiritualist Association in this city), wish to express through the columns of The Progressive Thinker our approval of the way in which Rev. Harry J. Moore and Mrs. Eva McCoy conduct their meetings. The efforts of these two indefatigable workers have been fraught with much good to Spiritualists in general, and to our local society in particular and we look forward with enthusiasm to their return during the month of August."

Mrs. Hamilton Gill, the well-known test medium, 522 W. Monroe street, Chicago, has gone to Grand Ledge camp for one week. Mrs. Gill will then spend the following three or four weeks at Island Lake camp, Michigan.

Mrs. L. D. Everett writes from Milwaukee, Wis.: "We have Mr. and Mrs. Noyes, of Utica, N. Y., with us for the month of July. The audiences were large and some of the best people of the city were present. Their work has given entire satisfaction. Mr. Noyes is a forcible speaker, and Mrs. Noyes is a fine message bearer. They will close with us July 30, and go for a short time to Wonewoc camp."

Dr. and Mrs. Gee write from Centreville, Mich.: "We have had five days of unalloyed pleasure with our spirit friends. We had the pleasure of entertaining Frank McKinley of Toledo, O., in our home. If anyone has a doubt of life after what we call death, let them send for him. Furnish him with harmonious conditions, and his band of controls will do the rest. One evening at Mr. Akey's, we formed a circle. We had two trumpets. Five voices talked at once so loud one could hear every word in the next room. They told us the conditions were so harmonious they were talking without the trumpet."

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "The members of the Rising Sun Mission were very much gratified at the reception they received at the social given by Sister Darby at her home on Saturday evening, July 22, for the benefit of the temple fund. Short talks were indulged in, after which Sister Darby gave some very interesting character readings from the handwriting of each one present. It is a new feature in test giving and proved very accurate and instructive to all present. Luncheon was served, which is one of the main features at all our socials, and to say the least everybody enjoyed themselves and ate and drank heartily. Our next social, which will be in connection with a lawn party, will be held on Saturday evening, August 12, at the home of Sister Trafton, 1245 Wilcox avenue. A number of interesting features have been arranged for this occasion, so lay all cares aside on that evening, and come out and have a good time."

Prof. Lockwood is now at Lily Dale, N. Y., where he can be addressed. He writes: "Mrs. Richmond is here and has given us two very fine lectures out of the three allotted to her. She leaves Friday. Clegg Wright is the presiding star at the present time and attracts as usual great interest."

Dr. Beverly writes: "Our annual picnic will take place Thursday, August 10, on Wooded Island, Jackson Park. Go to the end of Jackson Park or 63rd street car line and walk to the island. We shall have a big time, and all are invited to come and enjoy the day, beginning at 2 p. m., till you are satisfied. We shall have music, by Madame Holton's orchestra; games, races, auto riding, lemonade, ice cream, etc. Free test for all. All bring lunch, and don't forget a chicken for the preacher. Our meetings are largely attended, and many visiting mediums gladly help in the work so all get a test to convince them of this occult power. Many are joining our society to get the benefit of the free daily treatments by the success circle. It is wonderful. Miss Rice has special music every Sunday from 3 to 10 p. m."

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society had a very interesting meeting last Sunday evening. Miss Burgess gave us some new ideas in regard to the Indians, especially the Apache tribe and the Carlisle Indian School with which she had been connected for a number of years. Her brother, Dr. C. A. Burgess, as well as Mrs. Weaver, Mrs. Thomper and Mrs. Lichtig, gave messages which were all recognized. We wish to thank those who assisted us that evening, and hope to have them with us again. The Shadow Social and dance was a grand success financially as well as socially. Mr. W. H. Lundie gave us a vocal selection as well as music for the dancing. Miss Francis Letter, who has not entered her teens as yet, rendered some fine selections on the piano, and received hearty applause from the audience. The bidding on the shadows of the ladies was quite interesting. All seemed well pleased with the purchases made by the gentlemen. We give another one on August 30. For August 6, we have engaged Dr. Carlos Montezuma, an Apache Indian, to speak for us. He is well known here in the city, and all who have heard him, speak very highly of him and are anxious to hear him again, and now is an opportunity."

Mrs. Hamilton Gill of 522 West Monroe street, Chicago, spent a couple of weeks pleasantly in Indiana. She spent several days in Warsaw, and then visited Richmond, where she was given a hearty reception by old-time Spiritualist friends.

Will C. Hodge writes from Edgewood Camp, on the Interurban line, 27 miles from Seattle and 9 miles from Tacoma, Sunday, July 23: "The 26th of June I met with the severest and most painful accident of my life. Fortunately no bones were broken, but the whole left side of my head and face was fearfully bruised by a fall. I am getting along nicely. I have been in camp since Monday, on which day I landed from the S. F. steamer. Lotions and the healing power in the hands of Mrs. Nicholson are gradually restoring normal conditions, and I hope to be ready for my work when camp opens. When thinking of the poor fellows on the ill-fated Bennington in San Diego harbor, I think I got off cheaply after all."

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, August 6, 1905, S. E. 58, "The Sunflower and Its Lessons."

Gem of Thought:—

"As the Sunflower turns its face to the light of the sun, so Spiritualism turns the face of Humanity to the Light of Truth."

For information concerning The Progressive Lyceum, authorized lesson sheet of the National Spiritualists Association, address John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

O. M. AMBLER WRITES FROM STRATFORD, N. Y.: "'FRAGMENTS OF TRUTH,' FROM THAT ADVANCED THINKER, HENRY MORRISON TEFFT, IS A 'STUNNER.' I NEVER SAW SO MUCH TRUTH CONDENSED IN SO SMALL A SPACE. EVERY SENTENCE IS A TRUTH—A FACT—THAT IS SELF-EVIDENT TO ANY UNPREJUDICED, UNBIASED MIND. THEN THE ARTICLE BY A. H. NICHOLAS IS REPLETE WITH TRUTH—IN FACT THE WHOLE EIGHT PAGES ARE BRISTLING WITH DIAMOND POINTS OF TRUTH—A VERITABLE EDUCATIONAL NUMBER. YOU SHOULD HAVE A SUBSCRIPTION LIST OF AT LEAST 100,000, AND HOW ANY ONE THAT PRETENDS TO BELIEVE IN SPIRITUALISM CAN AFFORD TO DO WITHOUT THE PAPER IS BEYOND MY COMPREHENSION. I AM AN OLD MAN OF 75 YEARS, AND OF COURSE HAVE BUT A SHORT TIME TO STAY ON THIS SIDE, BUT I HAD RATHER GO BAREFOOT THROUGH THE SUMMER, TO SAVE THE DOLLAR—IF THERE WAS NO OTHER LEGITIMATE WAY—THAN TO BE DEPRIVED OF THE PAPER. YOURS FOR TRUTH, HONESTY AND SPIRITUALITY."

L. E. Beal writes from Lewiston, Me.: "The last number of The Progressive Thinker is a gem."

Mr. Thomas Grimshaw has returned to this country from his three months' trip to England. He has had a splendid time among English Spiritualists, and is returning much improved in health, and filled with new courage to press on with the good fight for clean educational Spiritualism in America. He will act as chairman at Vicksburg camp, after which he will return to his charge in St. Louis, where he will find a host of friends to greet him.

Will J. Erwood was in the city last week, on his way to his home in La Crosse, Wisconsin. He had just concluded a successful two months' engagement at St. Louis. He speaks in flattering terms of the Spiritualists there, and the good work they are doing.

Rev. R. Heber Newton says: "Mesmerism was duly laughed out of court at the opening of our century, and, lo, it is back again, in good standing, under the alias of 'hypnotism.' So one may run on through a list of strange, unaccountable, mysterious and most unbelievable powers of man leading up to that nightmare of the dogmatic scientist, spiritism. The belief in the existence of unseen spirits and of their power of communication with us in the flesh is one of the oldest, most widespread and most insistent beliefs of man, and it has revived strangely in our day. For the first time in the history of man these powers have been scientifically investigated in our day. Already the result is that a considerable number of eminent men of science have had the courage to avow that, after allowing for illusion, fraud and every possible hypothesis of interpretation, they have been driven up to the ultimate solution of the problem—the belief in the actual communication of the spirits of those whom we call dead, with the living."

Maurgerite Mac writes: "Last evening being the last Thursday evening in the month, Mrs. M. A. Burland held her regular monthly social. Four or five mediums being present, all enjoyed the messages and tests given by the different psychics, Mrs. Jacobs, Mrs. Davenport, Mrs. McArthur and Miss Bell, a young medium, and Mrs. Maggie Henry, the palmist. All contributed toward the evening's entertainment. Our hostess served ice cream, cake and coffee, and Violet, Mrs. Burland's little Indian control did her part in the way of tests and messages. Hope to have the pleasure of meeting them at the next social, held on the 31st of August."

Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner is in Kansas. She speaks highly of the Winfield camp-meeting.

Mrs. Clara Wagner of Defiance, O., is now holding parlor meetings, the society having given up the hall during hot weather.

Onset Camp, Mass.

The first week of the camp-meeting has passed and it was a success in every particular. All the meetings have been well attended. The weather has been fine.

Monday a conference was held in the auditorium, and many speakers took part. The subject for discussion was "Obsession."

Tuesday, Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn was the speaker and as usual gave a fine address.

Wednesday, another conference was held.

Thursday, Mrs. Carrie F. Loring was the speaker. Her subject was "The Cultivation of Our Possibilities," and was very interesting.

Friday, Mrs. Annie Knowlton Hinman was the speaker and took for her subject, "Thought," and gave a fine address. Her audience was large. Mrs. Hinman should be heard in the west. She would be a great success among the thinking people.

Friday evening a successful seance was held in the Arcade, before a good-sized audience, Mrs. Carrie L. Loring was the medium.

Saturday afternoon, the Veteran Spiritualist Union held their meeting in the auditorium before a good-sized audience. Many speakers and mediums took part in the exercises.

Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock the children's lyceum opened its session for the season and had a large school. They held another session Friday afternoon. They will be held every Tuesday and Friday afternoon during the camp. Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn is in charge.

Saturday morning the lyceum held an outing in one of the groves, and the children enjoyed themselves.

Sunday the speaker will be Mrs. Kate R. Stiles in the morning, Mr. W. J. Colville followed by Mrs. Katie Ham in the afternoon, and a seance in the Arcade in the evening, Mrs. Ham as the medium.

The Bridgewater Band give three concerts every Sunday.

While at the camp, don't forget to visit the bookstore and subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Operations in a New Field of Work.

To the Editor:—As a matter of news I send you the following account of a summer trip across Lake Michigan, where within a radius of ten miles of Benton Harbor there is a little group of people who have been meeting at each others' homes for the past few years, to enable the outside world to gain some knowledge of what Spiritualists have to offer as a substitute for ignorance, bigotry and superstition.

On invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Damon, Dr. J. H. Randall and wife and Mr. W. B. Aitken and wife, of the Kenwood Spiritual Church, spent some time, enjoying farm life, fishing, looking over the country and teaching spiritual truths.

On Sunday, July 9, we held a meeting in the morning and one in afternoon, both of which were well attended. Dr. Randall delivered a very interesting and instructive lecture at both meetings, followed by tests by Mrs. Grace Aitken. Although Mrs. Aitken was a stranger to all present, the angel world used her so efficiently she was endeared to all who were present. Mr. I. K. Shimer presided at the meetings. Mrs. Oscar Damon led the singing, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. McKee.

These meetings were held in the new grove laid out and owned by Mr. Henry King, who has built a good and substantial hall, called Woodland Hall, suitable to hold meetings at all seasons of the year, at his own expense. It is located in the center of a large sugar grove, and on the line of a projected electric street railway. They have a society, with Mr. I. K. Shimer president; Mr. McKee, secretary; Mr. Merrifield, treasurer, and Miss Cuba King, corresponding secretary, and they hold their meetings in the above grove which is located near Twelve Corners, Michigan.

We held another meeting, Thursday evening, July 13, at Riverside, Mich., which was well attended. On Sunday, July 16, Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, missionaries of the N. S. A., held a meeting at Woodland Hall, and we had the pleasure of attending. Dr. Randall offered up the opening prayer, followed by a talk by Mr. Sprague, who used up his time in presenting the claims of the N. S. A., in a very vigorous manner, and showing their efforts to rid the ranks of public workers of fakes. There was considerable dissatisfaction expressed by those present, as they had expected a discourse on the line of spiritual truths.

This little society is laying the foundation for a great growth in Spiritualism in their district, and now have a meeting place which would make a very beautiful camp grounds.

WILLIAM BARR.

IOWA SPIRITUALISTS.

Mid-Summer Meeting of State Board.

A mid-summer board meeting of the State Spiritualists Association of Iowa, was held in the city of DesMoines, July 15. Business of importance was transacted. The entire board was present except the vice-president who was out of the state, and Annie E. Foster of Oskaloosa, first trustees, who sent Mr. Adlow in her place. Those present were, John D. Vail of Marshalltown, president; Dora C. Crosby, secretary; S. A. Garber, treasurer; B. A. Bean, trustee, all of DesMoines; Jennie V. Shaffer of Ottumwa and C. O. Kempster of Council Bluffs, trustees.

The enthusiastic meeting proved that Iowa Spiritualists are very much alive, and intend to push the work in the right direction. One important feature of the meeting was to decide where our next annual convention should be held; this matter being being left in the hands of the board, the vote was unanimous in favor of DesMoines. Notice of date will appear later. Harmony and good will prevail in our association.

DORA C. CROSBY,
Secretary.

A WHOLE BIBLE IN ITSELF.

A Commendation of Nora Batchelor's Address in Last Week's Progressive Thinker, Illustrating the Great Good the Paper Is Doing.

To the Editor:—I have read with great delight the article in your last issue by Nora Batchelor. It is in my judgment one of the finest things that I have ever read anywhere. It is, in fact, A WHOLE BIBLE IN ITSELF. I desire to ask what would be the probable cost per thousand to have it printed in a little brochure just large enough to be carried conveniently in one's pocket? The article is so fine, so elevating in its tendencies, and so instructive in every way that it ought to be found in every home in this land of ours.

If it can be published at a moderate cost I would buy them by the thousand for general distribution. Would go out among the people with it, use it as a theme for a lecture and strive in every way to give it a wide circulation. It should be called "Nora Batchelor's American Bible." Nothing better has ever been given to the world.

It beats all the old style of Bibles that have ever been printed since the early boyhood days of old Adam.

Please give me a price per thousand, on good, clear, strong paper in the form that I have mentioned.

PAUL DESTEN,
Chinese Inspector's Office,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Wonewoc Camp, Wis.

As president of the Wonewoc, Wisconsin, camp, I would like to call attention to the splendid program arranged for this year's meeting, which is to be held in Unity Park, Wonewoc, August 5 to 27 inclusive. We are to have one of the best camps in our history, and no one will make a mistake by coming to visit us.

Among our speakers and mediums are to be found Rev. Moses Hull, Dr. B. F. Austin, Mrs. Amanda Coffman, Francis Wheeler, Mrs. J. P. Whitwell and many others. Those interested should write to the secretary, Mr. M. M. Blish, Wonewoc, for a program.

This camp is on the main line of the Chicago & Northwestern railroad, and is only six hours' ride from Chicago. It is easily available from all points. There are good hotels within a few feet of the camp grounds. A new auditorium will afford opportunity for holding camp entertainments and dances.

We cordially invite all who desire a good time, to come to us. We will treat you well, and you will find reliable workers to give you the spiritual food required.

Remember the dates, August 5 to 27, inclusive. WILL J. ERWOOD.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents.

WINFIELD CAMP, KANSAS.

Good Words From a Good, Earnest Worker.

To the Editor:—The writer has just returned from a visit to the Winfield, Kansas, camp-meeting, and would like to express his appreciation of the treatment accorded him while there. It is not too much to say that this was one of the most harmonious camps I have ever attended, and that much good has resulted from the meetings is a foregone conclusion. The meeting was well attended throughout, and the weather seemed made to order.

Many workers were present as visitors and participants in the program, and all are of one opinion as to the delightful aspects of Winfield. Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner was there as one of the chief attractions, and did much splendid work, winding up her interesting labors with her wonderful fire test. She is a sterling worker, always ready to step into the harness and speak a word for the good cause in which she and her illustrious father have labored so well and faithfully.

The camp was favored with the presence of Mrs. Laura B. Payne of Fort Worth, Texas, and Mrs. Bessie Bellman, also Mrs. Virginia Bryan and Mrs. Jaquet formerly of Chicago. Mrs. Payne was paying her first visit to the Winfield camp, but she came a stranger only to make her way into the esteem of the people with a bound. Keen and logical were her discourses, and not one of them failed to elicit the heartiest approval. Her poems and songs, all of which were original, and rendered in the most approved manner, combined with her splendid lectures, made her place in the esteem of the Winfield people secure from the very first; one of the signs of the times shows that she will be with them again.

Mrs. Bessie Bellman is a Kansas worker; her friends there are proud of her work, and indeed they may well be. Her discourses were to the point and gave evidence of deep thought somewhere—whether in Sister Bellman's mind, or that of an excarnate being matters not; the thought was there and was expressed by Mrs. Bellman. She will be heard from later, and camps will not make a mistake when they put her on their program. Our lady speakers gave thoughts that should—and did—bring the blush of shame to some of the masculine fraternity who have been guilty of the assertion that women lacked continuity of thought, etc.

Mrs. Bryan and Mrs. Jaquet were present as visitors—but were prevailed upon to assist in the work on one or two occasions, and it is needless to say they are both highly gifted and capable workers. They speak fearlessly for the truth. Max Hoffman was also one of the workers; he greatly interested many of the Winfield people, but as he and his work are well known there is no need of comment by me. W. W. Aber was the materializing medium.

There were many other workers there, but as this is written "on the wing," as it were, time will not permit me to mention them all in detail. Suffice it to say that this was a fine camp, and the writer was glad to have been there. Mrs. Addie McAllister was president, and Mrs. Maud Gates, secretary; to their earnest efforts, and those of their able assistants is due the success of the camp. Mrs. McAllister and Mrs. Gates are still in office, though they have traded offices for the coming year.

WILL J. ERWOOD.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

Passed to the higher life, July 23, 1905, from accidental drowning, at Pine Lake, Mich., Harold Cornyn, aged two years and eight months. May the knowledge of Spiritualism comfort them in this their hour of affliction. Services conducted by Rev. Nellie S. Baade of Detroit, Mich.

Clara Griffen Hopkins, beloved wife of Dr. Edwin Howard Hopkins of Hillyard, Washington, passed away on July 11, 1905, after a brief illness. Mrs. Hopkins was the eldest daughter of Alonzo M. and Ella S. Griffen, of Chicago. Besides her husband she leaves a beautiful baby boy.

Mr and Mrs. Griffen are both prominent Spiritualists, and while they deplore the loss of their lovely daughter, they realize that she is in a grander and more beautiful plane of life, and will be able to act as guardian angel for her baby boy, and also keep in close touch with them.

She died as she had lived,
Serene and sweetly fair;
Though young in years of earth
Her life was rich and rare;
Among the stars in that serener clime
Her spirit dwells in love and truth sublime.

Left the mortal and joined the immortals, at Rockford, Ill., July 20, Mrs. Almira Sprague Brearly, aged 83 years. Mrs. Brearly had been an active, consistent and exemplary Spiritualist for more than fifty years. No one in Rockford was better or more favorably known among Spiritualists, or was more beloved by all who knew her than she. Mrs. B. had a smile and kind word for all she met, and possessed considerable mediumistic power, only employed in private circles. B.

July 8, at early dawn, Ellen Jones, sister of the late "Golden Rule Mayor of Toledo, Ohio," departed this life to join her illustrious brother in the higher field of activity, where they two who worked for the good of man on earth, will continue their loving service together in spirit spheres Though raised in the Presbyterian faith, both entertained the broadest views of religion and by their lives proved their belief to be that the highest worship of God is best exemplified in the service of our fellow-men.

ELIZABETH SCHAUSS.
O. S. A. Missionary.

Herman T. Holden ascended to the higher life July 18. In accordance with his wishes, Rev. Elizabeth Schauss of Toledo, Ohio, conducted the funeral service, assisted by the G. A. R. posts from Ashtabula and Geneva, to which latter the arisen brother belonged. He was also a member of the Spiritualist society of Ashtabula. Spiritual truth was the staff of his comfort, and the rod on which he rested. A knowledge of Spiritualism comforts the bereaved wife.

"Right Generation the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth." By Dr. M. E. Conger. An appeal to reason and man's highest aspirations. A plea for justice and equality in all the relations of life between men and women. Cloth, 75 cents; leatherette, 50 cents.

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

HIMALYA
(THE KOLA COMPOUND)
The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific, proving that

HAY-FEVER —AND— ASTHMA can be CURED.

Mr. W. H. Kelley, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma by Himalya, after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Clesses, 132 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good, but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, of Abilene, Texas, writes April 16th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya, as it cured me of Hay-Fever and Asthma, and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-Fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write today to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

Review of Passing Events.

Several correspondents have sent letters in which they express great tribulation over the matter of frauds which have recently been exposed. One highly esteemed Spiritualist regrets that so much publicity has been given the matter. He thinks that if people are convinced by frauds, it is so much gained. The converts will go on and hold fast by the truths they receive.

Another thinks it would be best to do as the churches do—hush the matter, and let those who are credulous be undeceived.

Another takes occasion to berate the N. S. A. for its inactivity, and especially is severe in his criticisms on this office for not waging war on all fakirs. This letter is antidoted by another warning letter is antidoted by another warning tion, and the editor to express no opinion concerning exposed frauds!

To the Editor-at-Large there is nothing in this world more dear and sacred than Spiritualism. Knowingly he would make no expression to its detriment, yet he does not believe in silence when great interests and principles are at issue. It is true the churches "hush up" the derelictions of their members and clergy. You will not find in a religious newspaper in this country that several thousand gospel ministers and church members in the past five years have been criminals, or that 17 are at present confined in the penitentiary of Ohio. In fact religious papers never publish news derogatory to the churches. If they did the organizations they represent would go to pieces, and they would have few, or no subscribers. If Spiritualism has to support itself by acceptance of fraud, the sooner it perishes the better. IT HAS NOT PERISHED BECAUSE FRAUD FORMS NO PART OF IT.

We need not feel discouraged at the deception we meet, or fear the present upheaval will leave nothing stable. There is no more fraud now than years before, but there is a more thorough awakening to the importance of having each and every manifestation proven before admitted.

If there was a gang of counterfeiters in every town and they were left undisturbed for years, until at last the people were aroused, and exposed and brought them to justice, would this show that crime was on the increase? Rather would it not show that the moral sense of the community was awakened and demanded public purification? NO ONE WOULD FEEL THE LEAST ALARM THAT GOOD MONEY WOULD LOSE ITS CHARACTER, OR THE MINT BE ACCUSED OF SUCH CRIME.

The government is passing through an ordeal of exposures of crimes, SO MANY AND VARIOUS THAT THE PRESUMPTION OF THE SUPERFICIAL WOULD BE THAT THE WHOLE FABRIC WAS SO EATEN THROUGH AND THROUGH WITH CORRUPTION THAT ITS RUIN IS CERTAIN. BRIBERY, SELLING INFORMATION, CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD, THE MULTITUDINOUS FORMS OF PECULATION WHICH MAY BE SUMMED UP IN THE SUGGESTIVE WORD "GRAFT" ARE MET WITH IN ALL DEPARTMENTS.

Is the situation unusual and alarming?

It appears that such practices are of long standing and have come to be view by officials with leniency. The public have aroused to the situation—that is all, and resolved to have a clean house. It is THE CLEANSING PROCESS THAT SHOWS THE DIRT.

Such an exposure requires strong men and a strong backing to be successful.

Spiritualism has there and the fundamental truth, otherwise it could not successfully pass this ordeal, when it seems that its friends become its enemies.

There is not a religious sect in the world that could bear the limelight that is now being poured on Spiritualism; not one that would not go to nothingness if an exposure was made of all the shortcomings of its leaders.

You will never see in the "religious newspapers" of the escapades of gospel ministers or shortcomings of the laity. Rarely do you see such news in the dailies, for they are careful not to offend their church readers. THE CRIMINALITY EXISTS, AND PUBLICITY MAKES IT NO MORE NOR LESS.

It is not the duty of the National Association to expose every fakir who claims to be a medium. It should assure the public that its endorsement is a guarantee of truthfulness.

Those who have opposed organization, and criticised the measures of the National Association, have now to thank that organization that there is something tangible to which Spiritualists may appeal, as representing their belief with greater force than the conflicting egotism of individuals.

Every one must have opinions, and when great principles are at stake, must, if honest and true to his convictions, express them. I do not know as Spiritualists are to allow themselves to be BLACKMAILED into silence. We should be careful and charitable, but for those who are known to trade in the holiest and most sacred feelings and hopes of mankind, can charity be asked?

To-day Spiritualism before the world is judged by two representatives, one the fakirs, fortune tellers, and advertising "commercial mediums," who to-day expose, and to-morrow will claim to be genuine; they bring the cause to ridicule and disgrace and make it a burdensome cross to say one is a Spiritualist.

The other representative is the National Association. It has united Spiritualists, and has thus become a power. It has not reached the influence it should, because of assertive, carping individualism, which has played dog-in-the manger, and thus been a brake on advance. It represents all spiritual organic movement now in existence, and should be made the consensus of all believers. It may not be the ideal of all its members. Each must yield something to gain others. The individual who thinks he is infallible has no place in organization, except as a disturbing element. Like the "sanctified" church member he should pass on to a sphere where there are no mortal limitations.

Organized Power.

What this consolidation means, the growing, gathering strength of this union may be learned from the Official Register of National, State and Local Spiritualist Associations, Lyceums, Camp-meeting and Mediums," for 1905, compiled and published by that indefatigable worker, Laura G. Fixen. It is a work carefully compiled and exhaustive, and reflects great credit on its author.

From it we learn that there are state associations in California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, (seven local societies and a lyceum in the District of Columbia), Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, New Hampshire, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Washington and Wisconsin.

The local societies of Utah, Virginia, West Virginia, Wyoming and Canada have not yet formed central organizations, but affiliate with the National.

There are vigorous local societies and lyceums represented by these state organizations.

There will be held over the wide field from Maine to California between 35 and 40 camp-meetings. The attendance of some of these has rcached ten thousand on the best days, and probably the attendance at the smallest and least pretentious camp during its holding will reach twenty thousand. An incalculable work in propagating spiritual philosophy, and bringing the phenomena and facts before the public is being done by these meetings. A class of people hear and learn, that otherwise would not be reached. They come from curiosity, with skeptical sneering, to go away interested, converted, to pursue investigation and study at their homes.

To those who have maintained that Spiritualism was on the decline; that its societies and lyceums were becoming less and less, and its laity joining the ranks of other denominations, the "Official Register," for the current year gives a stinging rebuke. Never before could anything like such a report have been made. Never before was there as many public meetings, as many lecturers and mediums. Never before as deep interest. Never before such promise given of the future.

The National Spiritualists Association represents the strength of all the state societies, as the latter represents their local membership. It stands before the world as the representative and exponent of Spiritualism. Its need is the assistance of every true Spiritualist. As individuals we are weak, united we are strong—and having the truth for our defensive armor we are invincible.

The question before those who are Spiritualists or Liberalists, is exceedingly plain: Will you unite as drawn by spiritual fraternity, in the light of the peaceful day, and become so strong that your rights will be respected; or will you wait in supine faith that somehow the truth will triumph, until amidst the storm of disaster you will be driven into union for self-defense, and to prevent the destruction of everything you hold dear?

I speak more freely, because I have never had anything to do in shaping the course of the National Association. While there may have been shortcomings, I feel that the beneficent good has a thousand times surpassed them. The farmer does not cast away the sheaf for a shrunken kernel. He blesses the harvest that gives him so much, and knows the screen will cast the defective away.

For me has been to stand on the picket line and gather information from the hostile camps—to reply to sharpshooters, and do what I humbly can to silence annoying batteries, and meet guerrilla attacks.

In this labor I have had the assistance of many interested workers, who have aided by pointing out what was to be done, by suggestions, and even more by the strength given by their words of appreciation.

HUDSON TUTTLE,
Editor-at-Large N. S. A.

TO SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

On Her Birthday (And Mine), July 21.

Heaven-made friend, this is your birthday!
I am glad it is mine, too;
That July day we arrived here
This old world got two things new!
We were not then educated,
Just knew how to squall and eat,
But I dare say our four parents
Thought we never could be beat!

Well, I feel great satisfaction
That July the twenty-first,
Full of fire, and growth and action,
Made us two,—well, not the worst;
And when we were warmly welcomed
By our kin, that hot time,
Not a soul knew we were little
Peach-pink wads of prose and rhyme.

But we were, and other mixtures,
Made to bind our winglets down
Were put in;—a good idea!—
Give me sense and keep your crown!
We would not combine ballooning
With our zig-zag trip on earth;
Flying's nice for birds and angels;
Flying women have small worth.

We have had no time for gewgaws
Climbing up Mount Use. Indeed,
Our heads had other business
Than to magnify our needs.
Doubtless we've our own opinions,
And can put our business through,
Managing our own dominions,—
That's the way July folks do!

True our friends and plenty of them;
Finding blessings everywhere,
We are having a fine journey
To the Homeland over there.
Friend, I thank you for your friendship,
Strengthening my highest thought;
Reach your hand, beloved soul-sister,
Take this rhyme. It counteth naught.

AN HONEST INVESTIGATOR.

He Is Seeking a Satisfactory Test, and in Due Time Will Receive It, No Doubt.

To the Editor:—For several years I have been a seeker after the truth of spirit return, or communication. While my opportunities for investigation have been limited, I have availed myself of every reasonable one for investigation. I take great delight in reading The Progressive Thinker, and eagerly look for it each week. I would not be without it, and you can consider me a subscriber for life.

I will give any reasonable sum to any person who will give me a test that will settle all doubts. I presume you will say impossible, for there can always be a doubt, but I put it, all reasonable doubt. We have a medium who has given some excellent tests, but being so well acquainted with me and my family history it is difficult for her to convince one that she is not using her subjective mind, etc. I do wish some of the good mediums would write me a letter or have one written for me from the spirit world, and if it would indicate who from, and state some circumstances in life, I know to be true, I would feel satisfied; it coming from a medium whom I have never seen or who never saw me, I would consider it a good test. I notice in The Progressive Thinker from time to time that such letters have been received. If any medium who sees this will send or give me such a test, I certainly will reimburse them for all trouble, time, etc.

I am an honest investigator, and the comfort I would receive by being thoroughly grounded in the belief would be worth worlds to me.

Spirit Messages.

Through the Mediumship of Mrs. Nellie Davis, Kewanee, Illinois.

I am constantly receiving messages from the spirit world, while sitting alone in my little room, and I have decided to publish some of them in the dear old Progressive Thinker, and it is my wish that those on the mundane sphere of life who recognize the messages of their spirit friends will verify them by informing me of the fact, as I am a new medium; all I ask is to know I am getting the truth.

MRS. NELLIE DAVIS.

Message From Dr. Hovey.

To All Earthly Friends:—I am pleased to identify myself here this evening through this medium. Although I do not return as the general run of people, that are strangers to the phenomena and philosophy and trying to reach personal friends, I wish to come in this evening to unite my voice, and also to give the authorities and friends of The Progressive Thinker my co-operation and assistance, and may it bring us closer together.

I have been very much interested of late in the progress that Spiritualism is making in the world at large, and I want to congratulate the editor and his staff on the position they have taken in their standard of elevating humanity, and trying to rid their ranks of all fraud. It seems now that the time is arriving for every true Spiritualist in the land to be aware that the spirit of truth is near them and that the spirits of the disembodied ones are in co-operation, with more determination than ever. It brings me back in memory to years ago, when we as individuals had the moral courage to demonstrate immortality of the soul, and the true demonstration of spirit manifestation; and what it cost us, God and the angels and ourselves only knew, but the spirit of truth was established, and with all the adversities, with all the many, many things that have been raised against it, it yet stands and it is firmer today than ever before.

I cannot say all I desire to, for time will not allow; neither can I hold this instrument as strongly as I should like, to demonstrate all I would like.

I find that it is time that each one is up and doing. It makes no difference whether we are fighting theology, or ignorance, or whether we are fighting Spiritualists in ignorance, for we must understand the phenomena to comprehend the laws that govern spirit manifestation; each one must first study the philosophy and truth and educate themselves to know when they receive the truth. I wish to co-operate with every true Spiritualist or medium and will help sustain their mediumship and keep it spotless and above reproach, for I wish to say to all earthly friends, it makes no difference where they live, whether in Boston or California, wherever the true instrument is, the spirit will demonstrate itself.

I will not take up too much time this evening, but you will hear from me again. Give my best wishes and respect to all; tell them that Old Doc was not disappointed, as many thought I would be. And I hope some of my old friends will read this, so they may know that I still live. My dear companions and children are with me. Please say that Dr. E. Hovey was here, and I passed away at Springfield, Mo., a number of years ago.

Mary French.

To my dear ones still struggling with earth life: I am so glad to find this gateway open and we are all made welcome here. I know you will all be glad to hear from me, although I have been out of the body a long time, but it makes no difference whether we have been gone days or years, they are always glad to get good news from us.

I know when people in earth life grow older they need our assistance more. I want them to know that I am assisting them, and I see that while they believe in Spiritualism, in one sense, they are not satised in another. I want to tell them that I found things much as I expected, and all the loved ones are with me, all anxious to say a word.

Now I did not come to find fault with anyone, for you all do as near right as you know how. There is one very dear to me, that is not well, and he has worried so much, I want to tell him that as I look from the spirit side of life I can see that all will come out all right in due time. He often thinks it is wrong for the spirits to let the mortals suffer if they can prevent it. But sometimes the disembodied spirits cannot prevent circumstances in earth life. So just say, all is well and will end well. Please keep your mind easy and I will impress you what to do. I see no cause for worrying so much. I speak of these things for they belong to earth life and I do not wish to make it personal—they will understand what I mean.

Oh, I cannot tell you what a load has been lifted from my mind to think I have been able to voice a few of my own thoughts.

I think now I must go. I feel the old conditions coming back. I hope to be able to come again. I will see how this is received.

I passed away at Cambridge, Vermont, in 1890, where I will be well remembered. I wish you could all see my beautiful spirit home, and I now have all the music I wish, and you know nothing makes me happier than that.

James Howard.

Oh! how glad I am to come here and see if I can reach my dear wife Hattie, who I see still needs my advice, and only last evening I heard her say: "Oh, if Jim were only here I would know better what to do."

Dear Hattie, I was there by your side and I did try so hard to make you know it. Yes, my dear, I understand all, but my advice to you would be, Don't sell the property now, for you could find no investment that could be as paying as that, and Harry can get along without the money. I know you love the place, still you feel it your duty to keep Harry. Of course, that is like a mother, but you must look out for yourself, and you are getting feeble, and I see that some I thought were our friends, are trying to take advantage of your weakened condition, and I want them to know I understand their motive.

Some who read this will say: I think when they get to spirit life they should let earthly matters alone. But just as long as any of our loved ones remain, we feel the same interest in earth life we always did, and we are ever ready to assist and help them in every way possible. I wish if this message should reach the eyes of any of my friends, they will please tell my wife, so she will know what I think. I am so glad to find an avenue to reach her, and all are made welcome here. I thank all who assisted me, for it is all new to me. I did not know anything about Spiritualism before passing away. I left the body twenty-one years ago, Chicago, Ill., Halsted street.

Benjamin Franklin Gard.

Please say that Benjamin Franklin Gard is here, and I left the old body about six years ago, as I can remember, at Volmia, Mich., where I will be well remembered, and all my friends live there. Well, I would like to send out a few words of encouragement this evening, for I know there have been many changes as the years roll by. I cannot say as some that everything has been pleasing to me, for it has not, and so often when I visit the old home my heart is quite sad, and I wish I could make them know that I was there. I have waited and watched for a long time to find an avenue open to reach my friends, but of course I know this is not the place to bring in one's personal affairs. But if they will give me an opportunity in private I have much to say, and I know I can help them. I was so pleased when the guide said I could come, and what a blessing it is to have an avenue open without charge for there are so many hearts that are aching to reach these loved ones, that I feel guilty now taking up the time when there are so many anxious to send out a word. I hope this message will reach the ones it is intended for, so they may know I am neither dead nor sleeping. I thank you all so much, and I will come again.

GRAND LEDGE CAMP, MICH.

The Camp Session Opens Auspiciously.

The seventh annual session of the Grand Ledge Spiritualist Association is now in progress. The camp-meeting promises to be well attended and good results are expected. The first meeting was held on Sunday, July 23, at 10:30 a. m. Pdesident J. W. Ewing opened the exercises with a brief address in which he introduced Oscar Edgerly as permanent chairman for the present session. Mr. Edgerly then introduced Mrs. Abbie E. Sheets as the lecturer for the morning and afternoon services. In his address he referred to the lecturer as one of the pioneers in the cause and added her well known ability as a medium and lecturer rendered further eulogies superfluous. It might be added that Mrs. Sheets was for a number of years president and chairman of the Grand Ledge camp-meeting. Failing in health she resigned her work and two years ago Mr. J. W. Ewing a well known business man of Grand Ledge, was elected as president.

The lectures by Mrs. Sheets on the opening day were the principal features of the day's exercises. She spoke with her old-time earnestness, dealing with the practical side of Spiritualism in a way that was at once instructive and entertaining. It is sincerely desired that Mrs. Sheets may regain her health and once more take her place in the ranks of that band of noble workers who are pleading for a higher standard of Spiritualism.

Chairman Edgerly is doing excellent work this week—presiding at all the meetings besides lecturing every afternoon. The subject for his lecture yesterday afternoon, "The Crisis in the East, and Its Ultimate Effect Upon the Evolution of the Race," gave his guides ample scope for a masterful discourse—to present facts and logic in such a way as to leave upon the minds of his auditors an impression to be remembered. A synopsis of this lecture would fail to do it justice—suffice to say that it was logical, eloquent and comprehensive—in short, a lecture to arouse dormant Spiritualists to a realization of the worth and importance of the fundamental principles of our cause. The world needs more lecturers of this order.

D. A. Herrick of Grand Rapids, began his engagement July 23, closing Aug. 3.

B. F. Austin's engagement begins August 4, closing August 9. He delivers two lectures on Sunday, August 6.

Miss Laura Matlock, the secretary, being unable to attend on account of illness in her family, Miss Rena Chapman has been chosen to fill the position. Miss Chapman is secretary of the Michigan state association.

Wm. R. Devine is camp manager. Mr. Devine has been associated with the camp management for several years.

A weekly dance and entertainments will be features of camp life here. The camp ground is located on the bluffs of Grand River, and the scenery hereabouts is wild and interesting. It is doubtful if there is a place in this section of Michigan where nature has been more lavish in the matter of picturesqueness than she has been in this immediate vicinity.

SPONTANEOUS PHENOMENA

A Spirit Seen in a Graveyard.

When I was a little child, six years old, in 1846, my two little sisters and self were in the habit of visiting a little graveyard, just above our home, on a hillside; we nearly always chose to ramble here, it being so quiet and picturesque, with the beautiful autumn tints, on every tree and shrub.

We were about starting for home, when suddenly we saw the form of a little child about seven years old, floating or skimming just on the tops of the timothy grass, which was dry and blown about by a gentle wind. She looked pleased and carried in her left hand a large open book, with two leaves standing up, one straight up, and the other not quite so erect. She was dressed in a little white robe, which swept gracefully over the grass. She partly turned round and beckoned us to follow her, which we did, and suddenly she dissolved like a cloud.

We hastened home and told mother what we had seen. She spoke of it as though it was perfectly natural for little girls to float in that manner, thinking we would be frightened if she told us what it was that we had seen.

Since I have become a Spiritualist I know what it was. I know it was a spirit.

In about six weeks my youngest sister, about eight years old, died of scarlet fever, and we buried her in the little graveyard on the hillside. We then moved from Milwaukee to Buffalo, N. Y., and the other sister, in a few weeks died. She was the other leaf of the book which the little spirit held in her hand in the hillside graveyard.

MINERAL PARK CAMP-MEETING.

Interesting Particulars From This Place of Resort.

The Mineral Park camp-meeting has come and gone. It has been very interesting and pleasant.

I was glad indeed to hear and see Brother Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A. I am firmly convinced that in the Spiritualistic ranks of to-day he has not a peer. While he is not a strong man physically, mentally he is a giant. He has learned a good deal on his visit here to our city. While at one time I questioned the wisdom of his visit here, yet after all he has seen for himself the length to which those of "fraud Spiritualism" will go.

The newspapers had interviews with Mr. Barrett, and he very strongly, positively, but truthfully spoke of the cause of dissension, and the slow progress as a whole Spiritualism is making, and it was very humorous after the interviews, that a few of the wise-heads of the know-it-all stripe, got up a petition and had it signed by almost a hundred or more, and presented it, by a committee, to the managers of the camp, and demanded that Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., be put off the grounds and not allowed to speak any more.

Such petition was ignored by Mrs. Nellie Howell, manager of the camp. While his language was strong, it was true, that this camp should be run honestly; but if said petitioners did not like the way she was running it, and the way Mr. Barrett was doing, because she fully concurred in what he had said and done, and it had been fully demonstrated, those not satisfied could leave the camp.

The action of the frauds in the Spiritualist ranks here and elsewhere is a stench in the nostrils of all good-minded people. We have on the camp grounds every day of the session a detective who has reported so far that things have been carried on with the best intent in the management.

I was glad to hear the lectures by Mr. Barrett and John W. Ring of Texas, whom we have christened as Honest John Ring, who is always earnest and ever stands for truth. He is a diamond in any position you may place him for truth, and that alone is his watch-word.

I had the pleasure of listening to Rev. W. C. Bowman of our city, a hard, honest worker, who always stands for the right as he knows it.

I have often wondered why the camp-meetings will send off to foreign states for speakers and lecturers, when we have just as good talent, just as clean, just as noble men and women in our own vicinity. However, that is their business, not mine.

I take this as an opportune time, Mr. Editor, to state to your numerous readers, that I have received letters from practically all over our land, stating what is known of the physical phenomena, particularly materialization. Now let me say to those, and to others, to test the truth of this so-called phenomenon. Place your medium under a mosquito-bar (not a trick one); have it securely fastened to the floor, and have the tacks securely sealed; be careful and have confederates out of the seance room. Have said seance held in a room that the medium has no access to, except on said occasions; and having all those things carefully guarded, then you can sing, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," until daylight, and you will never have a materialized spirit. I wish to emphasize now, I mean a materialization, not an etherealization. I believe, as Bro. Hudson Tuttle says in his answer to Judge Dunn in the Winans case, that his expose has been the strongest blow to the truth of spirit return, that has been struck by medium or layman.

I believe in that scriptural injunction now more than ever: "To prove all things and hold fast to that which is true." Be not gullibles, my friends. Demand truth at whatever cast, for truth will last longer than deception; for, as the scripture says, "Deception is sweet unto any man, but afterwards he finds that his mouth has been filled with gravel." So guard against gravel. Far better have a little whisper at any time than a wagon load of deceptive junk.

We have many good, honest and true mediums in our city. The one I would particularly refer to is Prof. John McClane, a Scotchman, who has been watched, carefully guarded, and we, the Anti-Faker Association, of this city, can vouch for him. I have known him personally for the last five years, watched his daily life, and he has been approached to test the valor of his manhood, in the way of bogus tests being sent to him through the mail and otherwise. He is a bricklayer by occupation; always has his tools ready to go to work at his trade, but will never stoop to deceive any mortal.

Lincoln a Spiritualist.

To the Editor:—A few weeks ago some one asked Hudson Tuttle what evidence there was that Abraham Lincoln was a Spiritualist, and he referred the inquirer to Mrs. Nettie Maynard's book. I know of other evidence which I can give, but I have forgotten the name of the man who gave me the evidence. It was before the commencement of the rebellion. This man was at my house several times. I then lived at 123 Eagle W. street, Buffalo, N. Y. I have been trying for several weeks to think of his name. I will state a circumstance connected with his business which may enable some old Spiritualist to give his name. This man had a large factory for the manufacture of rubber goods. His sales were almost exclusively in the Southern states. A medium by the name of Chancy Barnes called on him and advised him to sell out his rubber business, saying that if he did not sell, he would lose it. This Barnes was an uneducated man but very mediumistic. He was a fisherman from New Bedford. It was but a few days before Barnes came the second time and urged this man by all means to sell. Barnes had no money to pay his fare home, and the man gave it to him. In a very short time Barnes was back again and urged him stronger than ever to see, saying he would lose it if he did not sell. He did finally take his advice. Very soon thereafter the rebellion commenced, and, as Barnes said, he would have lost everything. This man whose name I cannot recall was the first one to introduce Spiritualism to Lincoln. There was a girl 12 years old in Washington, and he invited Lincoln to attend one of this girl's circles. The spirits gave almost their whole attention to Lincoln. He said it was wonderful the amount that was given him. He attended this girl's circles nightly until Mrs. Maynard came to the White House. This man told me that if he had not sold his business, as Barnes advised him, he would have lost not less than $100,000.

Important Message From the Spirit Side of Life.

SpiritHenry C. Wright, through the Mediumship of Eva A. Cassell, Gives a Comprehensive Analysis of the Evil and the Good, in an Especially Interesting and Instructive message which throws a Flood of Light on these two Antagonistic Elements. His Views on Prenatal Influences are Very Valuable.

As love is an attribute of soul and is deathless, so also is it the lever which lifts the shadowed spirit from out evil, for the blackest spirit has a mother whose eternal love will reach far down to his sphere and resurrect him. Oh, the tears that spirit mother has shed! The divine love and patience that every mother has had while her erring son served his time in the shadowed purgatory, for every "demon" has a loving parent; the darkest one has lain in his mother's arms, has been beloved by her, has been touched and sanctified by a love that is deathless, and she has put her mark upon him and he can never be "lost"; forevermore is he linked to her; she will reach her own in the blackest corner of the spiritual spheres and reclaim him.

Thus the proof is, good friends, that there is more power in the spirit world for the salvation of the shadowed ones, than there is for their continued bondage.

It does not follow because a shadowed spirit presents himself to a mortal, that he is obsessing him. True, he might come and swear, why? Is not profanity rampant in earth life, and if the spirit is obsessed by earth conditions, why should he not swear? Does he come to threaten, also? Why not? Threats and profanity go hand in hand and since he is obsessed by the denizens of earth, he must do as they do and swear and threaten. Does he come to ask for drink? Why not? His obsessing father left to him the heritage of the sot and he can do no less than follow in his footsteps until he has worked out the sot vibration in his shadowland. In due time the rays of the God-sun will penetrate it and he will perceive the light and rise.

These shadowed ones come often to let you know their condition in the spiritual world; to let you know the results of their wrong-doing on earth; they come to observe and study your aura and to receive a lesson from you if you can give it. In some cases it might be absolutely necessary for them to again touch spheres with the mortal, ere they can emerge from the shadow and rise above it. I know that when darkened spirits are allowed to return to earth, it is often to enable them to work out a vibration which prevents them from rising in the scale of spiritual progression.

There are obsessing mortals whose vibrations attract and hold the spirit and in some cases it is unable to break away. In one instance a spirit was thoroughly obsessed by his parents, both of whom lived lives of enjoyment and ease wholly in the external; each day of the gestative period was spent by the prospective mother in the pursuit of pleasure, aided by the father who possessed unlimited wealth. After birth, during childhood, and at adult age, the son flung discretion to the winds and entered upon life's pleasures. At death he was unable to break the earthly conditions which held him to the mortal plane; he belonged more to earth than to spirit, and, attracted to a mortal who obsessed and held him to his sphere, he lived as a part of that mortal for years, until he had worked out the earthly vibration and was free to enter spirit life.

Not long ago there was an epidemic of suicides in a certain city simply because a noted lecturer had declared that it was not culpable in a man to commit suicide. First, an alderman of the city who had attended the lecture, took his life; next, a number of residents who had been obsessed by the words of the lecturer, committed suicide. During the Salem witchcraft, as soon as it was declared that evil spirits were the cause, numberless others, obsessed by the declaration, begun to twitch and howl. A belief in demonology and the great fear it brought to these people, caused obsession, not by evil spirits, but by a belief in them. When you make obsession the bugbear of Spiritualism, remember that it belongs no more to Spiritualism than it does to any other "ism"; it belongs to the world at large. If a darkened spirit comes to you and swears, he cannot hurt you, but you may be of use to him and the source of benefit; so let him swear until he has worked out the profane vibration, then he will leave, and begin to arise; meet his profanity with kindness and earnest words of advice; the blackest spirit cannot long withstand that mode of treatment for its power for goodness is positive to overcome his negative evil. The higher powers and spirit guides often bring a shadowed spirit to earth, for his regeneration.

But, you will say, "I have read and have been told that there are evil spirits who are spirits of hate and who do nothing but hate, ever hating mortals and hurting them by that hate." You are obsessed by writers who are in turn obsessed by the prevailing belief and fear in evil ones, that is held by the people of earth. What are the facts concerning the fetish of these spiritual haters? The eternal law of retribution steps in which says, "Just as you mete out to others, so shall it be meted out to you." If you send forth good thoughts they return in blessings; if you send forth hatred it returns in curses; powerless to harm, the arrows of hate glance back to the one who sent them; it is the law of spiritual life in the spheres; shadowed spirits can not hurt you by their hate if they bore it.

"But," you say, "I still fear. I have heard there are unlimited bad spirits dogging the footsteps of mortals, for their ruin." Even if it was so, there are billions of good spirits—there are millions of loving mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters; the love of pure little children; the tender care of spirit guardians, reaching forth to save you, and they are full of power.

There are shadowed spirits, those who are spiritually ill, who are morally ill. A spirit who is shadowed and who comes to mortals to swear and thus work out an earthly vibration, is not of necessity, evil, but he is taking the first step toward salvation—he has begun the path toward progression—God speed him on the way! And thank the divine powers that there is salvation for all.

Oh, ye of earth! the grand Over-Soul and the spiritual Grace are like tides which spread to every atom of the universe, inundating all things, reaching all spiritual states; illumining the penitent Magdalen and pointing to her the way upward—touching the shadowed murderer with its white rays and bidding him come up higher; the All-Powerful Good, and divine compassion are the balm which shall heal every sorrow of the soul and shed over it the light of gladness; love is an attribute of spirit and love dominates the spiritual spheres—not hate. The dark spirits even, bear a message to your earth, thus all works for good. The power of love and good are over all, and it is so dominant that it can conquer all the imps of hades; it can swallow all the demons of fear, even Satan himself; it can pierce the darkness of the deepest pit and let the sunshine of soul in. There is not a spirit lurking in the shadow but can be reached with the God-light in the course of time and be brought into the kingdom of soul. Thus good is forever growing and shadow (evil) is ever lessening and all is activity and progression.

So, if you philosophize a little you will understand that this matter of "evil spirits," is not beyond help.

When the obsessed spirit, after trying to work out its earthly vibration, is unable to free itself from the mortal, the latter should employ the services of a wise and spiritual healer and medium who will be able to sever the connection between spirit and mortal. I say wise because there are many such who pose as exorcisors simply for gain, and who are loud-mouthed in telling the deeds of wonder they have performed in getting rid of dark spirits. The latter may present themselves in the guise of good and noble spirits, pretending that they are personages of high spiritual rank, such as Jesus, Mary, his mother, Socrates, etc.

Many Spiritualists will remember one of your most noted lady lecturers who disappeared for years from your midst, on the plea that Christ had promised her that he would some day be able to materialized by her side in the broad light of day; she gave up all, to isolate herself; the spiritual field lost one of its best workers; the years passed on, the promise unfulfilled in earth life.

When a so-called medium tells you that he saw the Nazarene, that he is a frequent visitor in his home, you may consider the statement for some time before accepting it as true. I have known earth-bound spirits to personate Christ simply to make mediums believe that it was the higher forces who were manifesting, instead of the lower. Mediums who are vain, conceited, and who love sensational phases and who court notoriety, and who want it reported that they have wonderful personages as controls, draw mischievous spirits who pretend to be the Nazarene, or St. John the Baptist. Had they said Ananias it would be nearer the truth.

The thought-waves of mortals seem laden with anxiety concerning the dangers of mediumship, an agitation due to the matter expressed in this open arena.

I must say that mediumistic people are more prone than others to the persistency of the earth-bound spirits in entering their aura for the purpose of working out an earthly vibration, and these should be prudent in the matter of their development. What can the Spiritualist expect when he looks the field over and sees the hosts of those who are rampant in desiring—in accomplishing one aim, one object, namely, that of posing before the world as a wonderful phenomenon, a miracle-worker who will attract the gaping crowds and get some of its dollars? Many mediums of the fortune-telling type are responsible for the annoyance caused by earth-bound spirits, for in their zeal to give their sitter an equivalent for his money, they tell him that he has the making of a wonderful medium in him, and portray in glowing colors the great development he will obtain if he seeks the services of some itinerant developer; to place himself in the power of such, is sure to bring its evil consequences, for there are people who take up the profession simply to fill their pockets; they know nothing of the system of development required by their patrons, but they humor him in his conceit and project upon him the sordidness and selfishness which characterizes their efforts, and when too late, he will find that all he has developed is a condition inviting the approach of earth-bound spirits. There are not dollars enough in the world to buy mediumship or develop it where its elements do not exist. It can not be bought, it must be inherent in the one who aspires to it—MEDIUMS ARE BORN AND NOT MADE.

There are some forms of mediumship which it takes a life-time to develop, and even then the fruition may take place in spirit life and not on earth. The higher forms of mediumship, and those embodying some spheres of inspiration are only developed through earthly conditions and experiences employing years of time; they require, not a human "developer," but the action of certain states and conditions upon their spiritual natures before their gifts can be unfolded, and money can not buy it—only these states and experiences can develop it. Spiritual teachers and guides, those who feel they have a mission to perform with humanity, first look the field over and after due forethought choose an instrument who will be adapted for their use; they then direct and unfold her in such a manner as shall conduce to their work. These instruments are not liable to be overcome by the insistency of earth-bound spirits, for they are under the especial guidance of spiritual preceptors who protect them.

Again, there are some forms of mediumship which unfold under the ministrations of a well-balanced developing medium.

There are many Spiritualists who start out, alone, imbued with conceit and vanity to make mediums of themselves; they have not the slightest idea what, if any, their inherent gift may be; they think they can compel or force mediumship to come; they imagine they can have whatever gift they desire and they "sit" for materialization when they have not a particle of its composing elements in them; or for ballot-reading, and testgiving when, probably they are adapted for inspirational mediumship only. The result is they attract to themselves earthbound forces. If the people of earth open the avenues to these spirits they will come. It is usually known to a chosen instrument when the spiritual guides have selected her for development; she will feel the vibrations and magnetic currents they have set in operation around her, or she will be given the knowledge in some way. Many would-be mediums may feel that they are called, or imagine that they can persuade a spirit control from the spirit spheres, but the safest rule to follow is to WAIT UNTIL YOU ARE CHOSEN! You will then have the protection that a wise spirit band can give, and one which you may be sure is fully adapted to your unfoldment and requirements.

There is no danger in wise, intelligent mediumship, from earth-bound spirits, but there is in illegitimate and ignorant mediumship. There is danger in making yourself negative to the world of spirit and trusting yourself so wholly to it as to say, "Here I am, spirits, come and take me and make of me a medium, do with me as you will." The sure safeguard, in mediumship, is to preserve your mental balance and thus protect yourself from earth-bound spirits. No mediumship can possibly be forced. When you find that you have been chosen for the work, you can best be developed by living up to the highest revelation of truth and righteousness and demanding the same in the disembodied spirits who would approach you. You will know them by their works; "try them" under the light of your own intuition. Earth-bound spirits cannot harm you when your mediumship is characterized by reason and good judgment, although they may enter your aura and let you know that they are there; secure in your own integrity you need not fear them; when they have performed their mission they will depart.

LETTER FROM ROCKFORD, ILL.

The Work of the Spiritual Science Society.

I thought I would write a line or two, to let you know how things are progressing in this part of the state.

The Spiritual Science Society held their election of officers last January, which resulted in the election of A. Booth, president, Mrs. A. Pierce, vice-president, J. L. Everett, secretary, Mr. M. Blacker, Mrs. F. C. Cramer and Mrs. Valentine as trustees. During the meantime we have had to lose both ladies as trustees; Mrs. Valentine removing to a farm in the country, and later, Mrs. F. C. Cramer, with her husband, have gone to the Pacific coast, and is located in Los Angeles. We are very sorry indeed, to have lost these two members, who were always faithful and ever ready to give a helping hand in the cause they loved so dearly.

At the beginning of the present term the new officers had a rather difficult task before them, things had got into a letnargy, and interest on the wane, and at the first board meeting I asked each one to pledge fidelity to the cause, and then the society, so that we could work with a will and better conditions. Everyone accepted the burden cheerfully, and we started out to present the cause of Spiritualism to the people of Rockford as it never had been presented before. We secured the very best talent we possibly could, and before the month of March had set in we realized that we were on the right track.

Our attendance commenced to increase Sunday by Sunday, until we filled our hall to overflowing, several times people were obliged to stand all through the meeting, and many going away on account of not being able to obtain a seat. To make a fair estimate, we had an average attendance, from May, 1904 to the end of January, 1904, of fifty-eight; since the end of January, to the end of June, we have had an average attendance of one hundred and twenty-five, so you see we have made some progress.

The first medium we had was the old tried and faithful worker, Madame Brunswick, of Dixon. We think that Madam Brunswick is the best test medium in Northern Illinois. Her work is thorough and convincing, and she holds her audiences spell-bound from beginning to end. Madam Brunswick served the society in February, one Sunday, all of April, and two Sundays in June.

The next medium was Mrs. Frances Wheeler, late of La Crosse, Wis. Of Mrs. Wheeler's work we can say that every time she comes to Rockford there is always a kind reception for her. Her trance lectures are very instructive to the audience, she having a guide who tries to make clear to people the principles of Spiritualism. Her test work is very fine, and many times she stays by the skeptics until she makes them recognize the test given them. We consider that Wisconsin has something to be proud of in the person of Mrs. Wheeler, who is so gifted as to be able to present the cause of Spiritualism in these two elegant phases. Mrs. Wheeler served the society four Sundays, one in February and three in March.

The next medium was Mr. G. H. Brooks, of Wheaton, Ill., who served us all of May and one Sunday in June. We find in brother Brooks an earnest and energetic worker, speaking from topics selected by the audiencees and handling them in a thorough manner. The lectures were forceful, logical and comprehensive; to those who had made an advance study of Spiritualism it was a rare treat to listen to him. His psychometric readings were listened to with deep interest, and favorable comments were heard on all sides. As Brother Brooks was a new speaker here he created a favorable impression, and many have expressed a desire to hear him at some future time. The society wishes and hopes to be able to continue the good work that it started out with. What we lack is the variety of foreign talent, and we should very much like to hear from good test mediums who are willing to serve a small society and thus awaken more interest in our cause at a reasonable cost to us.

CHESTERFIELD CAMP.

The Work, the Workers, and Some Opinions.

It is a pleasure to live at Chesterfield camp. The social life of the camp would remind one of a great happy family, more than anything else.

We have many mediums here, of all phases, and contrary to the usual opinion, there exists none of the jealousies supposed to mar the harmony of camp life. There is a spirit of brotherly and sisterly love between the mediums especially, which of itself is doing a great work toward furthering the cause of Spiritualism with those who are still neophytes in our ranks.

On Saturday we had our lawn fete and flag raising, led by our loved sister, Mrs. Anna Gillespie, who is without a peer in the way of conducting entertainments and social functions.

On Sunday, Rev. B. F. Austin lectured in the morning to a very appreciative audience; he was followed by Mr. Frank Ripley, who gave many tests and messages to those hungry for some word from the loved ones passed beyond. At the close of his work he was enthusiastically applauded.

The afternoon services were opened with a lecture by Bro. E. W. Sprague. His subject was "The Mysteries of Life," which he handled as only a master can.

We always have good and appropriate singing and music at all meetings in the auditorium, and a fact which I consider worthy of note is, that all our best talent is from our own ranks; indeed our mediums here are able to furnish the most classical music, vocal and instrumental. Our mediums who have taken part in the services in the past two weeks are ladies and gentlemen of culture and refinement, and are persons whom any one would be glad and proud to welcome into the most sacred precincts of home life. I think we as Spiritualist should look with pride on this, since we can say, "These are our jewels," and they shine as bright as the brightest stars in any of the contemporary religious movements of to-day.

On Sunday, our sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Reeziger of Chicago, sang a solo, and Mrs. DeLoux, one of Chicago's noted mediums, sang two solos, which caused the audience to break into applause at the close. Mrs. Lucile DeLoux, has, by her genial and lovable disposition and her willingness to assist in all things, become a camp favorite. She is doing very well in her mediumship, and has given satisfaction so far in her work.

Mr. G. H. Walser and wife, of Lincoln, Neb., authors and mediums, publishers of a book of poems entitled "The Bouquet," have just left the camp for another field of work. They are very good mediums and it was with regret that the campers bid them God-speed yesterday.

Tuesday, Mr. E. W. Sprague addressed the mediums on their duties to Spiritualism and the state and National associations of Spiritualists, explaining the advantages of united effort and what the objects of the N. S. A. are, and denying the false ideas that have been fostered by a certain element, saying that the N. S. A. was not opposed to mediums of any phase, and that no one man was the association, and it should not be blamed for the utterances of any individual. Mr. Sprague prefaced his remarks by saying that he was getting very sorely tired of the continual harping on the fraud question, believing that it was hurting both mediums and Spiritualism," and hoped that the subject would not be given so prominent a place hereafter in the discussions of the leaders in the spiritual work. And right along this line I wish to say: I have found among some persons a false impression of the attitude of The Progressive Thinker toward mediums. This opinion is held by some who have never seen the paper or read it. Who has given this as the attitude of the paper I am not now prepared to say. However, I do wish to say, most emphatically, as a life-long friend of the editor of The Progressive Thinker and as one who has read every copy of The Progressive Thinker since its first inception, THAT IT IS NOT, NEVER HAS BEEN, AND NEVER WILL BE OPPOSED TO MEDIUMS OF ANY PHASE, AND ALL THAT IS ASKED IS A FAIR READING OF THE PAPER TO CONVINCE ANYONE OF THE FACT. I FIND IN MY CANVASS OF THE PEOPLE THAT THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER HAS A HOST OF FRIENDS. I am sending by separate mail several subscriptions, and expect to do better next week. H. B.

THE GREATEST EDUCATOR.

Some Comments in Regard to Existing Conditions.

I consider The Progressive Thinker the greatest educator in the world in its special line.

I wish I was competent to contribute my personal experiences to its columns; but the master minds are doing it for me, in many instances, it is amusing to read the pros and cons from the pens of our leading spiritual writers, through the Open Court, and now again through the Court of Inquiry, regarding the acknowledged bare-faced trickery of Winans. Is it not evidence enough when a prisoner admits his guilt, and his false robes were found in his possession, without alluding any more to his unconsciousness in trance—or out of trance? While outside of his cabinet is he supposed to be traveling from place to place in a trance state of mind, evil spirits to the contrary?

It would take a fine microscope to find any justifiable ground for his defense.

Guilty is any Spiritualist medium who carries about their person masks of any kind, and palms the same off on the public in the name of a ghost of some one's beloved.

Is there not evidence enough to be found in the different phases of mediumship, without resorting to imitation, or such tomfoolery?

I have any amount of evidence to satisfy all my five senses that materialization is as true and as tangible to the touch and to the eye as clairvoyance is to the soul sense or seeing; and without going to materializing seances, and sometimes without special conditions or preparations of any kind.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

Spiritism and Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's Theories in Regard to It. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey. Demonstrates futility and inadequacy of Hudson's explanations of spiritual phenomena. Price 25 cents.

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

HELP IN TIME OF NEED.

Remarkable Case of Healing Through Spirit Control.

Several years ago I heard a gentleman describing some wonderful psychic phenomena which he had witnessed, that of a young lady who had no knowledge of music, but who, when under control, could play the most difficult classical music; and in conclusion the gentleman said, "I tell you, friends, there is a power that can almost raise the dead."

I have since found there is such power, and that we are wonderfully complex creatures, full of inner powers and soul forces that we know not of.

When I was but a child I was conscious of an invisible influence over me. Then, as I grew older my spiritual powers developed, and one phase after another developed so rapidly that I could not classify my mediumship, and at last I was obliged to give up all but one. My mother said if I had had proper conditions for development I could have become a successful healing medium.

A short time after that, I had a remarkable test of this healing power, and I believe the time will come when this latent power in man shall be understood and practiced to such an extent that drugs will be but little used.

One night when my baby was about eighteen months old, I awoke from a sound sleep and found him suffering from croup. Oh, that awful barking cough, and rattling and gasping for breath! I treated him with all the simple home remedies that I knew of, and worked hard to bring him relief. But nothing seemed to do him any good; indeed, he seemed to be getting worse. I was in a terrible situation, for I was alone in the house, there were no neighbors to call in, and I dared not leave him alone and go for help, and in my despair I cried, "Oh, what shall I do?" Just then I heard a voice clearly and distinctly say, "Emma, you can heal baby; I will help you."

How eagerly I caught those words—they were my only hope! I answered, "O, yes, mother, I am ready."

In a few moments my right arm became rigid with a wonderful controlling power. It seemed as if my arm was transferred to some other person's shoulder, for I could not move my arm of my own volition. Then my hand made many rapid picking and throwing motions above the child's throat, and I heard the voice say, "Emma, I can pass matter through matter and you cannot see it done."

In a few moments I could see the child was feeling relief. Pretty soon my arm dropped to my side—the power was gone—the baby was saved. No more rattling, coughing and choking. His respirations were regular and easy, and the little fellow slept sweetly and soundly until morning. All the following day I watched for signs of croup, but he was completely cured and I was a very thankful woman.

When I hear skeptics say, "What good does Spiritualism do?" and "What is the use of developing spiritual power," I feel sorry for them, because they do not know. So many times have I been saved from trouble, danger and death. If I could not hear her speak, I would feel strongly impressed to do or not do a thing; or, of I could feel no impression, something would impel me to get my pencil and then she would come and give me loving counsel and advice, and her advice never once proved wrong.

I have had so much positive proof of my mother's presence, individuality and love, there is no room left in my mind for doubt.

Oh, I wish every one could have a high, sweet, spirit friend to help him through life.

One morning mother came to me and said, "Emma, Caroline —— is here, happy in her spirit home, and when she gets rested from the cares of life she is going to work for God."

I said, "What is she going to do?"

She answered, "Whatever her hands find to do."

I said, "When did she pass out?"

She replied, "Last night."

After that, I went out to call upon my sister and the first thing my sister said was, "Caroline —— died last night."

I said, "Yes, so mother just told me; the first I had heard of it."

This Caroline and my mother were great friends in life and thought much of each other.

Now, dear readers, have I not had abundant proof of life after death of the body? Some one has said, "One heartfelt thankful thought to God is the most fervent prayer," and sometimes my heart does go out in silent, wordless thanks for His wondrous love and works. I am sure I want to live in this dear old world of pleasure and pain as long as I can, and learn all I can, and do all the good I can, and when I can stay no longer I shall gladly turn to that blessed reality of which this life is but the shadow.

SPIRIT MANIFESTATIONS.

A Lady Relates Some Experiences.

On June 1, I had just come home from town when a spirit friend compelled me to write a letter to her mother who was at Conway visiting.

On June 13, at night, while the lamp was burning brightly, I heard a voice talking to me, and on June 15, I heard more than one voice talking—there seemed to be two or three.

On June 20, at night, while I had the lamp lit, and it was shining brightly, I was preparing the dough, so I could bake bread the next day. I happened to get the dough too thin, so I took the pail to the sack and put more flour in it. Then I went back to the table to set the pail on it, when it was taken from me and set on the table. I thought I had dropped it, and I said to myself, "My goodness; it is lucky I was so close to the table!" Just then a spirit told me it took it away from me.

On July 3, in the afternoon, I was sitting at the sewing machine sewing. It was cloudy and raining, and about 5 o'clock a neighbor lady came to see me. When she left I was still trying to thread the machine needle. I couldn't get it threaded. Just then there appeared a bright light on the east wall, just north of the window. It extended over to the machine and so lit up the eye of the needle that I could see to thread it.

On July 5, at night, just as soon as I had got the children to bed, I went to see a lady, a Spiritualist, to talk about Spiritualism. After I came home, I had a fine feeling come over me. I could feel love coming out of my heart, and it was flowing all over the world. I felt as if I could forgive all my enemies, and I did, and I cannot express the feeling I had.

On July 2, at half-past 12, just before we had dinner, I was sitting down, talking to my husband, when somebody or some spirit, put its hand on the side of my face; commencing on my right cheek, it went to the top of my head; then laid its hand flat on my head and face. When I got up to get dinner it was 15 minutes of 1 o'clock, by the clock, and when we sat down to eat our dinner it was 15 minutes of four o'clock, and when we got up from the table, it was 20 minutes of 1 o'clock again.

A SEANCE PRAYER.

Come, sweet angel band,
Come, and around us stand;
Throw your sweet influence over us;
Let us feel your comforting power.
Fill our hearts with Love's fondest dreams;
Lead us in paths of right; guard,
Guide our footsteps wherever we may go,
And make us worthy of your great love.
Come from your spirit home
To this mortal plane below,
To help us hold sweet communion
With those we adore. Amen.

TRAVELS IN THE SPIRIT REALMS.

Mrs. Besant Claims to Talk With the Dead—Leader of Theosophists Disclaims Supernatural Power, But Declares She Can Span the Chasm Between Life here and Life Beyond—Vegetarian Diet Necessary to Astral Phenomena—Illustrating the Fact That Spirit Phenomena Exist In All Departments of Life.

A white haired, white clad, stately woman, with deep gray eyes and a wonderful smile—such was the picture presented by Mrs. Annie Besant, the most famous of English mystics and leader of the world's Theosophists, says the Chicago Inter Ocean.

Round her gathered the Theosophists of the West yesterday—Frenchmen, Germans, Spaniards, Italians, Norwegians, Danes, and Americans, men and women representing what they call the Theosophic thought of the old and new worlds, at the great congress of Theosophists now being held in London. All were eager to exchange a words or two with the wonderful woman who had journeyed from Benares to preside over their meeting.

Eleven years under the Indian sun have not spoiled Mrs. Besant's complexion. Her expression, is sad, is serene. She greeted her followers in many languages.

On the lawn of an unoccupied mansion in Kensington, which the Theosophists have taken for an exhibition of mystic art, she talked of some of the wonders of Theosophy.

That any one can suspend animation and project his astral spirit into space, bridge the gulf between the life here and the life beyond—in a word, walk with the dead—was the startling theory quietly propounded in matter of fact tones by Mrs. Annie Besant.

Declares She Can Talk With Dead.

"I dislike to talk of astral phenomena and my own astral experiences," said the Theosophical leader. "But this I will say, as I have said many times before: I can project my astral spirit where I will, I can communicate with those of my friends who are dead.

"Don't think that I am claiming supernatural power. It is a case of simply using a law of nature not commonly understood.

"When I say that anyone can do this I mean anyone who will develop the power within him. A person who wants to be a great mathematician will devote long and arduous study to mathematics. So with what you call astral phenomena.

"Some Theosophists have this power, but comparatively few people have so studied and so worked as to be able to exercise it.

"Observe the difference between astral phenomena and Spiritualism; they are exactly the opposite. In Spiritualism the spirit returns to this plane; in the other the astral spirit of the living man or woman goes out of its own free will to meet the spirit which has passed.

"What happens to the body meanwhile? Sometimes it is in a trance, sometimes a sleep. Have you ever thought of what becomes of you when your body sleeps? We know.

"No; it is not easy to attain command of the astral body." Annie Besant smiled at the question. "It means when you are traveling over the world as I do sometimes I must half starve, because I cannot get the kind of food that is necessary.

Pure Life Necessary to Astral Spirit.

"Long years of study and pure life are necessary if the astral spirit is to have power to leave the material body; but, dieting, too, enters into the preparation. A strictly vegetarian diet, though milk may be allowed, must be resorted to. I myself have not touched flesh foods for sixteen years."

Mrs. Besant, however, warmly repudiated the suggestion that insufficient food was in any way responsible for astral phenomena. The diet may be sufficient, but it must be pure.

From astral subjects the leader of Theosophists passed to that other plank of the Theosophic platform, the doctrine of reincarnation. She herself, it will be remembered, claims, in that other existence in which she so firmly believes, to have been a Brahmin woman.

"The Theosophic idea that there has been another existence for us, an existence which some of us can even remember at times, once scoffed at, is beginning to be believed.

"Not every one remembers this previous existence, but there are many hundreds indeed, and not by any means all of them Theosophists, who do."

Theosophy has a great deal connected with it that is common to Spiritualism. Astral flights to the regions celestial are common in our ranks—so common as to cause but little comment.

ASTRAL.

WIT AND WISDOM.

"Beware When the Great God Lets Loose a Thinker on this Planet. Then All Things Are at Risk."

Men pay more for wit than they do for wisdom;—more for luxuries than necessities. One man saves his ideas,—another dissipates them. One man utilizes his experiences, coins them into money, literature, art,—another throws them away without realizing anything upon the knowledge gained. Some people have a natural refinement, which is seen in their language, manner and habit, others acquire it by education, but the great mass remain crude, coarse, and barbaric.

There are many persons—light souls, who have no deep experiences; they know neither joy nor sorrow. A noble thought, a tender feeling, a beautiful sentiment falls dead upon their minds. Among such the deeply serious nature meets with no response. The thoughts of the masses are shallow, frivolous, and unappreciative. You might as well undertake to make a lasting monument of sand, or write history upon the waves of the sea, as to make an abiding impression upon the hearts of the multitude. They sorrow only for a day.

There is no equality in life—no sameness in nature. There cannot be. Everything is diversified, changeable and unstable. If the earth was a dead level no water would run; if the temperature remained even no breeze would blow, no water fall.

Neither nature nor life produces duplicates. Each individual experience stands separate and distinct from any other. Every person carries his character in his style, manner, walk and in every muscle of his face;—they all bear testimony to his inheritance and acquirements. If we were thoroughly acquainted with the laws of our being, in the very sound of our voice could be read the mental and moral powers of the mind. The fruit of the vineyard is flavored with the soil.

A man's business or profession stamps itself upon his life. Habit in time becomes a part of self; it moulds the form, controls the thought and governs the actions of men. The love and practice of truth leads to purity of character and purpose. Whatever is false, is vulgar. Show, pretense, and unreality can only abide with the crude and ignorant. Ruskin says, "* * a woman of feeling would not wear false jewels * * * the using of them is just as downright and inexcusable as a lie * * it is an imposition, a vulgarity, an impertinence, and a lie."

Neither virtue nor vice can long dissimulate. No individual can change his nature. Education and environment may modify but not eradicate its original tendency. "Can the miser forget his gold, the ambitious his fame, the philosopher his thought?" Professions of faith only change the outward appearance, not the inward man.

Compare the life, the teachings, the practice and the words of Christ, with the life, teachings and practices of his professed and most influential followers to-day—and was ever contrast more flagrant? Neither in words nor deeds is there identity or likeness. The church has never led in a reform movement against any social or political evil that has beset mankind. Robert G. Ingersoll is quoted as saying, "Frederick Douglass told me that he had lectured upon the subject of Freedom for twenty years before he was permitted to set his foot in a church."

Christianity does not consist in forms, liturgy and ceremony. The silent worship of awe, reverence and adoration is more acceptable service than the worship of words. Words are too weak to express the feelings of the soul in its most extreme needs.

"Ah, deep is silence—deep as human souls,—
Aye! deep as life, beyond all lead and line;
And words are but the broken shells that shine
Along the shore by which the ocean rolls."

You take away some people's ignorance and superstition and they would be surprised to see how little remained of their mental and spiritual make-up. The reverence for holy books, the creeds of the church, the pictures of saints, the bones of martyrs and pieces of the true cross—are all the product of ignorance and superstition. Every truth is a divine revelation. The habit of mankind is to read only such literature and listen only to such teachings as agree with their preconceived opinions.

When an old edifice is being repaired—it has to be propped and guarded at many points—else the structure would fall to the ground. With the multitude it is dangerous to radically change any long established belief. Men move in grooves and ruts. They reiterate, year after year, the same ideas, words and phrases. Sometimes a particular question, real or unreal, will take possession of the mind to the exclusion of everything else. As all roads lead to Rome, so every discussion finally leads up to the one topic. It is related of Senator [illegible] that he once visited a lunatic asylum and "the superintendent told him he must say cheerful things to the patients, and therefore when he saw a lunatic sitting astride of a table beating it with a whip and pretending to drive it with a pair of string lines, he walked up to him and said: 'That's a fine hobby you have there, my friend.' 'It isn't a hobby,' answered the lunatic, 'it's a horse.' 'What's the difference between a horse and a hobby?' suggested Mr. Evarts. The lunatic turned on him with an air of supreme contempt, and remarked, 'You blank fool, anybody can get off a horse, but nobody ever got off a hobby.'" The majority of people never consciously change their views on any of the great life questions.

Were it not for the oncoming generations, the continual pouring in of new and unstamped minds, thought would crystallize and become unchangeable. There are two things in life that a man is sure to be in thorough accord;—the doctrine of the church to which he belongs and the political party of which he is a member. His friends may be wrong, his family grieve him, but his church and his party are certainly right. No man, nor his belief can stand too near inspection. Few things will bear a close definition. We cannot explain God—we may not be able to define religion or life. Beecher once said that "the best commentary on the New Testament was a good Christian life, but the edition was limited."

The breaking up of old beliefs, of old institutions, is always attended with danger, but in time the world adjusts itself to the new conditions and moves on as before. Progress sometimes hesitates, apparently lies dormant, but it reappears again upon a higher and more exalted plain. Individuals, the same as governments and nations, either advance or recede.

But there is the reverse side to every question. Progression and retrogression go hand in hand. As society improves on one line it degenerates on another. Civilization, culture and refinement drive a people away from true democracy. It creates barriers and conditions which divide and alienate society. The very brevity of life spurs one on to arduous action. As the world moves, we knowingly or unknowingly move with it. An unconscious change is continually going on. Individually and collectively, we are no two days alike. A law may become inoperative before it is dropped from the statute book. While the creeds of the churches are rarely changed, a majority of the teachings have lost their power.

"For forms of faith let graceless zealots fight;
He can't be wrong whose life is in the right."

Our ideas change with the broadening of the mental vision. The person we despise to-day we may adore to-morrow. Things that are impossible for us to do at one time are easy at another. The state of one's health affects his views. No man can have a perfect mind without a perfect body; they both exist together. Age, environment, and mental moods have a bearing on our opinions. Hate is weakness—love is strength. Youth is optimistic—age is pessimistic. The young take every statement at par, or at a premium if necessary. Extremes meet along all the lines of life. The eagle takes in a whole province at a single flight, while the ground bird is contented to view the world from a bush or a stump.

Many of the fundamental principles governing our course are overlooked. Perfect fruition, complete realization of our hopes breeds weakness, unrest and dissatisfaction. Our strength lies in aspiration, expectation, and in intense desire. Perfection, in time would become tiresome and happiness would end in monotony. Man was made to struggle. His natural condition is unrest.

"In palaces are hearts that ask in discontent and pride, Why life is such a dreary task, and all good things denied."

It needs all kinds of talent, religion, morals, and conditions of society to meet the requirements of the people. This is the history of the world up to date; what the future may develop is another story. The scavenger is as necessary a factor in community as the priest. The buzzard is protected by law as well as the robin. There is a reason and a purpose in every act of man and every movement of society. It is claimed that even the wild orgies and disorders of the elements are under supreme control. Law in the physical world and justice in the moral realm are balances that weigh impartially all questions that come within their domain. No prayer, no petition, no special providence, can change their course. Nature touches every chord from the highest to the lowest. With all our boasted knowledge no one is able to say that good could exist without evil or that the meanest worm that crawls beneath our feet is not as necessary in the Creator's mind as the most civilized man.

We despise that which we cannot understand. Climate, position and age determine a man's physical, mental, and spiritual condition. There are the universal men—poets, prophets, philosophers,—great souls that learn in dreams, see in visions, and speak in prophecy,—men who touch a universal chord of hope, of fear, of salvation,—that vibrates more or less distinct in every human heart. The world recognizes them, believes in them, follows them.

Students and scholars are continually pressing upon the frontiers of knowledge. All dogmas, however venerable with age, all books, however sacred and holy, are passing under microscopic investigation. Every belief, rite, and ceremony, is traced back to its source. The very citadel of the soul is questioned and asked to give up its secret. The expression of the Psalmist, "What is man, that thou art mindful of him?" is growing in significance under the searching eye of scientific criticism. And the end is not yet. But somewhere there must be a perfect revelation of man's destiny. Somewhere there must be an altar around which all mankind can worship—else the universe is a lie, truth a phantom, and life a mockery.

"What though all creeds be torn and tempest driven?
They are but the outward form
'Ound which, unruffled by the wildest storm,
Still lives the Faith Supreme for which all faith hath striven."

A USEFUL PUBLICATION.

"An Official Register of the National, State and Local Spiritualists' Associations, Lyceums, Camp-meetings and Mediums."

There has recently reached The Banner of Light, a recent publication, bearing the somewhat cumbersome title of "An Official Register of National, State and Local Spiritualists' Associations, Lyceums, Camp-meetings and Mediums," which comprehensively describes the character and scope of the book.

This work has been compiled by that energetic and capable western worker, Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, and from a somewhat hasty perusal the painstaking and far-reaching nature of her inquiries are plainly made manifest. The information presented covers thirty-five states, extending from Maine in the east to Florida in the south; California in the west to Oregon in the northwest, with other states included in the area bounded by those mentioned.

It is satisfactory to find that in the states enumerated, there are to be found in all 505 meeting-places devoted to our cause. This does not, of course, mean that there are altogether that number of legally organized societies, as, in numerous cases, the meetings are not of that character, although doing their part in the general work. The spread of state associations is making steady progress and Mrs. Fixen reports the existence of twenty-one such bodies, which leaves twelve states without such bodies. With reference to the number of lyceums the Register states the number of lyceums throughout the country as thirty-four. On that head, no doubt, National Superintendent Ring will be able to corroborate the figures given.

In nineteen of the states, one or more camp-meetings are held, the total being, it appears, thirty-six. We are sure Mrs. Fixen will pardon us for drawing her attention to a detail which may have been necessarily omitted, that is, her failure to present any intimation as to whether a society is in affiliation with the N. S. A. The information is not given, as far as we can see, in connection with either state or local organizations.

At the end of the book fourteen pages of double column matter is devoted to a list of lecturers, test and message mediums, healers, astrologers, materializing mediums, physical mediums, mediums for spirit pictures, writers and singers, with their addresses appended. This should prove an exceedingly useful feature to the secretaries of societies.

The Register has a finely executed portrait of Mrs. Abby Louise Pettingill, president of the City of Light Assembly. For a frontispiece, there is a capital reproduction of the portrait of J. R. Francis, the editor of The Progressive Thinker, and in the preface Mrs. Fixen accords her thanks to the editor of this journal, and his various contemporaries, for assistance rendered her in the compilation of the Register.

We congratulate Mrs. Fixen upon the care she has exhibited in her work and also in the neat and attractive appearance the printer has imparted to the publication.—Banner of Light.

The above useful work can be obtained by addressing this office. Price, $1. It is gotten up in fine style, and is chockful of valuable statistics.

To obtain the remission of his sins a Christian should feel a hearty sorrow for actions he possibly took great pleasure in committing. AN IMPRESSIVE SERMON.

Presenting Soul-Elevating Thoughts and Suggestions.

The Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath.—Mark 2:27.

That was probably the first scientific statement of the law of the Sabbath that had ever fallen on Jewish ears. It is the final word on the whole question of the observance of a day of rest. The moral obligation to rest on one day in seven cannot rest upon the code given by Moses, neither can it rest upon the custom of the churches. Moral obligations are not created by laws. The authority of every code must lie in some necessity, some law written in the constitution of man, and it must be supported by some evidence of benefits received from its observance.

Man needs this day of rest; that fact alone gives force to this law. Experience demonstrates the necessity of the Sunday and the advantage of its rest. The law of the Sabbath is given not to protect a day but to protect the race. The day is sacred not because the Almighty stole it from man's measure of time and kept it for himself, but because it is reserved, set aside, saved from man's selfishness for his highest service. It is desecrated not in that men steal it from heaven but in that they despoil it of its possibilities for themselves.

The Sabbath is not an institution so much as an opportunity. It is not an idol, a fetich, a something to be served or to be kept in a glass cabinet. It is rather a tool or a servant, a day of rest for the body, to turn the eye from its long downward looking that it might glance up, to straighten the bent back, and the bowed heart to uplift.

This day was made a separate day for man, not for his money but for himself. It is the little space, the break in the walls of daily grind when the soul may assert itself, when a man may pause long enough to remember that he has a right to say, with upward look, "Our Father," that he is more than a cog in this world machine, more than one slave driven by another.

The Sabbath was made for man, but not for his misery. Nowhere is its loving law more flagrantly violated than when the religionist would make it a day of gloom, when men are taught to put on the garb of mourning, and children learn by harsh repression to dread its dawn, and to delight at its darkening.

How then shall one keep this day? By making it a delight, the happiest and most helpful of all the week. Whatever makes a better, clearer, stronger, more valuable man is good for the day; Whatever weakens, degrades, cultivates selfishness or corrupts the heart is its desecration. An orgy of church may be a desecration as truly —though not as disastrously—as an orgy of pleasure. The day is to be judged by its fruits on the morrow. That is a worthy Sabbath that leaves a larger heart, a clearer head, a nobler spirit, and a deeper love for man, for this fair world, and for all good things.

It must be a day when the finer qualities come into play, when the inner life, the better self has a chance. The whole man is rested, refreshed as, in the course of his upward climbing, he comes to those plateaux of vision. They permit of deep breaths, larger outlooks, cheering retrospects, and bracing prospects.

This spirit of observation cultivates care for others. Every benefit that comes to one that one will seek to keep for all. It is a day of opportunity to brush the cobwebs from some hearts, to brighten faces and homes with good cheer, to cultivate happiness all round. It will surely then be a happy day for ourselves. It is better to keep the day merry than to let it get mildewed.—Chicago Tribune.

It is the infidels outside the church who make the people progress—the people inside do not believe anything—they only think they do.—Elbert Hubbard.

A CLOSE CALL.

J. Madison Allen Depicts His Recent Experience.

To the Editor:—Your readers will, no doubt be glad to learn that I have mostly recovered from the severe electric shock received from the lightning some weeks ago.

We were experiencing that night a most terrific thunder storm, accompanied by floods of rain—one of the most fierce and furious displays of electrical energy I have ever witnessed. At last, in the final wind-up, there was an incessant deafening roar and rattle crash-bang of thunder peals—claps so frequent, so close, heavy and sharp, it seemed like the very flood-gates of the electrical heavens had been unhinged, the power house engineer had gone crazy, and that a monster sky-orchestra with ten thousand snare drums and cymbals, anvils, horns, double basses, squawking and screeching clarionettes, etc., had been set going in a perfect frenzy of discord, chaos and confusion.

I was strangely affected. My brain was in a whirl; my nerves were on fire; strange and fantastic scenes and forms or beings, human and sub-human flitted before my vision, all in constant motion. The beings seemed to be mostly wading in a sort of sea of thin yellowish mud! Next day and the following I lay in a strange stupor much of the time; then excruciating pains would suddenly take possession.

After some days I began to improve. The brain became nearly normal. The fantastic imagery gave way largely to my usual legitimate clairvoyance. The bodily functions however, still gave me severe pains, and I saw before me a long period of physical suffering.

But help was at hand in the nick of time. Kind angels above brought to our home a good brother, a recent arrival in this city, who possesses a very abundant and powerful vital magnetism of his own and who is also attended by a superior band of spirit healers. He had not heard of my illness, and knew no special reason for calling, but said he felt strongly impressed to come and finally yielded to the prompting. Before leaving he held my hands in his. Soon my body and brain seemed filled with a new life, the pains had left me, the lightning had vacated the premises. I was relieved, renewed, felt myself again.

I shall ever feel grateful to our good Brother Higgins. His influences and methods remind me of those of the celebrated Dr. J. R. Newton, in the good old days of forty-five years ago. May he meet ever with the encouragement and appreciation which he so richly deserves.

In this connection it is proper to remark that the writer does not feel ready yet to lay down the spiritual work in which he has been so long engaged as a teacher and representative of the Spiritual Philosophy and movement. Almost or quite a half century ago I began to realize an unseen presence and guidance. In 1860 I gave myself up unreservedly to the process of development. Attaining speedily the conscious trance state, with spirit vision and hearing, etc., my life, my energies and efforts, my heart's deepest devotion, were solemnly dedicated and consecrated to the work of the spirit, for the welfare, progress and happiness, the spiritualization, harmonization and unification of the human race "seen and unseen."

The longer I live the more do I rejoice that I have been able to keep myself in such constant touch, such sympathetic connectedness or "at-one-ment" with the guiding light, in which abide the celestial originators of the Spiritual movement.

I cast my thoughts upward, in earnest aspiration to the high heavens and to the world's noblest workers and reformers, of ancient and modern times—who have labored and struggled in behalf of liberty, justice, peace and progress, and for the practical realization of the noblest ideals of which the human mind has been capable; and there descends upon me (like the gentle dew-drops upon the thirsty lawn) responsive inspirational waves of light, life and love, which fill my brain and diffuse themselves throughout my inner being and deepest consciousness, and I am lifted up to where no earthly griefs or wrongs can dwell.

Oh! how beautiful is life,
When free from pain and strife!
How smooth the moments roll
Within th' enraptured soul,
And joy and peace and love,
Fresh from bright realms above,
Make happy and sweet each day,
As we tread life's earthly way!

TO A SLEEPING CHILD.

Little child, lying so still and sweet,
Clothed in snowy white from head to feet,
Soft brown curls 'round thy rosy face,
Half hidden in folds of frosty lace;
Who sent thee from Babyland?
Who fashioned thee with skillful hand?
What secrets held within thy breast?
Thou sleeping one, in sheltered nest.

Didst thou come from land of sun beams,
Or from drowsy shore of day dreams,
Where poppies sway their scarlet heads,
And lily with purple violet weds?
How came thou here, on clouds of white
Pushed o'er the rainbow bridge of light?
Or did an angel, with strong deep breath,
Blow thee to this land of death?

No answer comes, but 'cross thy face
A smile first flits, then gives place
To frowns and tears. Doth by-gone days
Torment thee with memories of evil ways?
Didst thou once fill another mold,
And didst thou live alone for gold?
Or didst thou do no man a wrong,
And all thy days be days of song?

Smile, thou sleeping one! Now thou art here
I'll make thy present life, a pleasure dear.
Though storms shall surge about thy nest,
I'll shield thee, love, safe on my breast.
And if life's stones shall bruise thy feet,
I'll hold thee high about them, sweet.
Or if you falter or with pain shall cry,
I'll answer sob for sob, and cry for cry.

Sow good services; sweet remembrances will grow from them.—Mme. de Stael.

LIFE OF A CARMELITE NUN.

All Save an Hour of the Day Spent in Silence—Much of the Time They Fast, and Their Food is Coarse and Scanty.

An instance of superstition run to seed is afforded by the Romish order of Carmelite nuns. As an example of effort to secure saintliness of character by means of a practically worthless life, a life of no use to the world, a life of drear devotion to a really selfish purpose, in the guise of unselfish denial of the natural and proper desires pertaining to human beings, their exhibition is of value. It is an object lesson in the habits of sickly thought generated and cultivated by Romanism.

No sane and healthy mind can view otherwise than with abhorrence the idea of attaining spiritual growth by starving body and mind, stunting mentality, and practicing painful privations, and denials of the things that, pure and good in themselves, go to make life on earth happy and useful.

The following account from the New York Sun shows to what abnormal lives religious miseducation can lead weak minds. J. C. UNDERHILL.

Hammond, Ind.

The Roman Catholic churches in New York celebrated last Sunday the feast of Mount Carmel and the foundation of the order of Carmelite nuns, the most rigid religious order in the world. The celebration in this diocese was of especial interest this year owing to the project to establish a branch of the Carmelites in New York. There is already a house of the Carmelite fathers here, but their rules and obligations are much more secular.

Little of the life of a Carmelite nun is known to the world this side the bars. Imagine eleven women entirely cut off from the world outside living 365 days in every years of their lives in almost in every year of their lives in almost absolute silence, penance, fast and much of the night spent in oft-repeated prayer, with no food except the coarsest; wearing rough woolen clothing next their skins winter and summer, frequently adding to this discomfort sharp instruments of torture.

The order still retains the term "discalced," which was applied in the early days when the nuns went barefooted. However, Saint Teresa, on an occasion when she was traveling, overheard a compliment of a young cavalier on her well turned ankle, and thenceforth she ordained that the members of her order should wear stockings. These are made of rough wool, and are fashioned in a loose bag-like form. The dress of the Carmelite is of coarse wool, with a brown scapular, which reaches from the throat to the hem of the garment. Over white bands which frame the face is worn a long black veil.

The Carmelite is received into the order robed in white like a bride, symbolic of a spouse of Christ. Her bridal robes are then discarded, and with them all intimacy with the world.

The day of the Carmelite nun begins long before the world outside her cloister is astir. The fast is broken at 5 o'clock with black coffee and bread eaten in silence. Before the plate as an only ornament in their refectory is a human skull, reminding them to prepare for death. They abstain from meat except in case of sickness, and fast rigidly eight months in the year.

Following the morning repast, the black robed nuns go to the chapel and continue their long office of prayer. The morning hours are filled with work on vestments and scapulars. These nuns are noted throughout the world for their exquisite needlework. One of their strictest rules is that no one of them shall ever be idle and even when they are ill, some bit of sewing is ever at their side.

The noonday meal of a Carmelite consists of two boiled vegetables, bread and tea and sometimes codfish. Then, and in the afternoon hours of prayer and labor, no word of conversation is spoken. The evening meal and the night prayer close the day, and with the exception of a little hour before retirement when the nuns are allowed to talk, the day of silence passes into a night of even greater solitude.

The sleeping apartment of a Carmelite is not much larger than a grave. The bed is composed of two pine boards laid across two wooden benches, a coarse tick filled with straw, a straw pillow, sheets of Saxony wool, winter and summer, and a brown woolen blanket. Above the head of the bed is hung a wooden cross without an image to remind the Carmelite that she herself must be attached to the cross of Christ. A plain table, sometimes a rough box turned on end, a wooden chair without cushion and a picture representing some saint or event in the life of Christ complete the appointments of the cell.

After the last chant between 9 and 11 o'clock at night, the nun makes a strict examination of her conscience, closing her night supplication with an act of contrition. There is an hour of vigil kept on Thursday night in memory of the Savior's agony in the garden of Olives. In the silence of midnight the veiled nun glides down the dark passage to the chapel and there in the dim light of the sanctuary lamp, prostrates herself in the long hour of prayer.

When a Carmelite consecrates herself to the cloister by solemn vows to God she prostrates herself upon the earth under a black pall as dead to the world. The habit she wears is also her shroud and she is laid to her final rest with feet all bare, as having followed Christ in the path of poverty. When dying, white roses are strewn over her virgin couch and in death she is crowned with flowers.

THE CHURCH IS PROGRESSING.

The Word "Obey" Is Omitted From the Marriage Ceremony.

A wedding vow minus the word "obey," special prayers for Advent, Christmas day, Easter and Good Friday, and other features which in days of yore would probably have been condemned by Presbyterians, are incorporated in a new prayer book and form of worship which soon will be introduced into several Chicago Presbyterian churches.

The volume, called the "Book of Common Worship," is prepared by a committee of ministers and elders of the Presbyterian church.

"The treasury of Prayer," prayers for the services at the burial of the dead, and a petition for "fellowship with the saints," find places in the volume. There is a form for the celebration of the communion services in which provision is made for the laying on of hands on the plate and the cup, a proceeding which will be considered equivalent to direct consecration.

Bride Need Not Say "Obey."

Neither bride nor groom will repeat the word "obey" if they marry according to the new rites. The marriage vow will be as follows:

"I * * * take thee * * * to be my wedded husband; and I do promise and covenant, before God and these witnesses, to be thy loving and faithful wife, in plenty and in want, in joy and in sorrow, and in sickness and health, as long as we both shall live."

Great Question Calmly Considered.

The Octogenarian Philosopher, J. S. Loveland, of Los Angeles, Cal., Occupies The Progressive Thinker Rostrum This Week, in Which He Analyzes Most Thoroughly the Fraud That Permeates the Very Life of This Republic in Every Branch of Industry, Illustrating Also, Its Connection With Spirit Phenomena in the Present and in the Past. Every Truth He Mentions in Connection With Fraud in Spiritualism Is as Unsavory, Nauseating, Startling, and Unclean as It Is When Mentioned in Conjunction With Fraud in Food, in Medicine, in Municipal Government or in National Affairs, and should Equally Be Condemned. His Views Assist in Making Up the History of One of the Grandest Truths —Spirit Return—that Ever Blessed the World.

IF THE PROFESSED SPIRITUALISTS WERE ENGAGED IN CARRYING OUT THE PURPOSE OF THE SPIRIT WORLD THERE WOULD BE NO CHANCE FOR THE PERPETRATION OF FRAUD. THAT PURPOSE WAS THE OVERTHROW OF THE OLD SUPERSTITIOUS RELIGION—THE DESPOTIC AND PARTIALISTIC GOVERNMENTS BUILT THEREON, AND THE ESTABLISHMENT OF UNIVERSAL BROTHERHOOD—THE CO-OPERATIVE COMMONWEALTH, OR IN THE LANGUAGE OF AUGUST COMTE, THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. IF WE HAD ONLY ATTAINED TO THAT ALTRUISTIC UPLIFT OF PRACTICAL BROTHERHOOD, THE BURNING ENTHUSIASM THEREOF WOULD UNITE US IN SUCH A UNITED AND CONTINUOUS EFFORT TO OVERTHROW THE OLD AND CONSTRUCT THE NEW THAT THE VISION OF FRAUD WOULD DISAPPEAR. OUR ZEAL WOULD BURN IT UP. IT IS ONLY OUR NARROW, INDIVIDUALISTIC SELFISM, WHICH REVELS IN MERE SENTIMENTALISM, THAT MAKES IT POSSIBLE FOR THE FRAUD ELEMENT TO HANG ON TO OUR SKIRTS AND DRAGGLE THEM IN THE MUD. INSPIRED BY THE LOFTY SPIRIT OF ALTRUISTIC FRATERNALISM, WE SHOULD BECOME SO POSITIVE AS TO REPEL ALL POSSIBLE APPROACH OF THE VILE AND WRONG. THE SERRIED RANKS OF CO-OPERATING ANGELS, RADIANT IN THE SUNLIGHT OF TRUTH, WOULD BE OUR EVERY-DAY ATTENDANTS IN OUR NOBLE WORK.

At first view, it would seem that every person would at once condemn fraud, and as a general proposition such would be the fact. But while this is true, it is also true that nearly all the contemners of fraud utter their condemnation with a mental reservation. They are rank opposers of all forms of dishonesty except the one they themselves practice. And, in many instances, the self-knowledge of personal crookedness seals the lips from denunciation of others. But the wide range of the discussion in the spiritual ranks of the question of fraud on the part of professed mediums, and the prevalence of somewhat bitter antagonism in feeling seems to render a calm review of the subject an imperative necessity. And, as I have been personally familiar with the experience of the Spiritualistic movement from the commencement till the present, I may be able to throw some light upon the subject. I have never been in the confidence of the tricksters. They have always disliked and opposed me, hence, what I have learned has been from my own observation.

WRONG-DOING PREVALENT.

1. But, in discussing this subject, it is well to bear in mind that Spiritualism is not the exclusive field of fraud. Nor is fraud more common there than elsewhere. Just now it appears so because of the intense rebellion on the part of the friends of honesty against the dishonest fakerism in their ranks. They are determined to have the devils cast out. This precipitates the war, and the important problem is, will they be successful by their present methods? Are they not in some respects aiding the frauds? Must we not institute other means, and those more in accordance with the mission of Modern Spiritualism?

PERMEATES OUR SOCIAL STRUCTURE.

2. Now, in answer to the above questions, I submit (1) in the first place that dishonesty—fraud permeates our entire social structure, and is practically endorsed by church and state. It has been demonstrated by rigid, chemical analysis that our manufactured foods—meats—vegetables and fruits are poisoned or adulterated in the process. The exceptions to this wholesale swindling are rare. And the worst feature of it is the fact that Congress persistently refuses to pass any law for the punishment of the crime. THUS THE WHOLE NATION STANDS SELF-CONFESSED AS THE ENDORSER OF FRAUD. The Los Angeles Examiner says:

"Do you know, for instance, that the United States Senate, the highest power in this country, actually is owned by the food adulterators? A pure food bill has been beaten in the Senate and will continue to be beaten in the Senate. In that body sit as disreputable a gang of public thieves, betrayers of the people and all-around national crooks as the world has ever seen."

What is true of the food is equally true of the medicines administered to the sick—made sick by poisoned food and then treated with adulterated and poisoned drugs. "An official report to the State Board of Pharmacy" (New York) "showed that in the drug business swindling and adulteration are counted among the fine arts. There were honest druggists to be found—but they were interesting curiosities." It would occupy a whole page of this paper to enumerate the adulteration of food products alone. And these frauds implicate a large per cent of the people.

FRAUDULENT THROUGHOUT.

Then take our financial system—fraudulent throughout. We are also a nation of gamblers. The stock boards in our great cities are wholesale gambling establishments. All forms of speculation and "money making" are common forms of fraud. The nation is money-mad. It is one vast insane asylum, without enough sane ones to control the raving mass. Spiritualists are part of this seething mass of lunatics; and hence, we might reasonably expect that the contagion should affect them more or less. But from the heated discussion of the present, one might infer that the introduction of fakerism was a recent thing, and that up to a recent period our ranks were clear of dishonest commercialism. THIS IS A GREAT MISTAKE, and it is doubtful if there is more fraudulent pretenders to mediumship now than there was in the very early periods. There is more said about it now than there was then. Investigation has been forced upon us by the repeated discoveries of trickery by investigators and by honest and upright Spiritualists. And the frauds then as well as now were found among the most popular public workers.

FORMS OF FRAUD IN EARLY DAYS.

The reader will pardon me if I detail some of the forms of fraud in the early days. A man by the name of Hulms came into Boston and vicinity, and for a while astonished the people with his marvelous tests. But a Malden lady pricked the bubble by finding in his overcoat pocket a small book full of obituary notices clipped from the local newspapers which he had repeated the evening before as spirit tests. And in Boston his spirit music was found to be a mouth harmonicon which he blew under the bed clothes after he had retired. He sponged his living for some years out of the credulous Spiritualists.

At a convention of Spiritualists held at old Plymouth, Mass., A. E. Newton was the speaker one afternoon. I was the presiding president for that day. Brother Newton gave an exceptionally able discourse with more than his usual energy. At the close one of the public speakers and test mediums suggested to me that Brother Newton had outdone himself. I remarked jocosely that he had had a very beautiful woman manipulating his head that morning. He very eagerly replied, "Who is she? Point her out to me." Without any suspicion I pointed her out in the audience. He immediately left the platform and went down among the people. Soon after reaching our boarding place Mrs. Shaw, the lady medium, who had manipulated Brother Newton's head for a severe headache, came in greatly elated at the test she had received from the platform lecturer, who had seen a spirit beside her who told her all about her curing Newton's headache. But he became a very popular medium all over the country in later years. And I have been told of similar performances on his part. But he was not the only performer. There was a Von Vleck, a Fay, Davenport Brothers and others reaping a harvest from popular credulity.

One Paine used to pull up a board in the floor of his room and arrange a lever with wire points, one to come up under one leg of the table and another his foot so he could have tippings at his pleasure. He was very strict as to conditions, and VERY PIOUS ALSO, opening his seances with prayer."

I once saw a Unitarian deacon count out over one hundred dollars in gold coin, and put it in the hands of an adopted daughter of La Roy Sunderland for the purpose of her traveling and giving spirit manifestations. She was one of the first rapping mediums in the city of Boston. This money was given by the pretended request of her spirit mother, rapped out with loud knocks. What was the sequel? In a few days she ran away with a brother of the notorious Dr. Hatch. That was the last ever heard of her posing as a medium.

DID NOT HESITATE TO EXPOSE THEM.

All these instances were in the early days of our movement, and we did not hesitate to expose them when discovered. The old Spiritualists of New York City tore up the floor in Paine's rented room and found his lever and wires, and that ended his mediumistic career. Fay and Von Vleck were shown up so thoroughly as to be obliged eventually to give up their performances, though they were very persistent.

With this array of fraud in the early period of our history, and its wide prevalence at the present time, it might seem to some that Spiritualism was the special field of fraud. This is a mistake, though we must admit that the CREDULITY OF THE MASS OF PROFESSED SPIRITUALISTS MAKES THE PERPETRATION OF FRAUD AN EASY THING FOR THE TRICKSTERS. Then again, the latent superstition, inherited from the old church, renders the work of fraud vastly easier. It is very difficult for many to get rid of the feeling of reverential awe when they think a spirit is present. Spirit manifestation, to them, is a very sacred affair, and they approach it with the same feeling that they do when they engage in secret prayer. It is very easy for the fraud to deceive such persons.

MEDIUMS LIKE OTHER CLASSES.

Judging from the general aspect of mediums there is nothing indicative of exemption from fraudulent practice on their part above that of any other class of people. Taking them as a class they evince no moral superiority over the average mass of people.

THEY ARE NO BETTER, AND NO WORSE MORALLY THAN THEIR FELLOWS.

Mediumship does not elevate them in the moral scale. And, if we understood the science of mediumship we should not expect any ethical improvement as the result of ordinary mediumistic experiences. When we can lay aside our old superstition and look upon mediumship as an imperfect mode of conversing with men and women, on the whole, not much wiser than ourselves, and still imperfect in knowledge and development we shall cease to expect any special holiness on the part of mediums, or exemption on their part, from the infirmities common to our poor human nature.

Taking a comprehensive view we shall find that incentives to fraud are money and fame. The money incentive is what induces the great mass of non-mediumistic pretenders, while the love of fame or notoriety captures not a few real mediums. They are anxious to excel others and indulge in pretentious manifestations to win the plaudits of their fellows. The love of approbation is a powerful motive for pretentious manifestations. In some instances, the love of fame and money may rule in the same person, and notoriety be a winning card for the acquisition of the shekels.

IN THE MIDST OF A FRAUD CARNIVAL.

We are in the midst of this fraud carnival and the question of overwhelming importance is how shall we free ourselves from this incubus? The answers to this question have plunged us into a vehemently quarrelsome controversy, which threatens more injury than the frauds themselves! It really seems impossible to discuss the question in an amicable spirit. But jealousy and personalities can settle no question aright. We must approach all questions in a calm and philosophic spirit, or we shall make things worse instead of better. Denunciation of a detected fraud will not cure the evil. Nor will denunciation of fraud in general prevent its perpetration in special instances. EXPOSURES OF INDIVIDUAL TRICKSTERS ARE, COMPARATIVE FAILURES, AND WILL CONTINUE TO BE SO, SO LONG AS A LARGE PERCENTAGE OF THE PEOPLE ARE INCAPABLE OF DISTINGUISHING THE SPURIOUS FROM THE REAL.

PROPER FUNCTION OF MEDIUMSHIP.

That is really the greatest difficulty in the way and the one most formidable to overcome. And this incapacity is but another term affirming the general ignorance of the people concerning what constitutes mediumship. And I, therefore, submit this proposition, that the first step toward the elimination of fraud from our ranks, is the scientific teaching of the true nature, and proper function of mediumship. Until this is done fraud will run rampant in spite of all the exposures and denunciations from press and platform. I am not opposing these exposures. I approve them, but I know they are only partial efforts. We must go to the bottom of this great difficulty. And that means comprehension of the science of mediumship. I have endeavored for many years to induce Spiritualists and mediums to make a profound study of this fundamental question of our movement, but my success has been limited, the majority preferring ignorance and credulous superstition to positive knowledge.

ONE OF THE SUPERSTITIONS.

One of the superstitions is, that mediumship is a gift from some outside personality.

Who is it? God, Devil, or Angel?

What is given?

Is it something foreign to our common human nature? If this be granted, it must be confessed that these bestowers of gifts have extraordinary tastes or judgment in their bestowals. Another common notion is that spirits select all the mediums. That certain persons, like the Fox girls, were selected by the spirits as mediums will, no doubt, be admitted by all Spiritualists. But any careful observer is well aware that scores of persons have thrust themselves into that position. Scores of persons susceptible to magnetic influence have imagined that they were mediums, and their imaginings have been shared by credulous ignoramuses, and as a result they have essayed the role of mediumship. They have been innocent because ignorant frauds. But some have taken advantage of their psychometric and telepathic powers to perpetrate known fraud. And the general ignorance as to the possibilities of psychometry and telepathy gives them an immense advantage in hoodwinking the public.

A PHYSIOLOGICAL CONDITION.

An approximate comprehension of the real character of mediumship must be possessed before fraud can be eliminated from our ranks. It must be understood thoroughly that mediumship, so far as the medium is concerned, IS PURELY AND ONLY A PHYSIOLOGICAL CONDITION. IT IS NO MORE A GIFT THAN IS THE SUSCEPTIBILITY TO THE MESMERIC OR HYPNOTIC CONDITION. It is analogous, to some extent to both of them, as it involves the same physiological conditions. The same may be said of natural sleep and dreaming, as the same conditions of the physical organization exist in all of them. Hence, the mental or moral development of the person has no more to do with the exercise of mediumistic power than it has with the susceptibility to hypnotic or mesmeric influence, or even of going to sleep. Hence, we should not expect any more honesty on the part of mediums than from any other class of people. They are simply more susceptible to a certain form of mental influence.

THE MEDIUM AS AN INSTRUMENT.

Another wild mistake respecting mediumship is, that it is a condition of subjugation to the domination of certain spirits who are termed "controls." The medium is an "instrument," a tool used by some outside personality. The desirable condition sought is one of pure negative passivity—selfhood is resigned and complete abnegation of will is assumed to be the most perfect condition of mediumship. Thus we have the old superstition of magic revived and taught as a part of Spiritualistic philosophy. Now, as complete control of one person by another is impossible, as hypnotism proves, we can readily see how the latent impulsions and ideas of the medium might mingle with spirit impressions, entirely changing their character or entirely superseding their utterance. But this supposed condition of absolute control relieves the mediumistic performer of all responsibility and imposes it upon supposed spirits. And there is no escape from this position if the mediumistic condition is one of control. It is this notion which makes the old superstition of obsession so fearful to many persons, for, according to the teachings of the master teacher the most noble and moral persons are liable to be seized unawares and made to curse and use the vilest language, and act accordingly. If these positions are true there can be no more damnable work performed than to induce any person to practice mediumship. But this whole theory and practice of negativeness and control is all abominably false. Genuine spirit mediumship is intelligent co-operation between spirits and mediums. Neither is controlled by the other. They work harmoniously together. Without exception, I think, you will find the frauds the loudest in attributing all their performances to the controlling spirits. That pretense catches the credulous class. Hence, when we contact with that profession of being controlled—of being a mere "instrument" in the hands of the spirits, we should be on the alert, and expect either intentional fraud, or some worthless common-place utterances. The important thing to learn is that genuine mediumship is intelligent co-operation between spirits in and out of the body, working harmoniously together for a common purpose. One is no more an instrument than the other. And no high minded spirit could ever be induced to control or make a tool of another.

PHENOMENA AND THE PUBLIC PLATFORM.

Another most essential means for the suppression of fraud is ceasing to present the phenomena on the public platform. In the palmy days, when Spiritualism was making its most rapid progress, we had no platform mediums. The home or neighborhood circle was where people sought messages from the departed. I came to California in 1870, and had never seen any platform work, and did not for thirteen years, until I went back east to dedicate the Mount Pleasant Park camp ground, did I see any platform phenomena. But that work has paid, and has created a great temptation to the fraudulently inclined. And the more mediumship has been pushed upon the platform the greater has been the decrease of private and family circles—A POOR EXCHANGE!

In the many communications in the spiritual press there is often found the phrase "commercial mediumship." This means that persons make mediumship a business—in other words, a profession the same as the lawyer, teacher or physician. It is plausibly urged that the mediums cannot afford to give their time for nothing. This is very true. But the question is as to the duty of anyone proposing to spend their time for such a purpose. And is not the family and neighborhood circle all that is necessary for furnishing all the tests that are necessary? I think so as a general rule. And if there should occasionally be an exceptional medium like Mrs. Piper and one or two others, let them be supported by the Spiritualists and paid a regular salary for their time. Let the Spiritualists cease to patronize commercial mediumship and fraud would die out for lack of patronage. So we have it in our own hands to extinguish fraud in a very simple manner. This might work temporary hardship to some mediums, it is true. But no great social wrong was ever righted without some one suffering.

The problem is before us and, as I look at it can be solved in no other way than as I have indicated. Will we solve it or continue to struggle under the load of oblouy now resting upon us?

Before closing this article I must submit one more proposition bearing upon the question of fraud and the progress of the Spiritualist movement. It is this: If the professed Spiritualists were engaged in carrying out the purpose of the spirit world there would be no chance for the perpetration of fraud. THAT PURPOSE WAS THE OVERTHROW OF THE OLD SUPERSTITIOUS RELIGION—the despotic and partialistic governments built thereon, and the establishment of universal brotherhood—the co-operative commonwealth, or in the language of August Comte, the Religion of Humanity. If we had only attained to that altruistic uplift of practical brotherhood, the burning enthusiasm thereof would unite us in such a united and continuous effort to overthrow the old and construct the new that the vision of fraud would disappear. Our zeal would burn it up. It is only our narrow, individualistic selfism, which revels in mere sentimentalism, that makes it possible for the fraud element to hang on to our skirts and draggle them in the mud. Inspired by the lofty spirit of altruistic fraternalism we should become so positive as to repel all possible approach of the vile and wrong. The serried ranks of co-operating angels, radiant in the sunlight of truth, would be our every-day attendants in our noble work.

THE PREVALENCE OF CRIME.

The prevalence of crime in the world to-day has attained such dimensions, that in every department of life a continual struggle against it must be made. It requires an army of detectives on the part of our government, to hold in abeyance the counterfeiters of our currency, and, too, continual activity on the part of Spiritualists is required to suppress the tricksters who have invaded our ranks with their artificial toggery, to deceive the public. Crime has become so rampant that a system has been adopted whereby the identity of criminals can be made known. Special persons are required to take "finger prints," and before they can assume that position, they must be able to answer the following questions, at a salary of $1,000 a year:

1. What is an ulnar loop?
2. What is a radial loop?
3. What is a whorl?
4. What are composites? And how are they subdivided?
5. What are arches, and tented arches?
6. Why are the four fingers of the right hand taken simultaneously just after the rolled impressions of same together with the thumb are taken?
7. Why is the impression of the index or fore-finger taken immediately before the signature of the prisoner is obtained?
8. Which have numerical value in primary classification, whorls or loops?
9. In primary classification, how are lateral pockets, twinned loops, central pockets and accidentals classified?
10. In primary classification, how are arches, loops and tented arches classified?
11. In sub-classification, when are capital letters used, and when are small letters used?
12. What effect do whorls have when when they appear in the index fingers?
13. When whorls appear in both index fingers, how are they classified?
14. When whorls appear in either of the index fingers, how are they classified?
15. What effect has a capital T, or A, and all small letters a, t and r, when they appear in an impression slip in subclassification?
16. When is a loop in the index finger marked 1 and when 0?
17. When is a loop in the middle fingers marked the same way?
18. In subclassifying, what fingers are considered?
19. What is done when a loop appears in the right little finger?
20. Who devised the system of classification by which the prints can be filed away?

Who among all the Spiritualists can answer the above questions? There is one continual fight going on between the good and bad, and every Spiritualist should ally himself with the former. The world was never more corrupt than to-day, and there should be purifying action all along the line, in every creed or cult, whatever its kind, Spiritualism no exception. OPTIMIST.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Camp-meetings and Other Spiritualistic Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

Jottings From Chesterfield Camp.

It seem strange to me to have to begin backward in writing my report of the camp this past week, but the materialization of our most esteemed Brother Moses Hull, of Whitewater, Wis., compels me to do so. I recognized the venerable defender of Spiritualism as he came into the conference this morning. Upon the chairman's announcement that Moses Hull was present, the audience were only too glad to give their time to him, and he spoke for twenty minutes, taking for his subject, "Thoughts Are Things."

Our third Sunday opened with the services of the lyceum conducted by Anna L. Gillespie, followed by the conference which is always interesting, which was closed by tests and messages by Brother Frank T. Ripley. Bro. Ripley has given some very remarkable tests this past week. These tests are not of the "Mary and John" sort, but were clear-cut and right to the point.

Sunday afternoon Marion Carpenter of Detroit, opened the meeting with her first lecture to the camp. Mrs. Carpenter is an exceedingly able lecturer and a very good medium for rostrum work.

The Mendenhalls are here and they are doing very good work considering the awful physical afflictions Mrs. Mendenhall is suffering. She is going blind, and suffers greatly. Mr. Mendenhall, despite his 80 years, preserves his mental activity in all its power, proving that age does not affect the mind if it is only kept active.

I would notice also our restaurant here on the camp, as I believe those who ably perform the very arduous duties of supplying the physical man with the necessaries of his existence should receive their praise, as well as those who give us the mental good things. Mr. Oscar Boggs and Mr. Frank Pierce, chef and cook respectively, are certainly past masters in the art of providing cooking for us here. They are supplying the table in style equal to any three-dollar a day house in the country. They are both Spiritualists, and Mr. Pierce is the son of the venerable medium, Mrs. Sarah E. Pierce. Mrs. Frank Pierce has charge of the dining room, where she presides to the entire satisfaction of the immense Sunday crowds. There are sometimes 300 people at dinner, all striving to get seats at once, so one can imagine the task a lady would have to please so great a number in one short hour of dinner.

Wednesday we are to have our Old Folks' Concert, and it will be an entertainment well worth seeing, as the rehearsals have convinced me. H. B.

WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN?

A Comprehensive Answer to the question.

What is a Christian? That question, I'll confess, gave me, at one time, a great deal of concern. It was just after I had been converted, and I feared that I was not living up to the tenets of the Presbyterian faith. I went to my mother for counsel and relief. I shall never forget her reply. It was this: "It does not make much difference what you believe, so that you live right. Be a good boy, and I am sure it will all come out right in the end." And I am sure I may be pardoned when I say that I wish now to send a message in the spirit to the good old mother, as she sits in her home in Southern Ohio, this Sabbath morning, a message thanking her for the early inspiration she gave me to be governed by the law of right than which there should be no other.

According to the orthodox belief, a Christian is one who believes in a God who believes in the imputation of sin from Adam to mankind; one who believes in the vicarious atonement of the Savior; who believes in the miraculous conception of the Virgin Mary; who believes in the future punishment of sin; one who is a member of some church, attends church regular, and is a regular contributor to the cause; one who keeps his domestic, social, and business life above, at least, the outward signs of suspicion and reproach, and who places creed above a spotless life, and faith above the saving grace of works.

But to my mind there is a conception of a Christian that is nobler, truer, wider that this. I do not mean to say that I claim for myself all or any of the virtues that should accompany the name of Christian of which I enumerate below. Nor do I say that many such can be found who measure true to the standard which exists, perhaps, more in the ideal than the real sense.

A true Christian, I should say is one who believes, first of all that a Supreme Intelligence, of which the God within us is a part, rules and controls the destinies of men; who believes that Jesus is the elder brother of the human race, and whose spirit is an ever-present guide to all mortals here below; who believes that he must atone for every wrong he does his fellow-man, either here or elsewhere, in that eternal scheme of even and exact justice with the world is ruled.

A Christian is one who feeds the hungry, clothes the naked, visits the sick and comforts the dying; one whose eye and ear are ever keen to heed the cry of anguish and pain with which the world is filled; one whose feet are ever swift to run to the succor of those who are in distress and need; one who pays his debts, meets his obligations, and keeps his word; one who will not allow the grasping greed of gain to cause him to take advantage of his fellow man; one who will not by one unkind thought or harsh and cruel word add one jot or tittle to his fellow creature's misery and woe; one who subtracts from instead of adds to the sum total of human wretchedness and despair; one who is mindful of the duty he owes to every living thing, and will not purposely cause a pang of pain to rack the nerves of man or beast; one who protests against the needless killing of animals and the terrible butchery of men whether by the red and bloody sword of war or by the noiseless though fatal current of the electric chair; one who is kind to his family and faithful to his friends; one whose tongue is not poisoned by the venom of slander; one who takes each man's censure but reserves his judgment and when he is reviled, reviles not again.

Lastly, I believe a true Christian is a person whose mercy for the unfortunate and afflicted, whose sympathy for the oppressed and, down-trodden and whose charity for the weaknesses of woman and the sins of man, partakes of the Infinite Compassion of the Savior. One who places love in the human heart above all man-made creed. This, to my mind, fulfills in heaped and rounded measure the true conception of a Christian man or woman.

Man Still a Barbarian.

Man began his career a savage. Some types of men are savages still. But some have reached that stage of development which is properly termed barbarism. The next stage of development will be justly styled civilized.

It has been seen that the savage man, like the brute, is governed by his selfish faculties; his intellectual faculties being used wholly in the interest of his selfish. He, as a recent writer, W. A. Vrooman, says, did not have the physical weapons of the brute, horns, claws, etc., hence, he was obliged to use his superior intelligence to circumvent his foes. This writer says further:

"The brutish selfishness in human nature is evidence of blood relationship with the jungle. Whether man has acquired this by a fall from primeval goodness or finds it as an evidence of his pedigree; whether orthodoxy or evolution gives the true explanation the ugly fact remains."

An item that is going the round of the world in newspapers says that the Emperor William the Second in the course of his valuable career has destroyed 42,676 separate pieces of game.

The achievement of the Emperor in depriving these helpless birds, and beasts of their lives is regarded with admiration.

The Emperor did not need for food any of the things he slew; so that he had none of the excuse of the primitive man for slaughter.

Each of them had the same sense of enjoyment of life, within the limits of its much smaller brain, that the Emperor has and the same right to live.

But the Emperor has killed 42,676 of them merely to gratify an appetite for slaughter. He has it—a great many other men have it. They come by it honestly enough, no doubt. Did you ever think how? They get it straight from the days when we were tusked and clawed things creeping through the forests hunting for our dinners. It is the reminder in the human race of the ascent from the swamps and the seas. It is the remaining trace of the tiger and the dinosaurus. It is the bestial sense that delights in bloodshed and cruelty just as the first naked savages used to delight—the keen, bestial delight in killing something, of seeing bloodshed and causing suffering.

Some years ago a delegation of American Indians asked me to address a committee of Congress, in opposition to a bill to unjustly deprive their tribe of a large tract of land. On concluding my speech the Chairman of the Committee, Hon. Wm. Springer of Illinois, said, "Dr., your talk is very pretty, your speech would read well in a Sunday School book; but your views are not practical. Civilization is bound to ride rough-shod over barbarism."

"Mr. Springer, where is there any civilization?"

"I give it up," he replied.

"If you had said that barbarism would ride rough-shod over savagery, I should agree with you. But we claim to be a civilized nation, and you are in a position to make that claim good."

The policy pursued by the Anglo-Saxon, in their dealings with the African and Indian races, has been a policy of barbarous injustice and selfish cruelty. This superior race has been governed by the faculties of acquisitiveness, destructiveness, etc., its superiority being apparent chiefly in the ability to outwit in council and defeat in battle those less intelligent people. It is a common belief in this country, that barbarous brute force is an essential element in civilizing the Indian.

The fact that his method has proved a disastrous failure, while that of the Quakers was a decided success, does not convince us that we have been in the wrong.

Had the Anglo-Saxons who settled America, been a civilized people, that is a people whose selfish faculties were controlled by their moral faculties, and guided by their intellectual faculties, they would have been entirely successful in civilizing the children of the forest, for strange as it may seem, those simple people show a degree of moral consciousness, and a responsiveness to kindness, that often put our people to the blush.

It is a fact, in the history written by their foes, that they have never been the first to break a treaty. Gen. Miles said to me, some years ago, "In every war between the two races, the Indian has been in the right and the whites in the wrong."

The policy of the whites was directly calculated to rouse resentment in the Indians, for they are a proud race. Dignity is a chief characteristic of the representative Red Man. Memories of Massasoit, King Phillip, Powhattan, Red Jacket, Tecumseh, and many other great Indians will live in the annals of America while history survives.

Modern Monopoly Barbaric.

In 1869 there were less than a dozen millionaires in New York city, now there are about five thousand of those financial Barons. I used the word, Baron, advisedly, for these men wield the power now, that the Feudal Barons did a few centuries ago. Those ancient Barons had their serfs. The feudal serfs were called retainers, the modern serfs are styled wage men. The ancient serf tilled the soil of his Lord's Baronial estate, and was allowed a tithe of the product of his labor, sufficient to feed and clothe him, in the poorest fashion, and the lordly Baron lived in luxury and barbaric splendor, by appropriating to himself nine-tenths of the products of the soil, produced by the combined toil of his serfs; the modern wage man is allowed enough from the product of his labor to enable him to live in very poor fashion, while, his lordly employer lives in a style that would put to shame the feudal Baron of the barbarous middle ages. The modern Baron has this advantage over his ancient prototype. The ancient Baron owned the soil and got his wealth from the products of agriculture; pursued in a very primitive way. The modern Baron, without nominal ownership of the soil, secures a large part of its products through a monopoly of the machinery of production, transportation and distribution; he owns the mines that furnish the iron and fuel, the factories that make the machinery, the railroads that carry the products of labor to the different points of distribution, and he controls the prices of those products through a combination of his systems of manufacturing, transportation and distribution.

Prof. H. C. Adams, of the University of Michigan, in a paper on "The Ancient Feudal Baron, and the Modern Commercial Baron," read in the parlor of the author, in Washington, D. C., in 1890, showed clearly that the difference between the two is simply a difference of conditions then and now, and he brought out and empnasized the fact, that the feudal serf was treated more justly and humanely than the modern wage serf. The Feudal Baron was a patriarchal Land Lord, who regarded his serfs as his children. They were bound to his estate and owed him service, but they were entitled to a home, and a living on the land that he owned, and they tilled not only while they could labor, but as long as they lived. He could not turn them out to perish from hunger and nakedness after they were disabled by age or disease.

"The modern Baron works his serfs till from age or disease they cease to be profitable to him, and then turns them out to become tramps or paupers. The serfs of France arose in rebellion against the Barons soon after the American Revolution closed so auspiciously. A reign of terror, such as Europe had never before seen, was inaugurated. The oppressive nobles and their priestly allies and beneficiaries were slain by the sword or the guillotine, and their Baronial estates confiscated. The serfs could destroy the old barbaric system, but they were not able to establish in its stead a civilized system. They attempted to erect a Communal state, on the ruins of the old Monarchy, but Communism is a civilized form of government, and the leaders, as well as the rank and file of the revolutionists were as barbarous as the King and Nobles and Priests they had conquered and slain. Their idea of Communism was a barbarous idea, formulated by intellectual faculties controlled by the selfish instincts instead of by the moral sentiments. The few civilized citizens of whom Madame Roland was a conspicuous example, shared the bloody fate of the King and nobility. They were crucified between the thieves of the old and the new regime, represented by Louis XVI., and Robespierre, the Jacobin dictator. Napoleon Bonaparte was a true and brilliant representative of the average French Revolutionist of that period. He was a legitimate, evolutionary product of the age, the embodiment of the barbarism of France.

"The average American is much farther removed from absolute barbarism than was the average Frenchman of a century ago. But the Americans are very far from being a truly civilized people. The communistic idea is rapidly growing in this country, under the name of socialism. But it is founded on the theories of Karl Marx, whose splendid intellect has not been fully emancipated from the dominion of selfishness, and consecrated to the service of Benevolence, and the other organs of moral consciousness. Neither that great doctrinaire nor the rank and file of his followers are capable of organizing a state whose fundamental law shall be the 'Golden Rule,' and then live up to the grand altruistic doctrine involved in that Magna Charta of a Divine Civilization.

"The signs of the times point to a revolution in this country, which will overthrow the Baronial Plutocracy which has been founded by the Lords of the bank, the railroad, the mines, the factories and other great institutions, and that revolution cannot be long delayed. It may come through the peaceful method of civilization, the ballot. I sincerely hope it may. But whether by the ballot, or the bullet, it will come, and come quickly. Would that we were ready for it; that we were wise enough, i. e., civilized enough to establish a government which being founded upon Justice will do right to all, grant privileges to none, and then administer that government by the rules of absolute righteousness, so that being so founded, and so administered, it would endure forever.

Our Criminal Laws Are Barbarous.

"The criminal code of this New World is a transcript of the criminal code of England, and that is founded upon the Hebrew law, of 'an eye for an eye, and a life for a life.'

"It is not reformatory but punitive It is the law of vengeance. To call it brutal would be to slander the brutes, for they do not take revenge, or seek to retaliate. They punish offenders against their rights, but while destitute of the sentiment of Justice, they act on the law of Justice, and not of revenge. Mr. Combe, in his 'Constitution of Man,' says, 'The animals are endowed with propensities impelling them to act, and a degree of intellect enabling them to perceive the consequences of their actions. These faculties prompt them to inflict punishment upon each other for infringement of their rights, although they possess no sentiments pointing out the moral guilt of such conduct. For example, dogs have acquisitiveness, which gives them the sense of property; when one is in possession of a bone, and another attempts to steal it, this act instantly excites the organs of Combativeness and Destructiveness of the owner of the bone, and he proceeds to worry the assailant. Or a cock on a dunghill finds a rival intruding on his domain, and under the instinctive inspiration of Combativeness and Self-Esteem he attacks him and drives him off. I call this inflicting animal punishment. It is not supposed that the aggressors in these cases possess moral faculties intimating that their trespass is wrong. I view them as inspired by their propensities, and rushing blindly to their gratification. Nevertheless, in the effect which the aggression produces upon the propensities of the animal assailed, we perceive an arrangement instituted by the Creator, for checking outrage, and arresting its progress.

"Before the penalty inflicted could be viewed by man as just in such cases, it would be necessary to perceive that it was instituted for the benefit of the aggressors themselves. If all dogs neglected to seek homes and devoted themselves to stealing; and if cocks, in general, deserted their domains, and gave themselves up to felonious inroads, it is evident the races of these animals would soon become extinct. Or if any individual among them should habitually abandon himself to such transgressions, he would soon lose his life by violence or starvation. If then it is beneficial for the race, and also for the individual, to be arrested in his progress, his punishment is both benevolent and just.

"It is interesting to observe that provisions are made under the animal law, for bringing about substantial justice, even in creatures destitute of conscientiousness. The lower animals make perfectly sure of only the real offender, for he must be caught in the act, otherwise he is not visited by their resentment. It appears also to be the general rule of animal nature, that unless the offender has carried his inroad to an extreme extent, the punishment is relaxed the moment he desists, that is to say, the master of the bone, or dunghill is generally satisfied with simple defense, and rarely pursues the offender for the sake of revenge."

This great philosopher, proceeds to show that animals do not inquire into the cause of crime, or the effect of punishment, because they do not possess the faculties that inquire into causes, and trace moral consequences, or those moral consequences which desire the reform of others; but are purely selfish in all acts. He then proceeds to say that man possesses the same animal propensities as those of the lower creatures, and that under their influence he inflicts punishment on the same principles. He shows that criminal laws of the most civilized nations are framed, and executed on the same principles of the animal code. He illustrates his point, thus, "A thief breaks into a house and steals. The reflective faculties are employed to find him, and also find evidence of his guilt. Judge and jury assemble to determine whether the evidence is sufficient; and if they find it to be so, the culprit is ordered to be imprisoned, or hanged. We are apt to think that there is something moral in the trial. But the sole object of it is to ascertain that a crime has been committed, and that the accused is the real offender. The dog and cock make equally certain of both points; for they never punish except when the individual is caught in the act. The dog attacks and worries the criminal, and then lets him go; while man scourges his back, or makes him mount the steps of a treadmill, and then turns him adrift. If the offender has been very pertinacious in his aggression, the dog sometimes, although rarely, threatens him outright; and man, in similar circumstances very generally strangles him with a rope. The dog makes no inquiry into the causes that led to the crime, or into the effect upon the offender of the punishment which he inflicts. In this also he is imitated by the human race. Man inflicts his vengeance with as little inquiry into the causes that led to the crime, and then turns the culprit adrift upon the world after he has been punished, with as little concern about what shall befall him next, as is shown by his canine prototype. The dog acts in this way because he is inspired by animal propensities, and higher faculties have been denied him. Man imitates him because he, too, has animal faculties and because, although he possesses, in addition to them, moral sentiments, and reflecting intellect, he has not yet discovered the practical application of these to the subject of criminal legislation and jurisprudence."

These observations were writen and published three quarters of a century ago, and they have been read by millions of people, yet our criminal code remains substantially the same. No radical reform of a practical character has been effected. This barbarous fact can be accounted for only on one hypothesis. Politicians do not read such books as Combe's Constitution of Man, and politicians make our laws, as legislators, and administer them as judges.

I have been deeply interested in this subject for fifty years, and I have made it a point to talk with law makers and judges when opportunity offered, and I have rarely found one of either class who knew much about the matter, or who manifested any considerable desire to know. Penology has attracted great attention among philanthropists, but it has been pursued chiefly with reference to prison reform, and to the mitigation of punishments for crime. It is a benevolent rather than a scientific, philosophical and judicial reform that has been inaugurated by our good men and women.

When man becomes fully civilized there will be no revenge in his nature; he will not resent insult or resist evil, but overcome evil with good and conquer by love. Then his system of criminal jurisprudence will have two purposes, to prevent crime, and reform the criminal. The criminal will be regarded and treated as an unfortunate brother or sister, unfortunate in having inherited a brain in which the organs of the animal propensities are unduly large, and the organs of the moral sentiments are too small, and whose environments have been unfavorable to the development of his moral organs, and the control of his selfish. He will be put into an institution where he will have no opportunity to steal, or murder or commit any other offense or injury against his fellow-men, and where his higher nature can be developed and his lower subdued, and where his intellectual faculties can be educated, and where, also, he can earn an honest living by some form of work. He will be put into a reformatory which shall be worthy of its title. And he will be put in that institution for an indefinite period, until in the opinion of his teachers, he has been reformed and would be a fairly good law-abiding and useful member of general society, or if incorrigible, until physical death shall kindly release him from his unfortunate organization.

The plan here suggested for the protection of society against criminals and for their reformation, is the same as that already in operation, in the case of insane people and idiots. Insane people have diseased brains, while idiots have developed brains. The majority of insane persons are monomaniacs, that is, only a part of the brain, and not the whole of it, is deranged.

A large majority of criminals may properly be classed as mono-idiots; persons whose intellectual organs are well developed, but whose moral organs are not. One of the most talented men I ever met, was a moral idiot. He was a brilliant lawyer, but he had no conception of the abstract principles of justice. He would take the largest fee he could get to prosecute or defend any cause without the least regard for the right or wrong involved in it. He was a politician and a member of Congress, first of the House, and then of the Senate, and although his salary was never over five thousand dollars a year, yet when he died his estate was estimated at about ten millions of dollars. That he took large bribes, goes without saying. If the state he resided in, had been a fully civilized Commonwealth, that man would have been sent to a reformatory instead of to Congress, both for his own good and the best interests of his fellow citizens.

Plato, who was a prophecy of what a civilized man and philosopher will be, said that, "Philosophers should make the laws and govern the state," and he defined a philosopher as a man whose moral sense controls his intellect and suppresses his animal passions. Wendell Phillips, in a public lecture some forty years ago, said "It is impossible for a statesman to become President of the United States, for the reason that the politicians who control political parties will not permit it."

Did Mr. Phillips live on earth now, he would probably say that the great monopolists of the country, would co-operate with the politicians in preventing the nomination of a man for President by a party strong enough to be able to elect him, who could not be controlled by them.

SEVEN JAPANESE RULES.

That Are Very Comprehensive and Impressive in Their Nature.

We are informed that the following rules are read to every company of Japanese troops after roll call each morning, and that the soldiers repeat them in concert:

1. To be sincere and loyal and guard against untruthfulness.
2. To respect superiors, keep true to comrades, and guard against lawlessness and insolence.
3. To obey the command of superiors, irrespective of its nature, and never to resist or disregard it.
4. To prize bravery and courage and be diligent in the performance of duties, and guard against cowardice and timidity.
5. To boast not of brutal courage, and neither quarrel with nor insult others, which will incite general hatred.
6. To cultivate virtue and practice frugality and guard against extravagance and effeminacy.
7. To prize reputation and honor and guard against vulgarity and greed.

These precepts were formulated by the emperor of Japan many years ago. Their inculcation and practical application may be responsible in a measure for the remarkable success that has attended the Japanese in the present struggle with Russia. However it requires something more than rules to win success of the highest grade. In these days of graft it may not be amiss to recommend the seventh rule—to prize reputation and honor and guard against vulgarity and greed—to all who are in positions of responsibility and trust. The man who puts his own character above mere lucre is quite likely not to be false to any trust committed to him—Epworth Herald.

Very Impressive Phenomena.

The World Over Spirit Phenomena Is Occurring—That Which Is Spontaneous Is the Most Startling and the Most Convincing—Never Before in the History of the World Has There Been so Many Genuine Spontaneous Spirit Manifestations.

As the psychical phenomena that I recorded in Light of December 17, under the title of "Some Unique Pheiomena," attracted considerable attention and interest, it might be of value to students in psychical research to learn further particulars of these strange manifestations, which have continued at intervals since I last wrote up to the present time. It may be remembered that the principal manifestations consisted in the turning on and off of the electric lights by some unseen, inexplicable agency; the ringing noise of bells where there were no bells, and the materialization of spirits. I then mentioned that we had established a code of communication with the unseen Intelligences by means of electric light flashes and the ringing of the invisible bells, after the same method as used in "table tilting and rapping," and had thus discovered the identity of those who were telegraphing to us from the unseen realms in such a unique manner.

The manifestations have been moved from the drawing-room, where they had occurred nightly for six weeks, to the billiard-room, where we now have new evidences of spirit power in the removal of the billiard balls from the table, the handling of cues by unseen hands, the violent projection of articles across the room, the moving of furniture, direct spirit writing, etc.

The electric lights are switched on and off as usual, and often when we are playing billiards the lights are suddenly turned off and on so as to render play impossible, and then, whether we like it or not, these extraordinary phenomena occur. Over and over again the billiard balls have vanished off the table, though where and how they go we have not been able to determine, and perhaps five to ten minutes after their disappearance they suddenly drop on to the floor out of the air—generally in a part of the room where there is no one.

The other evening I placed my cigarette case, open, on the table and laughingly offered the spirit a cigarette, and to our astonishment, a few seconds after, one of the cigarettes vanished from the case, and five minutes later was dropped onto the other end of the table, apparently from the ceiling.

The "spirit bell" we now have in the billiard-room is quite different from the two bells which used to ring in the salon, having a clear musical tone—soft and silvery—whilst those in the salon made a harsh, metallic, "whirring" noise, and were deafening at times. One of those "bell" sounds proceeded apparently from the middle of a small wooden table (which had been thoroughly examined by skeptical persons, without any result), and the other "bell" rang high up on the wall, at the other side of the room, where there certainly was no bell, and no mechanical contrivance could possibly have been concealed without our soon discovering it. That these "bell" sounds were produced by an intelligent being is evident from the fact that our questions, mental and verbal, were readily and clearly answered by the method described in my last article, viz., short, sharp rings—one for "no," two for "yes" and when the alphabet was called over the letters required to form words were indicated by a short ring. The other evening a French doctor asked for the name of a spirit, who was described by a clairvoyant as standing near him, and the bell at once spelled out the peculiar name of "Atou," which the doctor said was quite correct, being the name of an old schoolfellow of his who had been dead for many years.

It was quite impossible that anyone could have known of the name, or guessed it, and the description by the clairvoyant was also perfectly correct.

Last night the three billiard balls disappeared suddenly off the table (no one being near the table at the time), and a few minutes later one was dropped on to the table, apparently from the ceiling, and the other two on to the floor, at each end of the room. This was done in the full light, and was witnessed by all who were present. An invisible hand took up a piece of chalk and marked various figures and symbolical signs on the green cloth of the table. Cues were also taken from the rack, carried across the room, and handed to some of those looking on. A lady's fur cape was taken off a chair on which it was lying, and gently placed around the shoulders of one of the ladies.

One evening (I had evidently displeased our unseen friends, as they mischievously threw various articles at me), a hassock was taken off the floor, at the other side of the room, and hurled at me, as also were pieces of chalk, a book and paper rolled up into balls, etc.

Materialized forms of spirits have often been seen, and we have often felt their hands upon us. This is all the more extraordinary as we do not hold regular seances and hardly know who is the medium for these phenomena. At one time it was thought that I was the medium, but the manifestations have occurred when I was not in the room. I fancy that several of our party are mediums (as our spirit friends assert), and that it is the combination of our forces which enables the unseen intelligences to produce these striking phenomena. At one time a band of mischievous spirits were at work, and put out all the lights in the establishment—in the bedrooms, corridors, and salons—and when candles were lighted they were snuffed out by unseen hands, right before our eyes. All sorts of tricks were played upon us then, and it became rather alarming; but for weeks we have had no recurrence of that sort of thing. One lady had her arm gently taken hold of and the next morning she found the marks of fingers clearly outlined in blue on the flesh!

A French gentleman had an uncanny experience. One night he awoke with a start, and saw standing by his bed a young man, whom he recognized as an old friend of his who had been dead for years. He was rather frightened at first, but the feeling soon wore off, and his spirit friend had a conversation with him lasting half an hour. Curiously enough, the apparition did not say anything about the spirit world and his condition there, but talked solely about electricity and telegraphy. He had been an electrical engineer in his life on this planet and was evidently still greatly interested in his old vocation, which had ever been of absorbing interest to him. He was looking much the same as when "in the body," and wore clothes of a similar kind to those he used to work in. He vanished suddenly, without a word of adieu, right in the middle of a sentence. This was no optical illusion—no trick of the imagination, or dream—but an absolute fact, happening to a practical, unimaginative man who was wide awake, and in full possession of his senses at the time. This incident occurred here a few weeks ago. The seer, I may state, is a strong medium, though he knows nothing about Spiritualism or occult sciences.

The phenomena may appear trivial and purposeless to the outsider who knows nothing about Spiritualism, but to the student in psychical research they are replete with interest and significance, especially as they have been more or less spontaneous, and not evoked in the ordinary orthodox way. It is not our intention to consider the cui bono of these occurrences, but merely to observe and record what actually takes place, as further evidence of the power of spirit over matter and the ability of intelligent beings in another phase of existence to carry on communication with beings on this more material plane, and to advance, as far as possible, the extension of research into the hitherto unknown, unseen spheres of our wonderful universe, of which the God of Love and Wisdom is the omniscient and all-pervading influence and ruler.

DREAM THAT CAME TRUE.

W. A. Crown Has Vision of Being Robbed and Finds It Reality.

"Do dreams come true?" is a question that W. A. Crown, 598 LaSalle avenue, says he will lecture on as soon as his voice is in condition to do so if he receives an offer from some local theater.

He told Lieutenant Heidelmeier of the Larrabee street station last night that he went to Lincoln park yesterday afternoon to inhale the fresh air and in doing so dropped to sleep on a bench. In his slumbers he dreamed that he was being robbed by a man whose description he gave to the police.

He found when he woke up that his watch and $13 had vanished when he went to reach for his timepiece and found it missing. The same feeling came over him when he felt in his pocket for car fare and found out that $13 which he had was also missing.—Chicago Chronicle.

THE JESUITS AT WORK.

Elsie Reynolds Pronounced an Excellent Medium, and Controlled by Catholic Spirits Who Repeatedly Expose Her, Illustrating the Important Fact That Spiritualism is a Fruitful Source for Theories, and That Each One Should Exercise His Own Judgment All the Time, Independent of What Any Spirit Says or Pretends to Be—Do Your Own Thinking—An Open Letter to All From Lois Waisbrooker.

Neither will I or Brother Edson ever sit in her seances again, not for the reason you give, but because her band were Catholics while on the earth plane, and the fact that they control a medium makes them none the less so now. She is one of the best of mediums, but not a philosopher. There are too many persons who have seen under test conditions exhibitions of her wonderful powers to question that, no matter what testimony to the contrary.

Strange that Spiritualists cannot see the, to me, self-evident fact that a medium who can be used for such manifestations as I have seen in Elsie's circles, can also be used to perpetrate fraud, if spirits who are opposed to Spiritualism get control. I do not question but that all sorts of evidence can be produced to show her a fraud, but she is simply the tool.

Again, no spirit friend of Spiritualism will say through mortal mediumship: "Through the stench of a degraded influence called materialization, so many individuals in the spiritual ranks have been attracted to that stench, the odor seems to agree with their olfactories."

How can one help seeing the ears of the Jesuits sticking through the communication. No, I do not implicate the medium. He doubtless is honest, but prejudiced against materialization, but the inference is plainly carried that all claims in that line are fraudulent, when there are those who see the principle, the natural law upon which, materialization is based, exhibitions of which have been temporarily made, and which will become as permanent as the holders of such bodies choose when the right conditions can be had.

But before the fullness of the at-one-ment can come this Jesuitical power, and all else that stands across the path of progress will disappear before the rising sun of truth.

LOIS WAISBROOKER.

WONEWOC CAMP, WIS.

Its Favorable Location, Prospects and Advantages.

As I am a resident of Wisconsin I am naturally interested in all it does in a spiritual line. I have wondered whether Spiritualists generally know that we, of "the Badger State" have a camp-meeting, and that it will compare favorably in about every respect with the other Spiritualist camps in the country. Many of our western Spiritualists, and even some from Wisconsin, travel long distances to camp-meetings, perhaps not knowing or not realizing that there is at Wonewoc, in the southwestern part of Wisconsin, a camp which in most points quite equals the eastern camps. The Wonewoc camp this year begins August 5, and ends August 28. In point of beauty, and in the healthfulness of its location this camp is unexcelled by any camp in America.

Wonewoc is a beautiful town of about 1,200 inhabitants, located in the Baraboo Valley, on the Chicago & Northwestern railroad in southwestern Wisconsin. Unity Park, the place where the meetings are held, is owned by the Spiritualists. It is located on a bluff overlooking the city. On these grounds an auditorium has been erected within the last few months. From this park the Baraboo Valley is a perfect amphitheatre. The valley and river can be seen for miles up and down. The air in the park is as pure as the airs of heaven can be imagined to be. The water on the grounds is as pure and clear as crystal, and as cold as anybody should ever drink.

The hotels, stores and other business places of the city seem to vie with each other in trying to make the Spiritualists feel at home among them during the camping season. The talent employed by this camp is equal to that used in any other camp.

That young Boanerges, Will J. Erwood, the president of the Spiritualist State Association, is the president of and one of the principal workers in the camp. Mr. M. M. Blish, who, I believe is, and has been for some years, principal of the Wonewoc public schools, is the secretary, and in that place no better person could be found. Those employed as speakers, mediums and entertainers are as good as can be found anywhere. Besides those already mentioned, I would call over the following names on the list: Mrs. Amanda Coffman, Rev. B. F. Austin, Moses Hull, Mrs. Frances Wheeler, Mrs. J. P. Whitwell, Eugene Cooper the boy orator and biblical scholar, and graduate of the Morris Pratt school, Miss Agnes Chaffee, a graduate of, and now a teacher in the Morris Pratt School, and others, among whom one of Moses Hull's daughters is expected.

Special programs are arranged for special days, among which may be mentioned the Morris Pratt School Day, Wonewoc Day, State Spiritualist Association Day, Memorial Day, etc.

Many of the Spiritualists of Wisconsin, Minnesota and northeastern Iowa, it is believed would, if they could realize what this camp is doing, pay it at least one visit, and as it is believed that one visit to this camp would lead to other visits I feel to urge the Spiritualists of this part of the country to at least make one visit to the camp. Come out and let us have a time long to be remembered.

Sunapee Lake Camp, N. H.

Sunapee Lake Camp-meeting opened its twenty-eighth annual meeting, at Blodgett's Landing, N. H., July 30, with a down-pouring rain, which was needed very much for it was very dry here. At 10:45 a. m., the meeting was called to order by the president, John Gage, who made a few remarks, and presented Mrs. Sadie L. Hand, who is a favorite of Massachusetts and New Hampshire as a speaker of the truth of Spiritualism, and she gave a few tests after her lecture and all were recognized.

At 2:30 p. m., with a pouring rain, Mrs. Hand read a poem entitled "Not Understood." The audience gave good attention and was well pleased with the lecture which closed with a few tests which gave good satisfaction.

The music was under the direction of Mrs. Bond. This closed the first day of Sunapee Lake camp.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street.

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year	$1 00
Six Months	50cts
Thirteen Weeks	25cts
Single Copy	5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE:

☞ At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES,

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 12, 1905.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Any person donating one dollar to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., will, if desired, receive one set of spiritual tracts and one copy of "Violets," a booklet of choice spiritual poems. One contributing two dollars to the fund will also receive a copy of "Leaves of Truth," a cloth-bound book of instructive spiritual matter.

Old Methods Won't Do.

Rev. Wm. J. Dawson, one of the most distinguished pulpiteers of London, recently doing evangelical work in America, but lately returned to England, made some damaging statements as to the prosperity of his faith before taking his departure. He said:

"There is no denying the fact that many of the churches are nearly empty. The old methods won't do. The preachers must go to work on new lines."

During an interview with a reporter, Rev. Dawson added:

"On the recent Sunday I made the rounds of a number of churches in New York of different denominations, to see for myself the condition of affairs. In some of the noted ones, with seats for 2,000 or more people, I found from 300 to 400. Others were nearly empty. The two or three filled were those making a specialty of high ritual and fine music."

But note again what this learned divine said to his interviewer:

"I heard last Sunday in one of the largest churches in New York, one of a denomination supposed to present powerful preachers who can read the souls of the people. I heard an essay delivered from the pulpit that was childish, like a lesson from a primer; its line of reasoning was like a shoestring. It drove me out in five minutes. In other churches I heard delivered essays that interested no one."

What Rev. Dawson found in New York is common to all churches. Pointless essays on the one hand, shilly shally on the other. The clerics were educated for the pulpit. They have no other means of support. The bottom has fallen out of theology, and the pulpit orator is imitating the lawyer who wastes his time in attempted oratory while his client is out searching for witnesses. Anything will do for purpose of procrastination.

A Terrible Record.

The State Board of Control of Charitable Institutions in Kansas, has just made an official report, showing that the counties in that state where lengthy religious revivals have been held during the last year, the number of insane persons sent to the state asylum bear a far higher proportion than in counties where such inviting causes do not prevail. H. C. Bowman, a member of the Board, says:

"Insanity seems to have followed the religious revivals like an epidemic. Reno county, where there was a protracted revival early last year, has sent 32 insane persons to the state asylum in Topeka, in twelve months. I find this epidemic of insanity has also followed the revivals which were held in Topeka, Arkansas City, Winfield, Wichita and other places."

The Progressive Thinker, on numerous occasions, has stated this result was incidental to revivals, and the preaching of the damnable dogmas of the dominant religion. The statement was founded on the editor's personal observation through many years; but here comes an official confirmation of those statements, which cannot be controverted.

Should such consequences flow from the teaching of Spiritualism there would be a powerful movement made to suppress it, instead of special and class legislation in its interests.

HELLO BOXES ARE WICKED.

Old German Baptists Decide That No Member Shall Use a Telephone—All Must Come Out.

Flora, Ind.—No more telephones will be used by the old German Baptist brethren under pain of the displeasure of the church. At the national conference, held here, Foreman Michael Montgomery decided that telephones are wicked, and their use was forbidden members.

"Psychic Research and the Future Life."

The Progressive Thinker is constantly scintillating with articles that are impressive, interesting, instructive and soul-elevating. Next week a Celebrated Light in the Scientific and Literary World, will give extended views on "Psychical Research and the Future Life."

How Miracles Are Wrought.

That the days of miracles are not past, at least in the Catholic church, is evident from the report that comes from New York City, wherein it is said to be rumored about the church of St. Jean Baptiste, where the relic of St. Ann is being exposed to sufferers during a novena, that a blind man has been cured.

According to the story, the blind man was led into the church during the afternoon by a boy. He said he had been blind for years, and he had great faith in the power of the relic of St. Ann to restore his sight.

The relic, a bone, reposes on the altar. The blind man knelt before it in prayer for ten minutes or more. As he prayed he swayed with emotion, and when he had finished he bowed over the relic and kissed it fervently.

Then, it is said, he opened his eyes and beheld the crowd. With an exclamation of joy, he rushed into the street, and was dazzled by his first glimpse of daylight in many years. It is further stated that thousands of cripples and other sufferers have visited the church, and wonderful cures have been reported. At one side of the altar is a heap of crutches and bandages that have been cast aside by cripples, who said the holy relic cured them.

Of course the good Catholics will believe these cures are proof of the soundness of the claims of the Catholic church as being a divinely appointed institution, and teacher of the true faith.

By the same sort of reasoning can be demonstrated the same sort of claims for Spiritualism with its cases of spirit healing.

Now, while it need not be denied that genuine spirit power may be exerted in these Catholic miracles of healing, such healing does not in the least establish the Catholic assumptions of the church's truth, authority or supremacy in matters of faith and doctrine.

These reputed Catholic miracles may all be explained and accounted for, on good grounds, without resorting to miraculous interference in any degree or manner The principle of Suggestion and Auto-Suggestion, so well understood and practiced by mental healers, solves the whole matter, in accordance with established laws pertaining to mind and its relations to the human body and its functions.

This principle is clearly to be seen in the case of the blind man. The elements of the sense of sight were in existence in this man's case If the eyes had been destroyed, there could have been no cure effected. It was a case wherein what the man already possessed might be roused into activity—being strengthened and reinvigorated and functional activity induced.

This was effected by the strong desire and faith and the resultant Suggestion and Auto-Suggestion, whereby the sleeping functional organs of sight were excited, refreshed and stirred into operative life again.

If the "relic" were a piece of wood, or any other old bone than St. Ann's, the cure would have resulted just the same, provided the blind man believed it was a relic of St. Ann and possessed miraculous virtue. Such is the power of Suggestion and Auto-Suggestion.

Prof. Lodge Believes in Fraud Hunting, But Not in Fraud Hiding.

Eight years ago Prof. Oliver Lodge, the eminent scientist of England, and a president of the Psychical Research Society of London, in an address before the Spiritualist Alliance of that city, gave expression to the following thoughts upon conditions so prevalent in the United States at the present time as to make them doubly applicable here and now:

"And besides this liability to unconscious, or only semi-conscious fraud, there is another MORE DIABOLICAL DANGER, VIZ., THE PRESENCE OF IMPOSTORS—the real and genuine unbelievers, who perceiving, as they think, a set of credulous fools, set themselves to earn their coin by performances of the most barefaced and organized duplicity. I marvel sometimes at the patience and gentleness accorded to these wolves, on the principle, I suppose of the wheat and the tares, and the difficulty of discrimination, they are allowed to remain and mislead ignorant persons in security; but they have a most deadly effect all round, and it seems to me that at any cost an effort should be made to root them out. I wonder if you will permit me to ask whether, as a body, just now you are not somewhat supine—more supine than your fathers were, who tolled and suffered somewhat in the good cause? YOU HAVE A TRUTH WHICH THE WORLD HAS NOT RECEIVED; YOU ARE THE TRUSTEES OF IT; ARE YOU BEING FAITHFUL TO YOUR TRUST?

"It is not for me, or for any outsider, to answer that question. By placid contemplation and letting it pass nothing will be accomplished towards introducing this new truth to mankind. It might be possible for your Alliance, if it was worth while, to devise some practical system adapted to guard inquirers against known impostors, AND TO GUARD YOURSELVES FROM BEING THOUGHT TO BELIEVE IN PERSONS WHO PRETEND TO POSSESS WHAT THEY HAVE NOT GOT."

An Incorrect Bible Definition.

Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.—Hebrews 11:1.

Such a passage of the Bible is read without thought, and is accepted as the voice of inspiration. What is faith? It is something believed; a statement made by another in which confidence is placed. It may be false, but if accepted as truth then he who believes in it has faith in the narration, and nothing more. It is not a "substance," as Paul alleged. Substance is material matter, not an idea.

Then the good Paul instructs us that "faith is evidence of things not seen." Faith evidences nothing. We may believe, or have faith in the declaration that the moon is but a large cheese, but faith in that assertion evidences, or, in other words, proves nothing. The critical reader notices such errors in statement in the Bible, while the general reader passes on, giving it no thought.

The Difference.

Standard Christian literature if read intelligently everywhere betrays its pagan origin, though learned writers labor to prove this so-called heathen faith was engrafted upon Christianity, instead of being its parent. The Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, a work of some 1,300 pages, which made large drafts on Henderson, Watson, Buck, and a host of scholarly Christian authors in its compilation, perhaps unintentionally, reveals many facts in the direction indicated. The work is an old one, and is found in libraries of the ablest clergymen.

In the Encyclopedia's article, under the head of "Preaching," may be found the following:

"The apostles being dead * * * the whole Christian system underwent a miserable change; preaching shared the fate of other institutions, and this glory of the primitive church was now generally degenerated. Those writers whom we call the Fathers, however held up to view by some as models of imitation, do not deserve that indiscriminate praise ascribed to them. Christianity, it is true, is found in their writings; but how sadly, incorporated with Pagan philosophy and Jewish allegory."

The author goes on to say: "Christianity was * * * under gradual decay, during the first three centuries."

Those "first three centuries" we apprehend, were several centuries later than is generally supposed; but they embraced that period when Roman and Grecian mythology was breaking away from its ancient faith; the people had become too intelligent to worship a host of inferior gods and goddesses, and her men of brains were merging the entire brood into a new character possessing the peculiar characteristics of all of them; and the feminine branch was merged into the Madonna whom Catholics adore as the "Mother of God, the Queen of heaven."

These suggestions are for the thoughtful; but they account for the disappearance of the multitude of lesser gods—many of whom now appear in the Catholic calendar of saints—as can be done in no other way.

The difference between us and Protestants in this matter is: They claim Paganism was engrafted on Christianity; whereas we maintain Christianity had its rise in Paganism. Which is correct?

United States Far From a Republic.

Mrs. Ida Husted Harper in her address at the annual convention of the National Woman Suffrage Association, which has just closed in Portland, Ore., gave some facts which do not redound to the glory of our so-called great Republic. She said in part:

"There are forty-two reasons why women cannot vote in the United States. The first and greatest lies in the National Constitution; the other forty-one are found in the Constitutions of the different states. In these revered documents one little word of four letters, 'male,' is all that stands between 16,000,000 women and the suffrage.

"The religious, the property, the educational and the color qualifications have been swept away; but in the constitutions of all the states except four this word 'male' still remains in the suffrage clause, absolutely prohibiting to all women a voice in the government. Such is the situation to-day in the country which poses before the world as the greatest and most perfect Republic that ever existed; which exults over all the nations of the earth as the only land of equal rights; which declares that its foundation, its corner-stone, the keystone of its arch, is individual representation. The irony of it. The injustice, the tyranny, the disgrace of it.

"In no monarchy is there such arbitrary discrimination against one-half the people. There is not another country having an elected representative body, where this body itself may not extend the suffrage. Australia, by an act of its Parliament, enfranchised 850,000 women. The Parliament of New Zealand, by a single act, conferred the suffrage on 150,000. The Parliament of Great Britain has absolute power to grant the franchise to its millions of women. This is true of all the legislative bodies on the continent of Europe. But the government of the United States, in its overpowering desire to vest all authority in the people themselves, has placed one-half of the people in complete and helpless subjection to the other half."

Thus Saith the Lord.

According to Bible authority, every whim and caprice of Moses was based on a "Thus Saith the Lord." In modern times God does not communicate so freely and so often with mortals. Late Associated Press dispatches have a recent case in which it is claimed God has revived his old-time custom. One C. L. Melvin, of Iola, Kansas, says God himself told him twenty-three years ago, in a vision, that he was to strike the rum power a blow, from the effects of which it would never recover. Acting on that authority Melvin is now charged with wrecking three saloons with dynamite, causing damage estimated at $100,000.

The Progressive Thinker takes no stock in such interferences of Eternal Justice in the affairs of men. A Booth, a Guiteau, or a Czolgosz may claim divine authority for murdering presidents, but we know such claim is false, as baseless as was Moses' claim that his acts of infamy, slaughtering all that breathed, was false. The lightning, claimed by churchmen as one of God's agents for executing his vengeance, and destroying great temples erected in which to worship him, are not directed by an Almighty arm, but are obedient to laws fixed and immutable countless millions of years before man had a being, or houses of worship were ever thought of. It is blasphemy to credit the devilish actions of devilish men to God, just as it is to charge the immortals with crime. The damnable priesthood had what they claimed was authority from God for burning witches and heretics, but it was the promptings of their own vile natures.

Harmony With Natural Law.

Sir William Crookes' Provisional Explanation of Telepathy—Harmony With Natural Law.

Mr Crookes, when elected president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, said in his remarkable address that all of the phenomena of this universe are presumably continuous waves and vibrations we trace in everything, and we have good evidence that they extend from one vibration to two thousand trillions per second, thus varying in their frequency and also in their velocity. "As a starting point," he said, "I will take a pendulum beating seconds in air. If I keep on doubling I get a series of steps as follows:

"It will be seen by the above that at the fifth step from unity, at 32 vibrations per second, we reach the region where atmospheric vibration reveals itself to us as sound. At 32,768 per second, to the average human ear the region of sound ends, but certain more highly endowed animals probably hear sounds too acute for our organs, that is, sounds which vibrate at a higher rate."

After the thirty-second step, vibrations increase rapidly, giving us electric waves, light waves at an unthinkable number of vibrations per second, until we reach the X-ray and finally to us the radium-ray. The rays of radium are the results of quintillions of vibrations per second, and are so subtle that they pass through all solids.

It may be that the X-waves and the radium-waves are only at the threshold of the wonders of the unseen universe. May it not be that thought waves, waves by which spirits communicate, be continuous with the waves that begin with sound, and light, and radium, and that the spirit body, which like Christ's resurrected body passed through solid matter, be but continuous with the physical bodies which we have in this world, raised to an indescribable number of vibrations? If communications of spirits are through vibrations in ether or in some still more subtile substance, we should have in this a possible explanation of telepathy.

Professor Crookes continues:

"It seems to me that in these rays we may have a possible mode of transmitting intelligence, which with a few reasonable postulates, may supply a key to much that is obscure in psychical research. Let it be assumed that rays, or rays even of higher frequency, can pass into the brain and act on some nervous center there. Let it be conceived that the brain contains a center which uses these rays as the vocal chords use sound vibrations (both being under the command of intelligence), and sends them out, with the velocity of light, to impinge on the receiving ganglion of another brain. In this way some, at least, of the phenomena of telepathy, and the transmission of intelligence from one sensitive to another through long distances, seem to come into the domain of law, and can be grasped. A sensitive may be one who possesses the telepathic transmitting or receiving ganglion in an advanced state of development, or who, by constant practice, is rendered more sensitive to these high frequency waves. Experience seems to show that the receiving and transmiting ganglions are not equally developed; one may be active, while the other, like the pineal eye in man, may be only vestigal. By such a hypothesis no physical laws are violated, neither is it necessary to invoke what is commonly called the supernatural.

Is it inconceivable that intense thought concentrated towards a sensitive with whom the thinker is in close sympathy may induce a telepathic chain of brain waves, along which the message of thought can go straight to its goal without the loss of energy due to distance? And is it also inconceivable that our mundane ideas of space and distance may be superseded in these subtle regions of unsubstantial thought where 'near' and 'far' may lose their usual meaning?"—From the Widow's Mite and Other Psychic Phenomena, by Dr. Funk.

As the Dewdrop to the Rose.

BY DR. T. WILKINS.

Ah! I know a little fellow, bless his little baby toes,
Who has come into my being as a dewdrop to a rose.
It is true, he's just a baby, with his baby ways, but then,
He's a precious little darling, is this little Robert Glenn.

Yes, his name is Robert Glenn, and we call him Bobbie, too,
Just "for short," you know, for babies must be babies through and through,
And he grows more cute and dearer as the more he grows and knows,
And to me he brings the freshness of the dewdrop to the rose.

I'm a lover of sweet babies, and most all are sweet to me;
They are sweet and cute and cunning, with their meanness yet to be,
But this little Glenn is sweeter, as he more precious grows,
And he brings my soul the richness of the dewdrop to the rose.

I am aging some in body—though I still am strong and spry—
And I know, as with all others, who are passing on and by,
That my spirit must be loosened from the form, but as it goes
It will bear this baby's sweetness of the dewdrop to the rose.

When my spirit passes over, if his spirit still remains,
I should like to guard and guide him, free from all degrading stains,
Or secure a holy angel from whose spirit sweetness flows,
To become his living sponsor, as the dewdrop to the rose.

If his grandma should precede him to the land of soul, I know
That his sweet, unfolding spirit would be guarded from each foe,
For she guards him from the dangers with a love that ever glows
For his future life's unfoldment, as the dewdrop to the rose.

A Suggestive Essay.

The Progressive Thinker feels like calling especial attention to the very able and philosophical discussion anent the fraud question, in this issue, by our valued contributor, J. S. Loveland.

There can be no doubt that he strikes the very base of the mediumistic fraud business, as part and parcel of the general system on which our "economics," political and financial affairs and commercial business are based.

The rampant rottenness prevalent, disclosed in schemes of "graft" of various kinds, and in multitudinous cunning ways to thrive on robbery of men by men, plainly indicate ignorance and disregard of moral law, permeating society in general.

The trickery of pretended mediums is only one phase, one branch of a system whose basis is human selfishness degenerated into human greed, that ignores fine moral principles of right and justice.

The revelations of the "Equitable Life" society, and other noted affairs of the same general nature, are but surface indications of a deep disease afflicting the body public.

Nevertheless, this prevalence of wrong-doing does not properly serve as a foil or shield to protect fake mediums from condemnation. It cannot be used to excuse or defend the burglar, the counterfeiter, the forger, the murderer, nor any other criminal against justice and the rights of humanity.

A mediumistic swindler cannot excuse his dishonest performances on the plea of the general dishonesty of the public.

The general prevalence of wrong, throughout the social economic system may palliate to an extent the offenses of individuals, but it cannot wholly, justly, cover their derelictions from justice.

A thief is not excused because other thieves steal.

The rottenness in high places and low does not and cannot justify crime.

The good name of Spiritualism is smirched to-day because of the trickery of pretended mediums. A great wrong is inflicted on our cause by dishonest practices of persons claiming to be mediums. Good and true mediums are scandalized and injured because of the treacherous work of tricksters, and the whole cause is brought into disrepute. A great wrong is done to Spiritualism, to Spiritualists and to humanity.

Those who inflict this wrong should be—what?

Suffered to go on with their work, without hindrance; or, curbed in their evil career?

There can be but one honest and honorable answer to the question.

The work of purification, of reformation, in a general sense must be evolutionary. It must be wrought by education, education of the moral sense of mankind to higher and finer conceptions of right and wrong and moral responsibility—responsibility to society, and to one's own spiritual nature and selfhood.

There must be a building upward, into the spiritual realm, and not downward into the grosser selfish desires and passions. The things of the spiritual life must come to be viewed as the principal thing, and not the getting of money, money, money.

In this purifying, reformatory work Spiritualism and Spiritualists have an important part to bear.

To purify our ranks of fraud, deception, trickery, is a part of the great work of raising the world to a higher and purer plane. While others are working in their special organizations and lines, we must work in our own field, and while helping others, also help ourselves, and keep abreast if not in advance of the army of progress and reform.

While contemning fraud and robbery in financial "trusts" and "combines," we must not ignore phases of moral rottenness on the part of the derelicts of Spiritualism. To do so would argue hypocrisy before the world.

We must not wait till the world shall have become reformed from its derelictions, before we take up the needed reformatory work in our own ranks. To do so would be detrimental to our own cause and to the world.

Divorced Church and State.

The Chamber of Deputies of France, acting on the bill for the separation of church and state, balloted on July 4, resulting in the decisive vote of 341 for, and 233 against repeal. The bill was introduced into the Lower House, March 22. No fewer than 250 amendments were offered during the long time the bill has ben pending.

The famous—should be known as the infamous—concordat, was signed by Pius VII. and Napoleon in 1801, during which all the intermediate period the church and the government of France have been in partnership, as they had been until the short period of the revolution. The title of all church property in France under the action of this bill, if it shall become a law, will be vested in the state, and may be used as the state shall direct.

Supplementary Report of Mediums' Relief Fund.

To the Editor:—The following sums have been received at the N. S. A. office to be added to the amount recently collected for the Mediums' Relief Fund. The sincere thanks and appreciation of this association and its beneficiaries are extended to each of the kindly donors:

W. O. Purvis, $5; Mrs. A. Chidester, $2; From a Friend, $3; John Buswell, $1; Mrs. Agness Dell, $1; Mrs. M. C. Dudley (omitted from last list) $1. The following sums received from Mrs. Virginie Barrett, the persons mentioned having received from her, each, a copy of the song "Katydid," for their contributions: Mrs. Weever, Mr. Leslie, Mrs. Knowlow and Dr. Hardcastle, each ten cents.

With kindest greeting and good will to all.

Humanitarian Work.

Denver Jurist to Employ Mesmerism in Courtroom as Remedy for Crime—Magistrate Expects by Will Power to Lure Young Offenders from Evil Ways.

Humanitarians and sociologists will watch with great interest an experiment about to be inaugurated by Judge Lindsey of the Juvenile court of Denver, Colorado, as stated in the Chicago Record-Herald. Experiments made along the line of effecting reformation of bad habits, by capable and proper hypnotists, have been said to have proved eminently successful in correcting evil propensities in young persons.

Successful experiments of this kind go to prove that hypnotism is a force in nature, which, while it may, like any other force in nature, be misused and perverted to evil, may also be used to help and bless humanity.

If, as all may hope, Judge Lindsey's plan shall prove even reasonably successful after fair trial, it will mark a distinct and important advance in social science as applied to reformatory effort in molding mental and moral habits and principles along lines conducive to the welfare of individuals and society.

And why may not the benefits of the suggestive treatment be extended so as to include others, of older years, who need reformation?

Although more successful, perhaps, in the case of youthful persons, who are more susceptible to the influence, there is reason to believe that very many older persons may be greatly benefited, more especially those who feel a genuine desire to reform, and who would willingly co-operate to that end with any effort to help them into better lines of thought and conduct.

The suggestive plan seems to open up a new era in reformatory humanitarian effort.

Every true friend of humanity will wish most satisfactory success to Judge Lindsey in his effort.

Denver, Aug. 1.—Mystic forces of the unseen world—strange powers by the use of which the mind of one person may control and mold that of another—will be enrolled in the cause of justice and made to do its work of mercy and uplifting by Judge Ben. B. Lindsey in the Juvenile Court of this city.

The whip, the cell and the reform school having failed in many cases to perform their work of converting into sane and moral youth unfortunates born to a heritage of crime and evil habits, Judge Lindsey has determined to act not only as jurist, but as an agent of reform. He hopes to do this in court by hypnotizing young incorrigibles and by the force of mesmeric suggestion work wonderful changes for good in the character of his charges.

Novel Sight in Court.

The spectacle of a judge gravely making the "passes" of a hypnotist—a sight probably never seen in any court—first will be witnessed next month, when the September term of court opens. Judge Lindsey already has selected the first case upon which he will operate—that of a young boy addicted since the earliest youth to the excessive use of cigarettes.

Judge Lindsey has mastered the art of hypnotism—or so much of the art as is known—and few men have better than he an understanding of the influence of mind over mind. While the judge lays no claims to comprehension of the mysteries of the psychic phenomena through which he hopes to work his reforms, he is an enthusiastic believer in the efficacy of hypnotism, properly employed, as a corrective agent.

He believes that by this power he can shape and mold the bent and twisted brains of those who never have had a fair chance—boys and girls born with their moral senses perverted and reared into evil habits without the ability to distinguish right from wrong.

Will Awaken Now Senses.

Judge Lindsey will take the place of father and mother, pastor and teacher in the lives of his small charges from now on and will attempt to will them into better ways of living, into powers of seeing the right and being able to perform it.

Great encouragement has been given the judge by his fellow scientists, who say the magistrate possesses hypnotic power to a high degree and expect great good to come from the experiments.

The first actual test will be made at the opening of the next term of court. In selecting a boy addicted to smoking cigarettes as the first subject, Judge Lindsey will have the opportunity of testing his ability to assuage physical cravings, as well as to work mental reformation.

The judge recently returned from the convention of the bureau of charities and corrections, where he met many phrenologists, most of whom advised him to attempt hypnotic experiments in the Juvenile Court.

Judge Lindsey is exceedingly sanguine, and believes he will duplicate his former success in the Juvenile Court, only that hypnotism will be more far-reaching in importance than anything he has attempted.

Judge Is Optimistic.

He described his plans as follows:

"My intention is to practice so that I may become as proficient as possible. I shall also have other workers study the subject, and shall endeavor when I am away to secure the services of prominent hypnotists to take my place in dealing with the children. When I take it up, as I have now determined to do, I shall go into it for all that it is worth.

"I have long believed in the influence of mind over matter. I am not inclined to Christian Science beliefs, but study has convinced me that mind is greater than matter and has a correspondingly greater influence. A weak minded person who is led, though he may have no bad tendencies, will become bad just because somebody who is evil minded wills that this shall be.

"My dealings with children have shown me how true this is. For instance, there are some boys to whom cigarette smoke is decidedly offensive. But others who smoke tell these that they will never be manly unless they acquire the art of smoking.

Influence the Agent.

"In this manner boys are led into the most injurious practice known to the modern science—not through inclination—merely through influence.

"Now, if this is true, as it undoubtedly is, why should not it be possible for some one to study and use this influence in precisely the opposite direction?

"This was the question which first set me to thinking, and the more I thought of it the more feasible the idea seemed to be. I bought books on the subject and talked with well-known authorities. Each step I took in this direction convinced me more and more thoroughly that hypnotism if rightly used might be a made a power of good.

"Now I have decided to try it, and give it a good trial, too. Experts say that the drink habit, cigarette habit and gambling habit are all amenable to hypnotic suggestion. Why should not the 'bad' habit prove equally amenable? Anyway I'm going to see if I can not hypnotize my boys and girls into becoming really good—the kind of good that will stay with them."

Will Suggest Thought.

The mode of hypnotizing which will be used will be simple. The child will be placed in a high-backed chair vis-a-vis to Judge Lindsey, or whoever is operating, each of his hands in one of the hypnotist's and the knees and feet of both in contact. He will then be thrown into a state of sleep which will last from ten to fifteen minutes. During this time the operator will endeavor to impress his thought on the mind of the child. The thought with a cigarette smoker, for example, will be: "It is injurious for you to smoke, and therefore you must not do it. You do not care to anyway."

No one will be allowed to hypnotize who is not recognized as a man or woman of the best morals, or most lofty character, as the results from any other person might be the worst.

THE PSYCHIC CIRCLE.

To the Members of the Psychic Circle:—Will you kindly concentrate your minds with loving and healthful thoughts, on my baby Guy and myself, every Friday evening until we are well again? I am a member of the Psychic Circle. MRS. WM. T. LAMBERT.
Bedford, Iowa.

E. W. Brooks writes from Ellicottville, N. Y.: "I hope all can have The Progressive Thinker. I have taken it several years. Members of the Psychic Circle who can, might help those too poor, if any there be, or might send their own copy after reading. Hoping and believing the circle will be a grand success, I remain sincerely yours."

WORK FIT FOR MIND.

Thoughts Along Lines of Social and Mental Progress.

It is surely within the bounds of reason to say that the human brain, when developed to perfection, is capable of fully comprehending every fact in nature, and by devoting its energies to these higher realms of thought, will solve every problem which affects its destiny, as well as the origin of life itself.

In fact, it appears to me that everything in nature must be life in some degree of its development, from the dense condition of matter to conscious mind itself.

And we can readily conceive that every power which keeps in motion this great universe, must spring from an emotion of mind.

From the construction of the mud hut or the palace; from the ox cart to the ponderous engine; from the messenger boy to the noiseless telegraphy.

These wonderful advanced conditions are the thought emanating from the human brain, put in visible form, utilizing the silent forces of nature, in order that humanity might enjoy more fully the blessings of earth.

There must be a culminating object as life's great accomplishment, which, if we see it aright, has never been fully realized. Not that mind is not capable of solving this problem, but because it has been occupied by, and has used its wonderful energy in the accomplishment which related wholly to the protection of the body in finding means whereby the luxuries of life, that of time and opportunity to indulge those passions which brought momentary pleasure, and to such a degree did this effort extend and so monstrous was its effect upon the masses, that the struggle of life for existence alone has for centuries been a problem which not only chilled the blood of countless millions of individuals, but has defied the wisdom of government, apparently, to solve.

In this strife here in the most civilized portions of the earth the youth has been ingloriously neglected and allowed to grow up in tatters and rags roaming the streets of all great cities, living by guess and by God, depending upon chance and cunning in order to obtain a crust of bread, and a rude shelter from the wintry blasts.

Not even the innocence and purity of the maiden has been regarded. She in the last half century, has been forced by conditions over which she had no control, conditions which the government is responsible for, to sell her virtue and desecrate her body for the price of a meal.

Old age, too, has been kicked into the gutter, to end earthly life in a poorhouse or prison.

The matured youth and middle-aged man have become tramps or servants for others, notwithstanding the fact that the fertile valleys of America, alone, could, were the forces properly applied, support in luxury every human being of earth; and strange to say, the wisdom of this government neither offers nor suggests a remedy to rectify these monstrous evils, but devotes its entire attention, its entire energies, to the regulation of traffic between powerful combinations of capital.

And traffic, when simmered down to logical conclusions, is nothing more than legalized robbery, and the efforts to sustain it have been one of the primitive causes of human distress, and all the troubled conditions which contending armies, which have clashed in deadly assault for centuries, which have passed and are in operation at the present, are the legitimate child of this wonderful effort to regulate traffic, and this wonderful, intellectual force of energy, used in traffic, is propelled by selfish greed for gold.

A greed, too, that goes so far as to ignore every principle of civilization, which, in any way, hinders its efforts to enrich the power which created the trade.

Under these conditions, we do not wonder that no thought has been given to that wonderful subject of life's object, its final destiny.

And since the truth, which if known would add new luster to human achievement, can only be mirrored to that brain whose efforts of concentrated thought in this direction, have developed the power of mind necessary to comprehend it.

Every great fact which has been demonstrated to the human mind regarding the motion of heavenly bodies, has come as a result of wonderful intellectual energy, seeking their solution, until to-day we are more proficient in our knowledge of chemistry, of astronomy than we are in the rearing of children or the necessary action of individuals toward each other, which will make a higher and more exalted condition of human achievement possible, whereby the standard of civilization will be raised to such an exalted condition that every luxury of earth, whereby human happiness is created, will be the common inheritance of every soul of earth.

If the youth has been educated at all, if he developed a well-trained mind by his mental efforts, it was for the purpose of using this superior strength so that he could more readily, and without physical toil, obtain the necessities of life, not realizing the fact, which must be true, that superior mental power when used to produce this effort, that the crime must be equally as great against the great law of exact justice as if he had used superior physical power to obtain the same result.

All governments have schools in order to educate the youth in the manual of arms, which has for its object the destruction of property and life and the subjugation of an inferior race. Yet none offer any advice or assistance to youth or old age, in poverty, which will enable them to fully utilize the opportunities to enjoy the blessings of life by becoming proficient in its virtues.

Few of the youth of our land could build the rudest kind of a dwelling, and but few of the maidens of our great country are familiar with all the details necessary to keep a home, as the civilization of this age should demand.

And on these great virtues no intellectual energy is bestowed in order that happy homes could be established and sustained, and if they were, there is no room on earth to sustain them, since the demands of the landlords are of such a character for its use, that life on the most fertile plains of America is but a mere existence under a tremendous strain to pay the rent.

Russia to-day boasting of her immense stores of gold in the vaults of the royal treasury, yet the inhabitants of that great country suffering every species of torture for the rudest necessities of life, and our own great country bordering upon the same condition—upwards of forty million of her population without a home and surrounded by conditions that it is next to impossible to obtain one.

Yet, with hundreds of car-loads of silver and gold lying idle in Uncle Sam's treasury, held as a sacred trust to sustain his dignity, he, too, like a monarchy, pays tribute to the most successful minds in the lines of traffic.

Who can deny these assertions, or who can fail to see the necessity of a higher and loftier object in life than the mere accumulation of wealth?

All objects that will bring us in touch with love for our fellow-man, a love, too, which will create conditions where we will willingly and graciously bestow all of our surplus strength in bettering the condition of every human being by making a home and a fireside, which he can call his own, possible, whereby the unison with the one he loves, children can be brought forth surrounded by the best conditions possible for their mental and physical unfoldment.

This earth must be the thought of a supreme mind made visible, the purpose of which must be to bring life through the various stages of its unfoldment, to conscious mind, and then, unfold that conscious mind on lines of truth and exact justice to purity itself, to God's presence, where clothed like Him in wisdom, power and majesty, it can command, and from the invisible elements of nature, produce a sphere like this.

We can only serve God acceptably by rendering all the assistance in our power in life propagation and unfoldment, and to do this, we must create conditions as a nation where a home is possible to all, regardless of birth or rank or wealth. We must open the avenues so that each and every one can nurse from the bosom of mother earth; can go to her store house, a fertile acre of land. Where energy is used, all of life's requirements can be produced and perfect, personal freedom be enjoyed.

These facts, we challenge the wisdom of this age to deny. How this can be effected, will constitute another chapter in our effort.

"The New Life." By Leroy Berrier. Eminently suggestive along the lines of "new thought." Excellent in tone and tendencies. Price, cloth, $1.

The Dawn of Immortal Life.

Funeral Services of Samuel Hoyt, of Minneapolis, Minn., May 30, 1905, by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond.

"In my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you and there shall be no more death." "We are born when we die, but we have died when we enter into human birth. Death is the greatest birth for it leads us unto God." A modern writer has said: "Death is the kindly messenger that opens the gateway of immortal life, setting the spirit free from the prison house of clay."

Into the house of the human life of our friend we have come to-day, dear friends, by the great invitation of nature and that angel miscalled "Death," to bear witness unto the transfiguration into the higher birth of our friend and brother, Samuel Hoyt. He had lived four score and ten years upon the earth. He was the last of the line of his family. Reared of New England parents in Canada, his life largely spent there, he nevertheless was of the good Puritan stock from which these liberties that you celebrate to-day (Decoration Day) have come. All those that remain of his household are his wife and three sons out of the seven born to him.

He has witnessed and looked with wonder in the measure of his lifetime, upon the many things that the century just past has revealed. He has seen the continent from east to west united by the great tie of the steam railways. The continents of Europe and America have been united by the lightning message-bearer, telegraphy. He has seen the steam horse sent forth to make the wilderness blossom as the rose; these vast prairies to yield of their abundance unto the laborer. He has seen that day by day and year by year the power of human intelligence has made the lightning man's message bearer; the steam horse and the electric horse his burden-bearer. He has seen that the rays of the sun can penetrate solid substances, revealing that which is within the human body, and those higher discoveries radium and wireless telegraphy.

What a privilege to live when creed and dogma are disappearing before the greater power of the perfect human religion!

What a privilege to live when the Congress of Religions brought to the Columbian Exposition representatives from all nations, and it was discovered that the religion of each had its foundation in the same principles: There is but one life and one religion; that is, Infinite Intelligence, called God, and the immortality of the spirit and the fraternity of souls.

Therefore it is not strange that in that great 19th century and this early part of the 20th century, the span has been made more and more complete that arches the stream of death; that the barriers have been removed between the two worlds through visions of the spirit and other manifestations.

It is not strange that with the breaking down of material barriers there should be added the knowledge of Psychic Research Societies, of England and America, who have taken up this theme and have declared through Dr. James and Dr. Hodgson and through the works of Frederic W. H. Myers, and through many and many a score of scientific minds, that there is evidence that can be demonstrated of the future life of man.

Religion in its highest sense has always demonstrated it, but the barrier of creeds and the many different paths by which people have sought to find that life, have been as stumbling-blocks in their way. It comes in a direct line that God is love, that we are all His children, and the immortal world is the great next step of life, and there ceases to be perplexity.

We know that our friend thought in passing from the human habitation that he was only taking the next step of life; that the body had worn out, like the branch upon the vine, like leaf upon the tree, which has gone to sleep having fulfilled its perfect work on earth, nor is it part of his thought nor is it that of his household, that this life is instantly transferred into perfection. The attributes and qualities of the mind that ripen here continue to grow and expand. No life is perfect; and any faults must be overcome hereafter if they are not overcome here and now. It was his thought that the greatest heritage that could be left to his children would be that the purest life, knowledge and intelligence that the mind contains here is at work in that larger, more extensive sphere of life.

As a pupil that has entered here in the primary degree, passes on to other degrees and finally graduates in that kind of learning to the larger school of human life, so the pupils of the human existence pass on with the experience, and the discipline that sorrow gives, to the added school of life above. How terrible it would be if all progress were stopped; if in the great divide of life people should never know anything more.

Even Rev. DeWitt Talmage, who never claimed to have a message from the spiritual world and did not believe anyone ever had, said: "The occupations in heaven were such as could be carried forward by human intelligence."

We do not know how he came into possession of this knowledge, since he does not claim to have had a message, but such as have the message know.

The astronomers will continue to work for added knowledge about the science of the planetary systems.

The chemist will continue to seek for added knowledge concerning the forces of life.

Those who pursue the subject of the higher thought will continue to inquire into the nature of the soul, and into the aspiration of the spirit, and when one enters into that new state and takes up that new thread of life of larger opportunities, the greater experience, the wider range of power must be there as witnessed here in its full measure before the decline of the physical powers.

He took up these elements, and thought and pondered upon them well and often, and believed that he could follow in the next step of life such pursuits as were adapted to him. And there is so much to do and need of it.

Tennyson said in his wonderful poem, "So many worlds, so much to do, such larger scope of human power." He also said in that beautiful poem dedicated to his friend Arthur Hallam, "In Memoriam":

"How pure in heart, how sound in head,
With what divine affections bold
Must be the man whose thought would hold
An hour's communion with the dead."

Longfellow, your own poet, who said,

"When the hours of day are numbered
And the voices of the night,
Wake the better soul that slumbered
To a holy calm delight,
Then the forms of the departed
Enter at my open door;
The beloved, the true hearted
Come to visit me once more."

John Wesley, who said, "But for this knowledge of the presence of our departed friends, our faith would seem unfounded," or Whitfield who bore forward the knowledge of immortal life by the visions of the ministering presence of those gone before. The testimony of all poets, and especially of the blind poet of Christianity, Milton, who said: "Myriads of spiritual beings walk the earth unseen both when we wake and when we sleep" are they not each speaking some added knowledge known unto the souls of men in all ages?

When Dr. Priestly discovered oxygen as an element of the atmosphere, it did not make the air any purer. People could not breathe any better, because he discovered oxygen, but they knew better the nature of the atmosphere and how to keep it pure. If your other eyes were opened and if you had a clearer vision, you could penetrate into this atmosphere of the spirit, and you could be made aware of the ministering presence of these invisible persons. You would know that they often turn off the danger and ward off the approach of shadow and darkness and shield from temptation.

What better protection could the young man have than that his spirit mother is caring and watching over him?

What stronger proof can you have than that those you love walk side by side, strong to assist in every great endeavor?

The next greater step of existence is that which comes when the body is cast aside, worn out, as something that by itself has become of no further use, and you take up the larger more perfect fields of activity in the spirit.

And so, at this hour, we come not into the house of mourning. We come not to those without comfort, but unto those who realize that the full measure of human life had been given to this friend; that he had lived the appointed time on earth, had gathered his harvest, and then he passed to the other side to the greater, purer life.

If the leaves did not fall, how could these springtime buds be all around you?

Had there been no harvest last year, how could the farmer be planting seed to-day?

The sowing is here. The ripening is for other, and greater and wider fields, and if the harvests that have been sown on earth shall be free from tares, and thistles, thorns and briars, how beautiful is the gathering for mind and spirit in that larger granary. It is a voice that you cannot afford to set aside. It is a voice that you cannot afford to pass.

When your children go to school, are examined and graduate, it is to fit them for their lives of usefulness. The school of daily life is hard to live. It is to fit the human lives for that larger usefulness of the life that is to come; for the greater school, that wonderful teaching, that grand graduation, and if these steps have been taken in the performance of duty, in the understanding of all that can be known, how much more will be the benefit in that larger University of Souls where the spirits are living on in their places and the great light of the fuller intelligence can pierce matter through and through. It is then that distance cannot limit thought. It is then that intelligence is greater than all the forces of nature. And so, when this intelligence is set free, when it is loosed into its native air, like a bird it soars, and seeks the wider range and source of its own power.

Let us then take benefit by this life with all its early struggles. Let us pass the faults and failings that are incident to human life, and let us understand that each individual works out his or her salvation with the knowledge of the truth which comes from within and above. Let us also remember that in the sweet glad springtime new power and new growth are here upon the earth, and it is necessary that the old form shall be cast aside and the great new life enter in.

We know his personal presence, and even the care you had for him in recent days and years will be missed. We know that ministering unto one who is dear is, in itself, a loss when it ceases, and we also know that those who are left in the household, and the near friends, will feel it strange not to see the familiar form, but there are others to welcome that life into the new existence.

You remember what the little girl said when she was asked, "How many are there of you," and she answered, "There are seven; five on earth, and two in heaven."

The larger home simply opens to receive another and another, and they are not lost, but take up the thread of life, and you are included.

Dear friends, even if you miss him for a while, there is one more hand to receive you when you pass on. One more in the great unknown life to welcome you into the fold.

And you of the household, the children, and childrens' children will one day tell them of his knowledge, of what he did in life, of what he understood, and that he, as the patriarch of the fireside forms the center for the family there as here. The scenes will remain of his early ventures and later successes, and his great grand-children will be taught to reverence his memory.

And one who sits here this day, who has walked the path of this life by his side, who feels more than words can tell at this hour, into whose heart we will not penetrate, but she knows she does not walk alone. He who was her companion here, side by side, for so many years cannot be taken from her. God does not divide lives that are united here. They are linked by the more holy ties of the spirit, when all the years have linked lives together, and the trials, and work, and joys have moulded them into one. How beautiful that in the larger habitation the family is united, is not lost in the great claims of the Universe.

Have you seen the morning dawn out here upon the prairies, and far in the distance, like the ocean have you seen the low grey shadow that rested there. Have you seen how dark it is just before the great dawn, and then have you seen the first ray as it shot upward, as it gradually spread and dispelled the mists of shadow, and at last the opening rays of the dawn; have you seen how soon the heralds of day come forth and the rays of light shoot towards the earth, awakening the soul of flowers, gilding the far hills, awakening the birds into song, until all the world is awake, and then at last the great glad anthem burst forth from myriads of throats, and the leaves on the trees clap their hands from joy because the day is born? Such was the dawn of immortal life unto him who is arisen.

ELWOOD, INDIANA.

Indications Point to Prosperous Work.

Mrs. L. V. Jackson, formerly of Michigan, came over from Camp Chesterfield and spoke for us at the Progressive Spiritualist hall, last Sunday night. Notwithstanding that the camp is in progress, other churches all over the city, and the hundreds of other places of entertainment, our hall was well filled, and all one had to do was to look in their faces and there read the lines of appreciation and enthusiasm that were depicted on each countenance. Sister Jackson clinched every argument produced. She remained over till Tuesday to get better acquainted with the people of Elwood, and requested that we meet her in our hall on Monday night. We gladly met her with ice cream and cake, and after a very sociable and enjoyable time she entertained us with a brief and pointed speech, followed by many convincing tests. She has agreed to attend our society for an indefinite time, which I hope will be for the best interests of Spiritualism generally.

There is no one that appreciates the genuine phenomena better than I, and our dear sister is continually giving out what she sees and hears, which are all very convincing, but she does not stop at that, but concludes with the philosophy, which is equally dear and precious to me. There is no use to argue the case, but where there is nothing but phenomena produced, it will only (create) or evolve phenomena seekers, and they are everlastingly seeking one more test. There are thousands and thousands of phenomena Spiritualists to-day that are hanging on to the bloody cross, and there are hundreds who are operating Punch and Judy shows at the expense of credulous phenomena seekers, thinking that they can perpetrate all kinds of damnableness, and at the last moment repent and be sorry (not for having practiced this deception, but for being caught) and then expect the blood of a persecuted and crucified being will save them. Oh! what ignorance!

Would I had the hand of some of our ready writers, I would spend my last breath at the desk writing and explaining to mankind the beauties and grandeur of our beautiful philosophy. Or had I the voice, eloquence and mental capacity of some of our speakers, I would mount the rostrum and would travel from pole to circumference.

It would make no difference as to what country or clime I was in when ready to pass into a higher life. It is so grand, and the more we know of it, the grander it becomes. I have but very little time to think of earthly affairs, really I am so interested and enthused with the beauties of Spiritualism that I am almost unable to attend to worldly affairs. I feel the forces of the spirit world working with me almost constantly. That is a great consolation to me. The words of my precious child that I heard on the street over two years ago are constantly with me. They were, "Papa, we will stand by you." I am quite sure this is all true because I so frequently feel their influences.

MIRACULOUSLY CURED.

The Same is Credited to a Relic of Saint Anne, But is Probably Due to the Influence of Catholic Spirits, as They Hover Around the Church to Promote Its Interests Wherever They Can.

What her friends believe was a miraculous cure of a case of paralysis was effected on Lucille Walsh, 6 years old, daughter of P. J. Walsh, 5219 Union avenue, at the novena held at the St. Anne Roman Catholic church at Kankakee, Ill.

Hearing of the powers of the relic of St. Anne at the church the little cripple's mother and aunt took her to the saint's shrine for prayers, along with more than 1,000 other pilgrims from Chicago. Father P. T. Gelinas of the Church of St. John the Baptist, Fiftieth and Peoria streets, was in charge of the pilgrimage.

The day marked the close of the annual novena held at St. Joseph's church in honor of Saint Anne. Saint Joseph's is the depository of a relic of the healing saint, which was sought by thousands of persons. At the public veneration of the relic at 9 o'clock in the morning more than 3,000 persons offered devotions.

The pilgrims came and went all during the day, some to seek healing for themselves, some to pray for the cure of relatives or friends. Bottles of water, which flows in a grotto near the shrine of St. Anne, were carried back to persons unable to come to the church.

The influence of Catholic spirits impregnates the Catholic church from beginning to end, aiding to perpetuate its superstitions. It has recorded as marvelous spirit manifestations as ever occurred in the ranks of Spiritualism. Curious, is it not?

KANKAKEE.

MEDIUMISTIC PHENOMENA.

Counterfeit Manifestations Which Delude the People Should Be Exposed.

In the Washington (D. C.) Post there was published a part of my letter on "The Element of Fraud in Mediumship," but the omission of certain sentences left my meaning on one or two vital points open to misconstruction.

It will be asked, "How can you prove that fraud or legerdemain is employed by any alleged medium, and if you cannot prove trickery, are you not bound to accept the medium's statement that the phenomena are those of discarnate spirits?" As a matter of fact, public seances are usually given under such conditions that it is practically impossible to prove fraud, however clearly it may be indicated. The light is regulated by the medium or his assistant, and there is an implied obligation on the part of the sitters that they are not to disturb the performance by applying any tests not desired by the medium. To strike a light or to grasp and hold the alleged spook would, of course, be out of order.

It is obvious, however, that the burden of proof rests on the man who claims spirit agency for the phenomena. There are at least three possible hypotheses: (a) Spirit agency; (b) clairvoyance or other psychic power, (c) fraud or legerdemain. The phenomena are worthless as proof of either spirit presence or occult power unless all possibility if trickery is eliminated. For example, a medium sits in front of a cabinet with his hands concealed by a curtain. Behind him is a table within easy reach of his right hand, and on the table a musical instrument. The audience hears music proceeding from the cabinet and afterward the instrument appears above the curtain. The medium solemnly affirms that it is the work of spirits. Why should any one, no matter how credulous, accept his statement when it is so well known that the same results are produced on the stage by so-called magicians, who are honest enough to inform the audience that the manifestations are due entirely to sleight-of-hand and illusion?

There are genuine mediumistic phenomena, and it is to be hoped that the Society for Psychical Research and other scientific experts will before long arrive at some definite conclusions with reference to this class of facts. In the meantime, without intending any reflection on honest mediums, anyone is rendering a public service who lets in a little light on the counterfeit manifestations by which people are deluded and imposed upon.

The amateur investigator will save himself much time and trouble if he will read a few reliable and unbiased works on the history and methods of Spiritualism before attempting to investigate the phenomena for himself.

W. D. MACKENZIE.

VICKSBURG CAMP, MICH.

The Season Opens Auspiciously at This Camp.

It is with pleasure I greet you to-day from Vicksburg camp, Vicksburg, Mich. Sunday, July 30, was the opening day. It was glorious. All nature smiled upon us. Her smiles were only outdone by those upon the faces of the people whose hearts were made glad by the reunion with their friends, and by the benediction which seemed to be heaped upon them by nature, and by the beautiful inspiration from the spirit land.

Thomas Grimshaw, of St. Louis, Mo., our able chairman, having just returned from a visit to his old home in England, rich with reminiscence, and with the cause of Truth uppermost in his heart, is filling us all with new zeal to labor for this cause that is pushing its way into all avenues of life, and is undoing the shackles of superstition and ignorance on every hand. His opening address was full of interest, pointing out as he did the rapid strides Spiritualism has made in its few years of recognized existence; the decay of prejudice; and the planting of truth and establishing of spiritual temples upon the former battle grounds, where eggs of questionable character and age was the ammunition used by its professed Christian (?) antagonists.

It was a large and intelligent audience that gathered in the early afternoon to listen to the words of truth from the inspired lips and brain of Dr. B. F. Austin, Rochester, N. Y. His listeners were not to be disappointed, as with breathless attention every word was followed to the close, and we were loth to think that he had finished, and that we must again step out of the spiritual realm to which we had traveled with him, into the more mundane plane of existence. But so be it.

In the evening he again addressed us. The morning and afternoon sessions were followed with messages from the Summerland, through the instrumentality of Geo. A. Letford, North Carolina, many receiving convincing evidence that their loved ones whom the world calls dead, have but entered a larger life, and that their homes are indeed where their hearts are.

The beautiful music rendered by Mrs. Flora Russell of Alliance, Ohio, with Miss Amy Pellett of Vicksburg, as her able accompanist, formed an important part of the services of the day. Her sweet songs at times seemed almost to draw aside the veil between the two worlds, and enable us to look once more into the faces of the dear ones gone before.

Dr. Austin and Mr. Grimshaw are the speakers for the week, and we look forward in anticipation of the treat that is in store for us. Mr. Letford will also be present and follow the lectures with messages. The morning conference is a helpful and interesting feature of the camp. Harmony and good will reigns on every hand.

But what of the one at the helm? Who is responsible for all this? This report would not be complete did I not mention the little woman whose hand and brain and heart and soul is centered in this work; laboring from early morning till late at night, that all the wants of her people may be attended to. She seems to be omnipresent. Long may the hand of the angel world rest upon Miss Jeannette Fraser of Vicksburg, who has so nobly unfurled the banner of Spiritualism in her midst, and established its respect.

DEAFNESS AND CATARRH CURED

BY NO METHOD UNTIL "ACTINA" WAS DISCOVERED.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

To Camp Correspondents:—Notices of camp-meetings should reach this office not later than Friday afternoon to secure insertion in the next issue of The Progressive Thinker.

Dr. N. F. Ravlin has been engaged by the First Spiritual Church of Portland, Oregon, as pastor for the, balance of the year, till January 1, 1906, and has already entered upon his labors. Residence, 260½ Seventh street.

Annie J. Haight of Naponee, Ont., wants to correspond with some one who can help the Spiritualists there to organize a society.

Laura B. Payne, whose poetry and articles in The Progressive Thinker, are read with interest, is now at Springfield, Mo., and can be addressed there for engagements at 651 South Grant street.

Rev. R. Heber Newton says: "The middle ages also believed that saints received the imprint of the wounds of Jesus on their hands and feet—a beautiful superstition, said our scientists. Now medical scrutiny confesses that the stigmata are facts, though exceptional facts, to be explained naturally, of course, as every other marvel is to be explained. Clairvoyance was nothing but a will-o'-the-wisp, but it also is now a confessed power of certain organizations. Mollie Fancher, over in Brooklyn, has proved stronger than the incredulity of our savants. Read that charming picture of Joan of Arc by Mark Twain, and you will admit with him that this peasant girl, with her powers of clairaudience, hearing her mystic voices, is a fact which defies explanation by our knowledge up to date."

Wm. Fitch Ruffle is now on a visit to England.

Miss E. A. Hodge writes from Susquehanna, Pa.: "Mr. Williams says The Progressive Thinker is the best paper he reads. We think we will go without a square meal if we have to, rather than do without it. The paper seems to answer our needs in every way."

The Peoria (Ill.) friends have been holding a series of parlor meetings, for several weeks past, conducted by Mr. H. M. French, which have given general satisfaction. And they wish to heartily recommend him as an honest gentleman and a good test medium and lecturer.

A corporation has been organized in this city under the name of "The Searchers Publishing Co." "I, James A. Rose, secretary of the state of Illinois, by virtue of the power vested in and the duties imposed upon me by law, do hereby authorize, empower and license Max Gentzke, G. Schaff, Otto Georgi, P. Skupniewicz, Frank J. Kyas and Fritz Obrock, the persons whose names are signed to the before mentioned statement, as commissioners to open books for subscription to the capital stock of 'The Searchers Publishing Company,' such being the name of the proposed corporation, as contained in the statement, at such times and places as the said commissioners may determine."

D. G. Hill writes: "The increasing interest in the truth of Spiritualism is manifested by the increasing attendance at the Sunday evening meetings of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society by an earnest and intelligent class of people, anxious to find something tangible on which to base their hopes of the hereafter. On Sunday evening, July 30, our speaker, Mrs. J. L. Fravel, delivered a most pleasing and instructive address, and her acquaintances are much pleased at the advancement she is making as she opens the door for the entrance of her spirit instructors. The messages were given by Mrs. Nellie Kusserow and Mr. H. M. French of Peoria, Ill.; both of these mediums are so capable and well known that no words of mine can add anything in praise of their work. O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina street, between Washington Blvd and Park avenue. The coolest hall in the city. Open door. All welcome."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Mrs. May A. Price of Washington, D. C., is now at Lily Dale, enjoying the blessings of the camp and doing her own part of the work. She holds circles at the home of P. L. O. A. Keeler. She will be glad to arrange with other societies for work during the fall and winter as speaker and message bearer from the spirit world, and class work. Address her at Lily Dale, N. Y.

L. E. Johnson, secretary, writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "The Grand Rapids Spiritual Society has not been holding meetings for a month, but next Sunday we expect to have Virginia Barrett with us, and will hold out-door meetings on the lot we purchased to build a temple on, and hope much good will be done while she is with us. The Ladies' Aid are earnestly working for the temple fund, having put nearly $500 in the fund. Now harmony and good will prevail and our numbers are increasing."

Rev. G. C. Love writes: "The First Spiritual Religious Association of Clackamas county, Oregon, is holding one of the best and most beneficial camp-meetings ever held on its grounds. The board of officers in fixing dates for opening and closing the camp arranged to make the meeting one week longer than usual, but the attendance has been so great and lectures and tests so good the association by unanimous expression extended the date of closing one week beyond the date set by the board, and instead of closing July 30, the meeting will end on Sunday, August 6. The attendance is increasing day by day and greater enthusiasm is expected as the days go by. For lecturers, the association has had Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., Harry J. Moore, Rev. G. C. Love, and others are expected before the meeting ends. Mediumship has been represented by Mrs. Eva McCoy, Mrs. Ladd-Finnican and others, and still they come, mediums and speakers from all directions until New Era has been blessed by workers as perhaps it never has been before. With kindly spirits hovering over us, and truth to guide us, we can truly say 'It is good to be here.'"

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "On Sunday, July 30, another large audience attended the services of the Rising Sun Mission, who were more than repaid for their visit in listening to the spiritual truths which were given out by Sister Schumacher, pastor of the Church of the Students of Nature. Her well delivered lecture on Spiritualism from a bible standpoint, and on the duties of Spiritualists, was commended by all present. Her remarks were soul stirring and a number of good thoughts were carried home by all who attended. After the excellent singing by our choir, a number of spirit messages were given by Sister Weaver, Sister Thompson and Brother Thompson, all of which were recognized. Quite a few skeptics were among the number, who received communications, and it no doubt, will be the means of bringing them into our ranks. We cordially invite all to attend our services which are held Sunday evening at 22 Jackson Place, between Jackson Blvd and Van Buren street, west of Hoyne avenue. Our speaker for August 13 will be Dr. J. H. Randall, Our next social and lawn party will be held Saturday, August 12, at Sister Trafton's, 1245 Wilcox avenue. All welcome."

Mary A. Ingalls writes: "Too much praise cannot be given Nora Batchelor for her able and fearless article in No. 818 of The Progressive Thinker, especially the part that relates to the education of the young in our public schools, on the subject that is of such vital importance to them. Surely she was inspired by the angel world to write it. For the last eight years I have thought much upon this subject, and I have talked with people upon the importance of teaching right living in the public schools. It is alarming the way our educational departments are overtaxing the mental capacities of the pupils. Some are graduating at the tender age of 15 years. In many cases their nerves are ruined, and their eyesight impaired by the time their school days are over. If the body could be educated along with the mind, and at a more moderate pace, it would be better for our children. Some way should be devised for compulsory education of the parents, if we would have an early improvement of the race. Only through a higher education can men know how to properly treat their wives during the period of gestation. If this is a work for Spiritualists to do, as Nora Batchelor says, then it should be taught in their schools. Let the Morris Pratt Institute take the lead and others will follow."

J. I. Mettler writes: "You are on the right track and are making satisfactory progress in driving the fraudulent element out of the Spiritualist ranks, which is, or ought to be, the desire of every Spiritualist."

Instead of the "woman in black," it is now the "man in white." Residents of Water street who sleep in hammocks these warm nights claim the pale spectre appears in the wee sma' hours of morning, taking giant strides up and down the street with head bowed as if in deep thought. The ghost appears barefooted and in snow white tights. Some of the older inhabitants are inclined to believe that the ghost is that of Blackhawk, the old Indian chief, who has returned from the happy hunting ground to observe what progress Warren has made since he left for brighter climes.—Freeport (Ill.) Bulletin.

C. M. Taylor, M. D., writes: "The Sunday evening meetings lately started by Brothers Ellis and Peters are well attended. Brother Peters in his lecture gives a most convincing proof of the immortality of the soul and after the lecture we had the pleasure of witnessing the work of Mr. Henry Ellis and his guides operating the telegraphic instrument. It clicks off one message after the other without the medium's hand touching the instrument. Here you can see the unseen power working in the bright light, and all the messages were recognized by those receiving them. This must be seen in order to be appreciated. Investigators and all others should pay a visit to these mediums in order to know the truth. They are located at 3250 Wabash avenue."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

HELEN STUART RICHINGS, who has been in the far Northwest for several years, is returning to the lecture platform, and desires to correspond with societies wishing the services of an inspirational lecturer, psychometrist and dramatic artist. Terms most reasonable, especially for long engagements. Address P. O. Box 115, Seattle, Wash.

Dr. Fisk of Dubuque, Iowa, was in the city last week attending to his professional business. He heard Mr. Bryan lecture at Clinton. He pronounced it "eloquent," but of little interest from a Spiritual standpoint. The Doctor is always prominent in all reformatory work, his wife being an excellent medium.

Leonora Romaldo, the wife of a farm hand at Villacienso, near Burgos, Spain, has awakened from a trance which has lasted thirty-one years. The case has been under the close observation of medical experts during the whole of that time, and by their instructions liquid food was regularly administered by a tube placed in the mouth of the sleeping woman. At times it was believed that the woman was waking, and various means were employed to restore her to consciousness, but they failed. She has now regained her senses, but cannot be persuaded that she has slept for years. A curious feature of the case is that she remembers the incidents of her girlhood up to the time that she fell into the trance. Her body is fairly well nourished, but her hair has turned white. On being shown a mirror the woman shrieked with horror and declared that the image it reflected was not her own.

G. Chafee writes: "I wish every person of mature age would read your paper one year. My oldest sister's youngest daughter has become a Spiritualist by reading your paper and she is happy."

S. H. Keech writes from Kansas City, Kans.: "The First Spiritualist Church held its regular services at Warwick Hall last Sunday evening, July 30, conducted by Mrs. Edward Connelly, one of our most influential speakers and ardent workers in the cause, assisted by Mrs. Alice Baker of Cleveland, Ohio. Much interest is being aroused in the cause among many of our best and leading citizens, and with the prospects of the coming fall and winter we hope to build up prosperous societies all over our city. If our mediums would work more harmoniously together it would be much better. There seems to be too much discord between them. Dr. Lucas, of the East, a great worker and eloquent speaker, spent a few days in our city last month, and delivered one of his masterly lectures on the evening of July 18, to a large audience. Subject, Man a Creature, and the Way Out; a Master and the Way In. All present were highly pleased with the masterly way he handled the subject. The proceeds of his lecture was given to Mrs. Ella Baldwin's School of Psychic Science of Chelcy Place. Mrs. Baldwin is one of our most ambitious and ardent workers, and is doing much to build up the cause of Spiritualism in Kansas City, Kansas."

Torrington, Conn.—The body of their daughter apparently lifeless and with the assurance of the attending physician that she had died, Mr. and Mrs. Sampson Blake, the parents of Miss Flossie Blake, set about to prepare for the burial of their only child. Three hours later, as the undertaker was about to put the girl into a shroud, signs of life became apparent and the physician was hastily summoned. Within an hour the girl was conscious and spoke to those gathered about her. Though still very feeble, the results of a long continued illness, hopes are entertained for her recovery. The parents are certain that their prayers restored her to life.

On the fourth day after moving into what is known as the Applegate property on East Maple street, Jeffersonville, Ind., Mrs. Belle Raymond and family bundled their belongings and sought another home, because they say they heard spooks. Asked about her sudden determination to move, Mrs. Raymond said she could not stay in a place that was haunted. The first night they were in the house they heard strange noises and were prevented from sleeping. The same thing occurred the next and following nights, and that was all the family could stand. They left Monday. George Cisco and family, who occupied the house several months ago, left because they heard and saw strange things, they said. The house was built by the father of George Applegate, the Louisville teamster, and both of his parents and two brothers died there. Aaron Applegate was fatally injured while a guard at the Prison South by Chub Carroll, a convict, striking him on the back of the head. A short time ago, John Applegate, a brother died there. The ghost of the brother is said to haunt the place.

A Boston scientist says that hypnotism can develop only natural instincts and that the best hypnotist in the world cannot make a really moral person do wrong. From experiments he has made he believes that 75 per cent of the human race, if unrestricted by family pride and other like considerations, would steal.

Mrs. O. A. Bishop, a most excellent trance, test and business medium, is now located in her own beautiful home, No. 3721 Forest avenue, where she can be consulted daily, Sundays excepted.

Mrs. Nettie Beals writes from Petosky, Mich.: "The many readers of The Progressive Thinker will be pleased to hear of the good work that is being pushed along at Snowflake camp, the only Spiritualist camp ground in Northern Michigan. July 31 Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague greeted us with words of love and cheer. They are with us this week also. A. A. Finney, the well-trumpet medium, will be with us during camp, holding seances daily. Mrs. Nettie Beals and others helping with the good work and other mediums coming daily. Mrs. Cora Morrill will be with us next week. People wishing summer outings can find no more beautiful spot or beneficial climate. It is situated on one of the lovely lakes with which the northern country abounds. Lots are being leased, and cottages erected. Brother and Sister Sprague chose their lot, and expect to have their cottage next summer. Snowflake camp grounds near Central Lake and Belaire, on P. M. railroad.

Mrs. E. J. Jaquet writes from 910 S. Main street, Galena, Kansas: "This finds me at Sister Sara C. Scovell's, and I am being most cordially and royally entertained. My good little sister, Virginia Bryan was suddenly called to the sick bed of a loved father and daughter on the evening of the 24th of July, just as Camp Winfield closed its session. Our stay in Winfield was most enjoyable, and we were well treated by all. I regret very much my sister having to leave, but as she expects to join me at her earliest convenience, I will not mourn, but quietly rest with our good Sister and Brother Scovell. Mrs. Kayner wound up the camp exercises with her fire test, which was given to a large and very appreciative audience. Mrs. Bryan and myself are receiving letters from far and near, wanting our services and just as soon as Mrs. Bryan joins me we will start once more with banners unfurled and sing with the multitude of honest and earnest seekers, Hold the fort for we are coming; see our signal wave. Sister Scovell sends greetings with me to all friends in our home city."

Mrs. Virginia Bryan writes from Payne, Ohio: "Please permit me to say to your readers and my friends, that I have been called from my labor to the sick bed of my father who is critically ill from paralysis, and daughter just recovering from typhoid fever. How long I must remain with them I cannot tell, but hope to be able for duty soon."

A husky Iowa farmer now living near Letts, is the hero of John Hay's poem "Little Breeches." His name is Scoy, and he was about four years old when he became "embalmed in poesy." Scoy's father was driving a lively team near New Virginia, Ia., one day, and when he got out of the wagon for a minute the team dashed away, with the boy in the wagon. The horses went over ditches, fences and brush-piles. Finally the wagon was overturned and the little fellow was thrown head first into a drove of sheep. The father and friends, running frantically in an effort to catch the runaways, saw the accident to the boy. The father rushed to the spot, fearing to find the little fellow dead, but on the approach of his father the boy sat up and said, "Dad, give me a chaw of terbacker." That is the way Laren Talbott of Sioux City relates the incident which Hay improved into a rebuke to the angels for "loafing around the throne" instead of attending to rescue work.—Truth Seeker.

Mrs. Frances A. Koehler and Miss Grace Koehler are in Lily Dale, N. Y., where they will spend the season, after which they will visit relatives in western New York.

Mrs. S. E. Mackley writes from Ferndale, Cal.: "I am with you heart and soul in your warfare against fakes in mediumship. I cannot see how any one can pretend to find excuses for a self-confessed impostor."

Mrs. Garber writes from Des Moines, Iowa: "Dr. J. S. Allison of Kirksville, Mo., has lectured for the Psychic Research Society for the past two Sundays. He was educated for the ministry, but soon found himself out of line with orthodoxy, and severed his connection with the church, starting out on independent lines in keeping with his new attitude towards religion and scientific thought. Too much cannot be said in praise of him. He is an able inspirational speaker, being clairvoyant and clairaudient. He has a fine delivery and a charming personality. His subject for Sunday evening was 'The Origin of the Devil and His Destruction.' He handled it well, and should be heard to be appreciated. I think he should be in the lecture field as a Spiritualist missionary. We need just such men as he is, as he has a very commanding and convincing way of making people believe all he says. Mrs. De Wolf-Kiser has gone to Clinton Camp for the season, also Mrs. Martha B. Johnson, a worker for our cause, and Max Hoffmann. There have been no definite arrangements made as yet for the opening of our society for the fall and winter season."

Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, affectionately remembered in Australia, gave her platform in Chicago, U. S. A., one evening last March to Miss Elizabeth Harlow, when she lectured on "Woman and Her Future." It is so excellent an address that it is not surprising to read it was given "under the generous auspices of Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, vice-president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association," as she would entirely endorse its ennobling sentiments.—Harbinger of Light, Australia.

J. H. Collins writes from Bardwell, Ky.: "Having had years of experience as public speaker in the ministry of the Methodist church, I have entered the field of Spiritualism and hang up my slate for calls to lecture. I will refer to Rev. B. F. Austin or Rev. E. W. Sprague. Address me at Indianapolis, Ind., or Bardwell, Ky."

Dr. L. H. Freedman, the Australian healer and physician, writes: "I desire to inform my friends and readers of The Progressive Thinker that this is the first time I have been in Chicago throughout a summer in seven years. I am satisfied that Chicago is the coolest place for a spiritual camp in all the states, and I am glad to say that my time is well taken up, and patients are doing well. I am in my old quarters, 3036 Indiana avenue. I may run over for two or three days to see how the friends are at Vicksburg camp this week."

Wm. Richmond writes: "Here we are at Maple Dell camp, Ohio. After leaving Corry, we went to Cuba, N. Y., where Mrs. Richmond spoke one Sunday in a little woody dell. From there we went to Lily Dale (Cassadaga) where she lectured three times, including Sunday, and gave a series of class lessons. We found Lily Dale much improved in some directions, although we missed many of the old-time faces, most of them having passed on to the higher life. We had the pleasure of meeting Lyman C. Howe and A. B. French while we were there. From there we went to Lake Brady, where Mrs. Richmond spoke last Sunday. Although the day was rainy and disagreeable there was a very large attendance at the meeting. From there we came here last Monday. Mrs. Richmond speaks Sunday; then we leave for Onset."

THE CARE-FREE LAND.

I dreamt I dwelt in a beautiful land
Where there rested no shadow of care,
Where no man was rich, no man was poor
But all had enough and to spare,
Where the tongue never uttered a word of guile
Nor winked there the eye of deceit,
But every one trusted his fellow men
With a confidence true and complete.
We often sing of that beautiful land
As a land that is far away,
But why not make it near at hand
And to live in every day?

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, August 13, 1905, S. E. 58: "Power."

Gem of Thought:—

"Self-reverence, self-knowledge and self-control, these three alone, lead to sovereign power."

WAKE UP! WAKE UP!

That Is What Is Asked of Minnesota Spiritualists.

As the time is rapidly approaching when the National Convention of Spiritualists will be held, I thought it would be well to inform you of the arrangements made for the entertainment of the delegates and friends who will be here.

The First Unitarian Church has been secured to hold the sessions of the convention. It is centrally located and is one of the prettiest churches in the city. The Zumbachs, the Ladies' Quartette of Minneapolis and other local talent have been secured to furnish the music.

The official headquarters will be at the Nicollet Hotel, one of the best in the city, where rooms can be engaged at the rate of $1 per day, each person, European plan.

It is greatly to be desired that the state of Minnesota be strongly represented at the National Convention, and to that end it is necessary for every local society to have a representative at the state convention held in Minneapolis, Sept. 7, 8, 9 and 10. It is a great honor to have Minneapolis chosen for the 13th annual convention of the National Spiritualists Association of the United States and the Dominion of Canada, and we hope that every society will show its appreciation by sending a delegate to the state convention.

It is the heartfelt wish and desire of the officers of the Minnesota S. S. A. that Minnesota shall have the privilege and honor of being the first state to thrown open the doors of the National Convention free to the public, as this organization was and is intended to do missionary work; and one way to do that work is to have the sessions free to all, as other religious bodies do. To do this it is necessary to raise the sum of $300 above hall rent and other incidental expenses. To help in this work the ladies of the different auxiliaries organized under the name of the Ladies' Entertainment Committee for the National S. S., and will serve dinners and suppers in the commodious dining room of the church. Another way will be badges. Are you interested in the success of the convention? If so send $1 to either J. S. Maxwell, president, or C. P. Follett, secretary of the Minnesota S. S. A., 1644 Hennepin avenue, for a badge, and we trust that every Spiritualist in the state will buy one as a souvenir of the 13th annual convention of the N. S. A.

I want to urge upon all the necessity of making an individual, as well as a united effort to have the National convention a grand success. It rests with each and every Spiritualist in the state to make it so. Wake up and prove to the world that you appreciate the opportunity that has been given to show what Minnesoteans can do. Make the delegates, speakers, mediums and friends, who come here from all parts of the United States and Canada, at their own expense, feel that they have been so welcome and appreciated that the remembrance of the 13th annual convention of the N. S. A. will always remain more than a red letter day.

J. S. MAXWELL.

Onset Camp Notes.

Another great week has passed and Onset has added another page to its history of success. Large crowds have arrived during the week, and at present there are more people here than at any time last year.

We have had some grand meetings this week, and the class work has been a special feature. Mr. W. J. Colville, who is making his farewell to America, has been very interesting and he has had large audiences at all his meetings. He spoke Sunday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, and his classes every morning.

Tuesday and Friday the children's lyceum holds meetings at the Arcade, in the afternoon, and Mrs. Allyn is having big success and has a large school. She is the right woman in the right place and ought to be the national lyceum organizer. Something ought to be done for the children, and she could do it. This is a suggestion.

Saturday is to be Massachusetts State Association Day, and a large program has been prepared. The secretary will send a report of the meeting later.

If you like this paper, why not subscribe for it and get your friends to do so also? You can do so at the bookstore, where you can get a single copy. Give us a call. H—.

ONLY ANOTHER FALSIFIER.

Pretending to Expose Spiritualism and Its Teachings.

To the Editor:—During the past few days there has been in Daytona a self-styled exposer and denouncer of Spiritualism, styling himself, "N. G. Buckley, D. D., Author and Lecturer."

His attempted expose consisted of a series of defamatory remarks and misstatements coupled with an exhibition of table moving, based on his personal opinion of its cause and effect, etc.

Individually I consider his attempted expose an insult to intelligence, and I cannot but feel my relation to the old saw that says a fool and his money are soon parted.

The learned D. D., claims Chicago as his home, and states that he has charge of a church in that community. To give the D. D. his due, I must say he is an entertainer, inasmuch as he contrives to amuse his audience.

He dubs himself a missionary in the cause of Christ, and in generalizing respecting Spiritualism sets forth the following as indisputable fact:

"Spiritualism teaches the doctrine of free love.

"It denies the existence of a God.

"Spiritualists are Atheists and are opposed to Sunday schools.

"One who poses as a medium is a liar and a fraud.

"There is that embodied in the faith that influences its exponents to offer eloquent prayers to his Satanic Majesty."

In making these and many similar statements he clinches them, or endeavors to, with the statement that there is not one elevating principle in Spiritualism.

He styles himself the only exposer of Spiritualism producing and explaining the phenomena practiced by Spiritualists, fakirs, and mediums.

He says he has challenged Spiritualists to meet him in public debate, but they invariably refused.

New Era Camp, Oregon.

The camp at New Era, Oregon, is now well under way, with attendance large, and much interest manifested on the part of all visitors. President Love is the right man in the right place, and is never so happy as when he is trying to make some home-sick stranger feel at ease in beautiful New Era. Mrs. Love is an able helpmeet to her husband, and her hands are never weary in well-doing.

Visitors have been with us from all parts of the nation—far-away Maine, the Lone Star State of Texas, Kansas, Missouri, and almost all of the states of the Union have sent their sons and daughters to New Era. No wonder they come here. The camp is a bower of beauty, and its very atmosphere is peace. Harmony prevails at all times, and every one is happy.

Rev. Harry J. Moore has been at his best in his excellent lectures and has risen to great heights in his splendid interpretation of doctrines Spiritualistic. President Love's addresses have also been excellent, always to the point, and for the best good of the cause.

Mrs. Dr. Espanto of St. Louis, has given us some excellent addresses, replete with earnest, logical thought, betokening a deep as well as an inspirational speaker. Her good husband, Dr. Espanto, the gifted Indian medium, is one of the best message bearers the writer has ever known, for the simple reason that the Doctor is honest, and his work perfectly genuine.

These words also apply to Mrs. Ladd-Finnican of Portland, Ore., and Mrs. Eva McCoy of Marshalltown, Iowa. A camp cannot fail to be successful when it presents genuine phenomena as forerunners of the lectures given by the various speakers upon the rostrum. These two ladies are favorites with all who meet them.

So great is the interest in the work of the camp that its management has extended its session one week, closing now August 6, instead of July 30. All Oregonians should patronize New Era camp. It is a spiritual place, as well as one of the most restful and inspiring spots on the face of the earth.

Come to New Era, oh, ye Spiritualists, and have a good time.

EVANGEL.

CLINTON CAMP, IOWA.

Notes of the Camp-meeting at Mt. Pleasant Park.

The first week of the Clinton camp-meeting is nearing its close, and it is with pardonable pride that the officers and members of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualists Association review the events of the week and estimate the results of the work done.

Mt. Pleasant Park was never so beautiful. Every year sees some improvement in the grounds and cottages, and the people who come here from other places are delighted with the beauty and restfulness of this ideal camp-ground.

The talent secured for the program is exceptionally fine. The hotel, tents and cottages are already thronged with interested visitors, and the camp promises to be the best in the history of the association.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie has just gone from us, after giving four lectures that greatly pleased all who heard them.

Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing arrived today (Aug. 4) to fill an engagement for three lectures and an "Ichabod seance." The repeated engagement of Mrs. Twing by the association evidences her popularity with us.

Mrs. J. A. Murtha is our message medium for two weeks, and is doing excellent work.

Next Sunday morning President Peck will lecture on the subject, "Buddha and Christ, the Great Mediums," a theme suggested by Col. Bryan's lecture last Sunday on "The Prince of Peace." We always expect a treat when our good president speaks.

Among the prominent mediums on the grounds may be noted Mrs. De-Wolf-Kiser, well and favorably known throughout the west as a slate-writing medium; W. W. Aber and Dr. Rothermel, materializing mediums; Doctors Eskelson, Fred L. Mehrtens, Mrs. Crawford-Richards and Mrs. Gunnison, magnetic and spiritual healers. Other good mediums are here, whose names your correspondent has yet to learn.

The following extract from the report of last Sunday's meeting, given by the Clinton Herald, the foremost local newspaper of this city, will be of interest to many readers. The management of the Clinton camp-meeting is to be congratulated on the success which attended the meeting on "Bryan Day":

President Peck Introduces Bryan.

"The noted Nebraskan was introduced by President W. F. Peck of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Association. Mr. Peck is a finished orator, and his introduction was very eloquent. The president of the Spiritualists' society anticipated, with the audience, he said, a great intellectual feast in the address of Mr. Bryan; and that neither the chairman of the meeting, nor the members of the vast audience, were disappointed is a foregone conclusion.

"It was a magnificent audience that heard Bryan Sunday. The great amphitheatre, which seats over 1,500 people, was simply jammed and many, unable to obtain seats, stood out on the hillside and listened to the address.

"Mr. Bryan spoke of a visit he once enjoyed with Tolstoi, who defines religion as the relation man fixes between himself and his God. The speaker remarked that he finds many who think they can outgrow religion, which is a good enough thing for the ignorant, to be put aside, however, when a certain point in intellectual development is attained. He had he said passed through a period of skepticism during his college days, as he supposed every man has. And he told of the manner in which he outgrew his doubts, and learned to assume that back of creatures is a Creator; back of designs a Designer. Mr. Bryan said he is not worried about the theories of creation provided they do not attack the doctrine 'In the beginning God created the world.'

"Regarding the performance of miracles the speaker said that God, who could make the world, can do anything He wants with it. No one can declare He cannot perform miracles without denying to Him the power of omnipotence."

If every week of the camp proves to be as satisfactory as this first week has been the association may write itself "Proud" on Aug. 27, when camp closes.

HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA CAN BE CURED.

THE KOLA PLANT.

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific. Mr. W. H. Kelly, 317 45th St., Newport News, Va., writes: Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma, by Himalya after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th: had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Dr. B. L. Chaves, 1128 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya as it cured me of Hay-fever and Asthma and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to the Kola Importing Co., 1102 Broadway, New York.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

John K. Visscher: Q. An orthodox minister of this city—Grand Rapids—says that every postoffice and bank in Japan are run by Christians, and that we are an independent nation is entirely owing to Christianity. Is this true?

A. There is as much truth in the statment that the Japanese banks and postoffices are run by Christians as that these institution in the United States are conducted by Buddhists. It is difficult to controvert an assertion like this, otherwise than by branding it with Ingersoll's designation, "an orthodox lie."

As for this country owing its freedom to Christianity, had puritanic Christianity had its way, had it not been for the efforts of Paine, Jefferson and others, and perhaps the influence of the liberty movement in France, this country would have been a theocracy, the most tyrannous and blighting form of government, the minister of the gospel riding with whip and spur, and no one daring to resist.

S. P. Clayton and others: The inquiry is for an explanation of the answer to Henry Voorhees in The Progressive Thinker, No. 817: Q. Must we not conclude that although we exist as spirits in the future, such existence has an end, in accordance with the laws of life exhibited here, in the life and death of living beings? If all living things existed always, the universe could not hold all entities for eternity.

The passage in the answer which has called forth inquiries is as follows:

Out of the seething cauldron of existence, there constantly arise the perfected spirits, while the yet imperfect sink back to be again and again assimilated; in each new form gaining strength and approaching the ideal type comparatively of all living beings only a minor part, an excessively small part, exist after the death of their physical bodies. There is no crowding in the spirit spheres, or prospect of the population becoming so.

No answer given during the many years since this department was introduced has called forth so many letters for further light, or in criticism.

As the answers are mostly given me by an intelligence independent of myself, it is difficult to take up such questions, after they have been disposed of. For myself unaided it is quite impossible. I know nothing—absolutely nothing—of spirit life or the spirit world, except what these spirit intelligences have given me. I have to interpret these communications just as others do, unless fortunately there is a recurrence of the same influence.

It is because of the deep interest expressed, that I break the rule that a question once answered in this department should not again be considered.

The answer which is a condensation of the philosophy expressed in the "Arcana of Spiritualism," is unsatisfactory because of its brevity. Perhaps its most complete statement is made in "Studies in Psychic Science," page 207, and in "Philosophy of Spirit." This passage from the latter:

"A spirit is not necessarily immortal, but can become gradually extinguished, like a lamp burning for an indefinite time and then going out. Such is the condition of the lowest races of mankind. They exist after death, but with them there is no progress, no desire for the immortal state, and slowly atom by atom they are absorbed into the universal spiritual substance as the spirit of the animal is immediately after death."

Again: "If it be asked at what age the spirit of man retains its identity (after the death of the body), it may be said in reply that no certain date can be given for that varies with the development of the parents."

Again quoting from Psychic Science: "We may regard the physical body as the scaffolding, and when it fails—as at death—the incomplete arch of intelligence—the spirit—built thereon, falls with it; but this arch becomes more and more perfect until in man it is perfected; and when the physical platform by which it has been constructed fails at death, the spiritual arch remains."

The phrase, "an exceedingly small part exist after death," must be taken comparatively. Civilized man as a whole has passed beyond the line of mortality. This portion, compared with the hosts of sentient beings which are below, is a small fraction. Yet it contains the sublimated essence of all lower forms.

Had the critics given closer attention they would not have rushed to the conclusion that only a small number of human beings were immortal, for the passage refers to all living beings from the lowest to man. In this light, is it not true that an excessively small part exist after death" of the physical body?

As this theory, a continuation of evolution—almost exclusively rests on the statments of spirits, it will be seen that it does not admit of argument.

The following propositions may be taken from these books, fundamental and forming an outline of the science of spirit, and spiritual things:

The evolution or organic forms is paralleled by the spiritual. The vast series from the protoplasmic cell to man has for its goal the individualization, and full expression of the cosmic mind, the spiritual in nature.

Step by step through lower forms it ascends and man—perfected—is its last physical term. Through man this spiritual individuality has received such completness, that it no longer depends for its expression on the physical body, but has a form of matter designated as substance, ethereal elements, which by its harmonious adjustment remains after the physical body has fallen away.

It follows as a corollary that: There must be a dividing line below which the imperfect spirit being perishes with the form through which it is expressed.

This line may not be sharply defined, and on the other side may be spiritual beings lingering for an indefinite period—to at last meet the "second death."

It has been said by a writer with mind illuminated: "Supposing the laws governing our spiritual natures operate similarly to those governing our physical, we must naturally infer that the spiritual forms of all parts of life, may be by those laws interpreted. If the spirit of an animal has not intelligence to obey and the spirit of man wilfully disobeys, will not the law eventually destroy such spirits? The idea that all ignorant and vile spirits, without aspirations for anything that is good, who glory in wickedness and persist in the violation of law, will become perfected, I regard as false, for such must go on in a career which ends in annihilation."

This writer is correct in results, but errs in the cause he assigns for continuous individuality of spiritual beings. He places it on moral grounds, making it dependent on moral aspirations, character and desires, whereas it is dependent on development.

The human being, after a certain stage of mental growth, receives a charter to eternal life which cannot be annulled, bearing with it all its infinite consequences and responsibilities.

Yet it may be observed that such beastly desires and uncontrolled passions may indicate a peryerted organization, a deterioration and degradation, showing that the tide line of spiritual continuity has not been reached.

I confess that standing on the coast of this infinite reach of spiritual being, I shrink in awe at its sublimity, and feel that any attempt at presentation by words, of its grand philosophy, must be scarcely more than failure.

WOMEN SHOULD VOTE.

Advance of Women Still Attracting Much Attention.

Mrs. Mary Costello, president of the Advisory Board of the Ladies' Benevolent Association, voices her opinion as follows:

"The subject of 'New Womanhood' has been engaging more of the attention of the Christian world the past half century than at any period of the world's history. In contrasting the position of the American woman of the twentieth century with her position some fifty years ago, we are forced to acknowledge that a wonderful process of evolution has been going on, which, however, has in no sense partaken of the nature of a revolution, but rather has been the result of the changing industrial, social and economical industries of the country.

"When the subjective and the dependent position of women at that period is understood, the most conservative of either sex will neither be surprised nor shocked at the aggressiveness of the movement led by Mrs. Stanton who defied public opinion and called the first woman's convention for the purpose of demanding rights to which she felt her sex justly entitled.

"The broad-minded men of this land have come to realize that wisdom, judgment and conscientiousness are not prerogatives of either sex, but are the result of the combined training of head and heart.

"I believe that the American man of to-day rejoices more in the advancement made by women of this country in the march of human progress in recent years than do the women themselves, and this he ought to do, if from a selfish standpoint only, for he must eventually share in the profits to accrue to mankind from a progressive womanhood.

"Therefore the idea that the highest interests of men and women ought to be identical is gaining ground.

"The greater the enlightenment and intelligence of the women of a community, the higher will be the standard of the men of that community."

SPIRITUALISTS INTERESTED

In Appeal Which Madame Montrose Will Make from Decision of Judge Murphy in Police Court.

Rochester Spiritualists are interested in the appeal made by W. H. Sullivan, as attorney for Madame Montrose, from the decision of Judge Murphy in police court yesterday by which the judge held that the "sittings" given by Madame Montrose came under the legal head of fortune tellings and placed her under bonds in the sum of 200 to refrain from such in the future. The appeal was taken to Judge Stephens of the county court yesterday afternoon, Assistant District Attorney Bechtold appearing in opposition.

It was claimed by the defense at the trial yesterday that Madame Montrose distinctly stated that she did not tell fortunes, but that she was a Spiritualist and could see into the future. Mr. Sullivan in his argument traced back the section of the penal code which the defendant was accused of violating and held that it was a survival of the old English law against gypsies, jugglers and wandering mountebanks. It is quite likely the case will be appealed to the highest courts.—Rochester (N. Y.) Union.

Trumpet Manifestations.

H. G. Burroughs, the trumpet medium, has been giving a series of circles to the Joplin people. We have one thousand or more Spiritualist believers, yet many outsiders are investigating the phenomena of spirit return. It is a great pleasure to have the departed loved ones speak to you in an audible voice through the trumpet, hence every sitting at most any circle, the seed of Spiritualism is planted, and in time will grow.

The writer has attended several of his meetings, the one held at the residence of E. J. Stiles, corner A and Joplin street, was well attended. Mr. Burroughs, at any circle, will invariably select some skeptic to sit next to him so they can realize that he is not moving about in the dark and producing fraudulent messages.

His phase is going into a trance, when his Indian guide, Blackhawk, greets the visitors; his trumpet guide Tim Murphy, in typical Irish dialect, then introduces the spirit speaker, for the invocation, known as Dr. Westlott, who appeals to his hearers in a most ardent manner and sincere spiritual thoughts.

The phenomena that took place were grand, the musical instrument was moved by the spirits present, wound up and set going, by request of one of the sitters. The former daughter of the house came and played on the guitar in harmony with the singing. Many other manifestations took place. The trumpet messages were good tests to those present. Every one present received a message from their departed loved ones and departed well pleased with what they heard and learned.

The Sensitive.

As Impressively Presented by the Editor of the Harbinger of Light, Melbourne, Australia—All Geniuses Are Sensitives, But All Sensitives Are Not Geniuses.

In a recent number of The Age, appeared a reprint from The Saturday Review of an article on "The Sensitive," wherein the writer expresses his opinion that in a world where we must needs stand the buffetings of both friends and enemies, as is the case in the present conditions of society here, it is a misfortune to be born a sensitive. He describes the sins and follies of sensitives in their endeavor to hide their worldly weakness—and the picture is not much overdrawn—but his concluding remarks, which embody the advantages of sensitiveness, indicate that they far outweigh the disadvantages, nearly all of which are due to lack of moral stamina, the possession of which would lift the individual above the level of the petty matters which otherwise annoy and distress him. As a preliminary to the expression of our views on the subject, we present the bright side of the picture depicted by the writer:

"The artist is one whose sensitiveness is abnormally developed in some direction. He has made for himself an atmosphere in which he can live. In the world, as it exists, he is an abnormal product. In the world of art, as he has created it, sensitiveess is the normal condition. Here he can 'realize' himself in safety. Here the assuaging balm of sympathy is applied to his wounded feelings. It is this consciousness of 'another world' altogether than that we see, which gives to the artist that air of aloofness which baffles and enrages the uninitiated. To the rest of the world the sensitive is a constant source of surprise. Who knows to what heights of heroism and endurance he may rise albeit he shrinks so visibly from the mere sight of suffering and pain? From the ranks of the sensitive have come the doers of the great unexpected deeds. Once touch his sympathy and the considerations which have weight with other men will be thrown to the winds. He will go through with the enterprise at all hazards."

What is the sensitive? The one whose interior self is constantly coming to the surface; reaching out for some ideal, something in sympathy with its desires or cravings, but meeting as a rule with cold and unsympathetic response, retreats quiveringly into its abode, conveying its trouble to its citadel, the Brain. When this defeat is oft repeated the higher intellectual faculties become weakened and the basilar ones dominate, creating an inversion; then sensitiveness instead of being a blessing becomes a curse, but where the outreaching spirit finds some field for its aspiration in painting, sculpture, astronomy, horticulture, music, religion, or anything of a truly moral or ideal nature, it has something to hold on which gives it courage to hold its ground in the particular field it has occupied, and partake of compensatory joys for the trials and pains it may experience in other directions. Did parents understand this and apply themselves to seeking a natural outlet for the sensitive aspirations, there would be much fewer failures in the lives of such. Like delicate plants that under favorable circumstances produce the most beautiful flowers and foliage, but lose all their beauty by exposure to strong winds or burning sun, the sensitive requires protection from the buffetings of the worldly-minded. Unfortunately, too many parents, instead of strengthening the moral nature of their sensitive offspring to bear with fortitude or equanimity these unavoidable trials incidental to their constitution, encourage instead a feeling of resentment by blaming the persons or circumstances which pain them, and thus unthinkingly bring about the inversion we have referred to.

All geniuses are sensitives, but all sensitives are not geniuses; the genius is one who has sufficient intellectual force to concentrate his intuitional aspirations in one or more definite directions. Manifestations of power in any particular direction command respect and ward off attacks on his weaker parts, but the sensitive whose interior self is feebly reaching out in all directions for something responsive to its indefinite cravings is vulnerable at every point, and unless sustained by the influence of some stronger personality, retires within itself, broods over and magnifies its trials, and develops pessimism.

The writer we have quoted in his concluding lines accurately describes the heroism which is a trait of the sensitive. Place him in a witness box or on a platform before an audience, and although he may know they are sympathetic, he will be all of a tremor but let him be in real danger he will, as a rule, exhibit calmness and bravery beyond others. This arises from the concentration of his spiritual forces. Stimulated by a sense of duty the spirit has no fear, it dominates the physical, and intuitively asserts its supremacy, placing itself (unconsciously, perhaps) in relation to the great forces of the world of spirit. Yes; the cultured sensitive in his solitary moments, when undisturbed by mundane commotions, does live in "another world" and experiences emotions unknown to the commonality of mankind, that are compensatory to the frictions of the mundane plane. All sensitives are mediums, but those whose mental conformations are defective, are related only to the lower planes of spirit life, and there is danger in the cultivation of their mediumistic powers, for the spirits in those planes are unwise and (not infrequently) unscrupulous. Hence, unless they are guarded and guided by some stronger and more advanced intelligence—either in or out of the body—their mediumship will not be beneficial to themselves or others. It is a serious business and we would caution those who contemplate entering the mediumistic field to pause until they have studied the guide books of those who have travelled the path.

MY TIMES ARE IN THY HANDS.

I need not care;
If days to come be dark or fair,
If the sweet summer brings delight,
Or bitter winds chill the air.

No thought of mine
Can penetrate the deep design
That forms afar, through bud and bloom,
The purple cluster of the vine.

I do not know,
The subtlest secret of the snow,
That hides away the violets;
Till April teaches them to blow.

Enough for me,
Their tender lovelinessto see,
Assured that little things and large,
Do fill God's purpose equally.

How is this planned?
Or that? I may not understand;
I am content my God, to know,
That all my times are in thy hands.

Whatever share,
Of loss, or loneliness, or care,
Falls to my lot, it can not be
More than thy will for me to bear.

And none the less,
Whatever sweet things come to bless,
And gladden me, thou art its source,
The sender of my happiness.

And this to me;
With other gracious gifts so free,
That I may never turn my face
In an evil hour from thee,

Nor on the land,
Of shifting faith and feeling stand,
But wake or sleep, with equal trust,
Knowing my times are in thy hands.

SPIRIT ROBT. G. INGERSOLL.
Madame Grace, Medium.

To the Editor:—The above poem, supposedly from Robert G. Ingersoll, was given through the medium of Madame Grace, who has been visiting our town last week. She and her husband seemed to give good satisfaction here, and left many of our people thinking.

This poem was given me by automatic writing, and I know nothing further about it than this. I think it very pretty, at least, and if you want to publish it, do so. W. J. DURHAM.

Seymour, Ind.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. A very remarkable book. Large octavo, 339 pages. Price, $1.75.

Winfield Camp, Kansas.

Our camp was a success through the entire meeting. As most people know after a camp is opened, most everything lies with the talent employed; and they proved to be all that we could wish for. Each one was ready to do their part and only waiting their time to come. The officers of the camp greatly appreciated their interest and earnestness.

Will J. Erwood's lectures prove that he is one that has looked deeply into the soul realm; and his lectures were anxiously looked forward to.

Mrs. Bessie Bellman awakens one to the thought of what life really means, and arouses in each one a desire to strive harder than before.

Mrs. Payne's lectures and songs cause one to turn the hour glass upon self and lifts one above the environments of this life for the time being.

Max Hoffmann in his spirit messages has never been excelled on our platform yet. He brought the tears to many an eye, and glad tidings to all.

Mrs. Sallie W. Aber's messages, given through her guide, Red Feather, were fine and right to the point.

Peter Pearson's lecture on Harmony of color was simply grand, and I think there are but few of us up to his standard of thought vibration.

Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayners' spirit messages were given in such a sympathetic, motherly way that all were drawn to her. The last evening we made up a purse for her to give us a fire test seance, which was grand, and many think it was one of the most attractive features of our camp. She slowly passed a $20 bill through the blaze, a necktie, a silk handkerchief, and all came out uninjured. She also held her hands and arms in the blaze; she held the burning hot lamp flue against her face and chest and all this was done without injury to herself or mentioned articles. There as a committee of three appointed, who brought fresh water from the well and washed her hands, arms and face with soap before everyone, so there was no chance of her using any drugs.

Mr. W. W. Aber as a materializing medium, gave splendid satisfaction; which will long be remembered with reverence to the seance room. He sat under strictest test conditions in most of his seances, and the loved ones came just the same and gave their love greetings, proving they still lived and with a fuller realization than when encumbered by the physical expression.

INDIA AND ITS RELIGION.

Illustrating Certain Facts Not Generally Known, and Showing That Each nation is Formulated on a Different Plan.

Intricacies of caste among the servants prevent housekeeping from degenerating into a tame and monotonous occupation in India, according to Mrs. O. M. Eakins, whose husband was acting vice consul general at Calcutta under the last administration. Mrs. Eakins lived in Calcutta for twenty years recently.

"It reuired twenty-seven servants to perform the housework for my husband and myself," said she in discussing the subject. "The man who does the marketing will on no account carry the purchases home. The official cook of the establishment never cooks. He sits and directs some other persons who perform the actual labor. The man who serves the food at the table will never bring it from the kitchen, which is in a separate building in the compound. There must be a special servant for that. The man who did the chamber work and took care of the bathroom was specially unclean to all the rest of the servants. They would neither touch him nor any article which he touched. If a table were to be moved not one of the other twenty-six would lift one end of it if he had hold of the other end.

Special Servants Handle the Food.

"It is necessary to have a certain number of Mussulman servants to handle the food. No Hindoo servant will touch your food or wash your dishes. This is particularly the case with meat dishes. Some vegetables they do not mind. But the same trouble arises over pork with the Mussulman servants. One day my cook went on strike and a Mussulman helper offered to get the luncheon. I told him to fry some bacon, but he murmured apologetically that he couldn't touch pig. So I went and sliced the bacon for him and after that he slid it into it into the frying pan, and when it was cooked slid it upon the plate, and so served it without touching it.

"They are the most imperturbable people in the world. You may throw one down stairs or pat him on the back; he accepts both with exactly the same expression of countenance. The Indian's religion is at the bottom of all his acts, all his feelings. He eats, sleeps, moves and has his being according to the religious formulae. And his doctrine of reincarration forms his whole philosophy of life. The fact that you are the master now is due to the fact that you have been the servant in some previous reincarnation. He is the servant now and the only chance for him to be reborn in the master's position is to learn all the lessons of his present incarnation. He takes everything philosophically. It is all a part of the day's work.

Christian Servants Are Worse.

"No white woman in Calcutta will have a Christian Indian for a servant. I know the wife of a canon of the Church of England very well. The canon has charge of all the Church of England missions in India. But she will not have a Christian servant in her house. They have lost all the ethics of their own religion and not taken any of those of the new one. It may be the beginning of better things, but the present results are chaotic.

"Calcutta is the most cosmopolitan city in India. Conditions of life there are very similar to those in any European city. It is situated in the least attractive part of India, where the climatic conditions are bad. The natives of that region are looked down upon by other races of India. 'Dog of a Vengali' is a common expression throughout the country. 'Babu' really means 'Mr.,' but it is a term used in Calcutta to signify an English-speaking Indian. It is a perfectly common sight to see a babu walking the streets of Calcutta wearing patent leather shoes, no stockings, the native drapery wound about his upper limbs and his costume completed by the shirt of the white man, worn quite untrammeled. The babu prizes his patent-leather shoes above all other articles of attire, and when it rains will take them off and carry them. It is a common thing with white housewives, looking over their returned laundry, to exclaim: 'Well, this shirt has been rented out to a babu!' The laundryman turns many an honest penny renting the shirts of his customers out to babus who wish to make a smart toilet.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

July 30 was Cleveland Day at Lake Brady, being under the management of the German Spiritual Society of that city. The spacious tent was well filled notwithstanding threatening weather all the morning and the rain which began just as the morning session opened. The exercises began with an instrumental selection by the Quintelfild quartette composed of George Quintelfild and his three sons, of Cleveland, followed by the congregation singing, "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

Our president, Mr. Hunger, then introduced Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, the speaker for the day. As she is so well known it is not necessary to eulogize her farther than to say the people who were fortunate enough to be present received the best she had to give. As her lectures are reported verbatim for publication, it is not necessary to makes notes of it here, as it can be read in full elsewhere. "Love for Humanity and Immortality" was the subject of an improvised poem.

The afternoon session was marred by frequent showers, but the best of order prevailed, although many had to stand. Dr. Haines of Bedford, made a few remarks relative to the dedication of the church in Cleveland the first Sunday in October, recently purchased by the Ladies' Temple Fund of that city. Mrs. Woodruff sang as a solo that beautiful song, "Only a Thin Veil Between us." After the fine lecture, such as only Mrs. Richmond can give, Mrs. Challen of Toledo, followed with messages.

Mrs. H. C. Ebertshauser of Sandusky, O., is located in her cottage here for the summer, giving readings daily to all who desire to investigate on her line of mediumship.

Important Message From the Spirit Side of Life.

Spirit Henry C. Wright, through the Mediumship of Eva A. Cassell, Gives a Comprehensive Analysis of the Evil and the Good, in an Especially Interesting and Instructive message which throws a Flood of Light on these two Antagonistic Elements. His Views on Prenatal Influences are Very Valuable.

To be fair in this arena, all sides of the question must be presented, the bright side, as well as the dark side; the higher powers want the Truth known and they will go out to meet it; favor to none, justice to all.

To those mortals obsessed by extreme fear as to the "demons" in spirit life, let me say that there are no worse spirits here than those you meet every day in earth life, and just as there is no state or condition in the mortal that may not be reached for its betterment, by some method and in good time, so also is there no state or depravity that cannot be reached, here, by the great moral principle.

I am glad to come here and voice my sentiments. I feel to thank my coworkers, Brother Pierpont and his medium, for the assistance they have given me in the past by transmitting my messages of advice and guidance to this child of mortality, before she was sufficiently advanced to respond to my own vibration. I thank Mrs. Longley for her unspoken kindly thought and sympathy, at this time—sent along the subtle cord souls use to transmit their voiceless messages. My charge and pupil has need of kindly thought and words of cheer—they are like balm to the earnest soul struggling to perfect its mission amid the adverse conditions of earth, and many a one falls by the wayside, alone and unaided, for lack of encouragement.

How I wish that I might here speak of the laws governing mediumship. Oh, there is such a lack of knowledge on the world's part, of these subtle laws and currents; of the vibrative powers which set in operation the wheels within wheels which act on mortals for the development of mediumship! Such a lack of mercy, of sympathy to those we have called from the mortal ranks of life to bear our message to the suffering world! If you only knew! If you only could see the internal lives many of our charges and mediums suffer! And the greater message they bear to the world—the greater problem—the most degraded condition they touch upon, the greater is their suffering. Spirit guides and teachers do not come to earth to speak of the best conditions there, for there is no need.

We must, perforce, turn our efforts to the depraved conditions for their betterment. We must call upon media who are especially adapted for our work, and wise spirits do not call them unless they are well assured that the media will be able to serve their purpose. The most degrading conditions spring from ignorance of the generative law; the deepest suffering on earth comes from careless parentage, parentage which is criminal because it begets depravity in posterity and entails a lifetime of misery upon it. The heart-rending conditions under which humanity is born—the wresting of the creative function from degradation and placing it on a higher plane, when gods may be born to grace the earth and bless it, instead of demons to curse it—these are the conditions we wish to reach on earth, but when the media under our guidance take up that line of work, immediately they are scored for touching upon what are termed tabooed subjects and unkind things are said by some, who, if the truth were known, are living lives of deceit, hypocrisy, which they endeavored to conceal by such a pretense of purity that they could not even bear to hear motherhood, gestation, or the functions relating to them mentioned. The media we have selected to do that work and bear our teachings to the world have suffered years of martyrdom, because they spoke upon these subjects—because they touched spheres with depraved creatures who were human, yet who had been dragged down into the degraded vortex of earth's conditions.

We must call upon media to assist us, we must develop and sustain them along the thorny path as best we may. Mortals may help us by being merciful and kind to our instruments. When you see a child of earth struggling amid adverse conditions to perfect a work—when you know that there must be something back of her utterances, although you may not understand what it is, do not call her crazy, foolish, or bad, even though you were her own sister, for if you have stirred up animosity or robbed her of a life-long friend through deceit and by condemning her, you have infringed on her right, and brought out the most angular side of her character, instead of the most angelic, for media are most sensitive to abusive condemnation and you should not judge them, for the time may come in another life when you will find that they stand higher than you, before the bar of spiritual justice, and that, while you have stood aloof and scoffed, they have done the work and suffered the pangs which have earned a crown. Spiritual guides cannot use media for this particular work whose natures are incapable of feeling and experiencing, physically, the degraded states which are to be reached.

The perceptive powers of the medium must come in equilibrium with those of the guide in order to transmit the teachings. Media living in the external realm of effect, are ignorant of causes, while those who exist in the internal realm are cognizant of them and make the best instruments for our work, therefore we are obliged to choose them. In development there are two batteries in use, one, the registering battery on the mortal side; and the reflecting battery on the spirit side. But before the guide can transmit his lesson to the world, years, perhaps, may ensue before the brain and nerves of his instrument can be made to vibrate in rapport with his own, which entails difficulty and patience; the guide must raise the ratio of vibration in the mortal brain up to his own, and this can only be done in this particular work by bringing the instrument to the very sphere of the depraved condition to be reached; nay, the instrument must be swept momentarily into the vortex and know and experience its degradation ere she can respond to the thought-waves of her spiritual preceptor; she must touch spheres with the spiritual Magdalen and listen to the protests of her anguished soul (and thus be blamed by the members of the community, who do not know that unseen powers are leading her along the way), for, oh, good friends, even the poor Magdalen can teach a lesson and her sorrowful story, told to our instruments, is of use in raising the ratio of vibration for our work.

Many have said that Spiritualism has broken up homes in the past, but it is not so. This dear one and others will tell you the same. The higher powers have never taken a medium from what was lawfully hers in the sphere of the domestic; if that has been done in any family, it was not the work of the higher powers, but it was the manifestation of another influence. The first lesson taught to our media is that of duty; duty to those depending on them; duty to the husband or the wife, the tender children, to all those embodied in the marriage relation; duty, well done, is the bright star in the crown of our media, and when our work conflicts with that duty, we withdraw our forces and wait patiently until the time comes when we can again resume it without infringing on the rights of anyone.

It is a work of time to embody the process of unfolding the brain of a mortal sufficiently to come in rapport with the force necessary to give our teachings, and it brings its suffering. To be sensitive to the point of crucifixion, to be able to feel and know the world's thoughts in regard to your work, to be cognizant of its secret scorn—this is what it means to be our media. But you should know something of the power back of them, by the worth of their utterances; none but brave, noble souls dare to lift their voices in protest against the evil done to offspring by men and women in wedlock, the baleful obsessions they cast over helpless humanity; we are trying to reach every deprayed condition on earth and we shall not rest until we have rescued the last Magdalen from the man-made system which robs the human race of its mothers and despoils the youth of the nation.

My boundless love and sympathy go forth to all true workers in the cause; this article is not for this paper alone but for all Spiritualistic papers which have space for it, as I wish to reach our media in the east and west.

All should join hands in this work of lifting the burden from obsessed humanity and these words are written for the world at large.

To the mature and noble scholar in the west who has striven so conscientiously to solve the problems of mortal existence I extend my greeting, and one day I shall meet him in my sphere of spiritual life and give him welcome; many of our deepest thinkers have their homes on the Pacific coast.

I send a word of cheer and brotherly love to my co-workers everywhere—tell them that Henry still regards them with fraternal blessing, that he is still engaged in the same old work of striving to bring human hearts to a conception of that era yet to dawn when man shall dwell in peace with man, and all the world clasp hands in harmony together. That time is to come, we believe, when all shall gain that plane of thought and advancement where love shall rule.

To mediums everywhere, I say, press on; do your best; speak the word and give the thought that shall in any way soften the hardship of life for others and bring conditions of harmony for that of warfare, of peace for that of discord, love for that of hate—for the whole world is kin and we are brothers and sisters all. And I would ask your kindly thought for this dear one of earth, to help create the conditions which shall assist her in bringing forth my work, the coming book. It costs nothing to voice a word of cheer, and it called upon to tread the wine-press alone; and all the dear ones whom this band of spiritual powers have called upon to do the work and teach the lesson of a more righteous generation, we send love and sympathy while they travail amid the unhappy conditions of earth and we promise them, that, as the pure white lily rises from the depths of the muddy pond, so also will their spirits one day arise above the black shadows now encompassing them and they shall taste the sweets of the spiritual glory and wear the laurel in the kingdom they have so ably earned.

THE AGREEMENT KEPT.

The Ghostly Apparition Appeared as Agreed.

A writer in the Record-Herald says: "Take the case of a mother or father dying many miles away from his or her family. As death approaches the mind is so strongly fastened upon the thought of the absent ones and the grief is so great at being away from them that there is created one of those strange phantoms that is instantly transmitted to the far-away ones. There is an instant's appearance to the living and then the specter disappears. It has carried out the dying wish and desire and has communicated with the loved ones. So you do not believe such things occur? Well, may you never be the recipient of such a grewsome message. I recall a case in my own life that will never be forgotten. My dearest friend at school was the sweetest boy I ever knew. We grew up together and separated after we became men. 'I must go to London,' he told me one day, 'and I will tell you good-bye. I desire that we shall make this agreement: if either of us should die the last thought is to be a message to the other.' I agreed, but with a laugh. We wrote to each other often and he was getting along well in Europe. One day there was a ghostly apparition appearing before me, and with it was the voice of Harry. 'I have been run over by a train in London,' it said, 'and I am dying. Good-bye.' The vision disappeared. A cable message the next day informed me that the vision was right, and that Harry had died about the hour I received the message. Was it telepathy or what?"

Give Us the Truth, the Whole Truth, and Nothing but the Truth

LILY DALE, N. Y.

Notes of the City of Light Assembly.

Cora L. V. Richmond, J. Clegg Wright, Susie C. Clark and Thomas McClary—with such a quartette representing the different phases of scientific and spiritual thought to which each is specially adapted, what could one expect but a week brim-full of instruction, which to the receptive mind is an impetus toward higher thought and better living.

Miss Susie C. Clark's initial lecture was given on the subject, "Fetters that Bind," a practical, helpful discourse, full of sound sense as well as high spiritual thought. No one could listen to Miss Clark without being impressed with her deep earnestness in the cause of Spiritualism and along all lines of thought which tend toward the elevation of mankind to a higher plane of living.

Some of the fetters that bind as discussed by Miss Clark were, a misconception of God, or the belief in a personal God; this, combined with lack of the spirit of brotherhood in man, she claimed to be the greatest obstacle to the advancement of the race. Other human fetters she outlined to be: The prominence of the lower self; the love of self, as evidenced in envy, uncharitableness toward other selves; sectarian intolerance; intemperate habits of thought and of appetite; of worry and lack of aspiration for broader realization of spiritual truth.

An interesting incident in the week's doings at the City of Light was the flag-raising in Melrose Park, on the slight elevation just outside the entrance to the grounds. A large, handsome American flag was a gift to the association from W. H. Mix, of Sugar Grove, an ex-member of the board of directors and a pioneer worker at the City of Light when it was known as the Cassadaga Free Association of Spiritualism.

A. B. French, a venerable, yet powerful speaker, made the presentation speech to the waiting hundreds gathered at the scene of the flag-raising, and thrilled every heart with the touching eloquence of his inspirational thought. A most fitting and timely feature of the occasion (due to the tact and ability of chairman John Lillie to appreciate the "eternal fitness of things") was in having the flag hoisted by the hand of an old soldier of the civil war, F. C. Holcomb, of Chapin Post, No. 2, G. A. R., Buffalo, N. Y., a newly arrived guest at the City of Light that day, and who did himself proud at the post of honor given him by Chairman Lillie. Mr. Holcomb thoroughly appreciated the honor; he fought in the battle of Gettysburg, and carries in his pockets, on his lapels and has in his possession innumerable medals, badges and various tokens received from the government and other official sources, of which he is justly proud; one, a quaint portrait of Jennie Wade, the heroine of Gettysburg, as he says the boys called her, who baked bread for them all the first day of that bloody encounter, and who was shot down while in this service for the boys in blue. No wonder the old man was eager to grasp the rope with which he was to elevate the Stars and Stripes he loved. It was impressive scene and formed a beautiful picture. President Pettengill, ideal in the grace and dignity of her office; Chairman Lillie, his face beaming with enthusiasm; prominent speakers and teachers grouped about the venerable, white-haired master of ceremonies on the grassy knoll nature had furnished as a platform; hundreds of young and old with uncovered heads awaiting the signal from the Northwestern Band of Meadville, which we have with us always, and as the boys poured forth the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner," and the old hero of Gettysburg slowly and reverently hoisted and flung Old Glory to the breeze, as with one voice three cheers and a tiger were given which reverberated over the hills and through the glens of beautiful Lily Dale, it seemed as never before! Then "America" was sung by the great choir of people, and as Old Sol sank to rest, throwing the shades of purple and gold, shades of red, of white and of blue over the rippling waves of the lake, spirits of air, of light, of nature everywhere, seemed to re-echo the song, "Long may it wave o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave."

Thomas McClary, familiarly known as "The Western Chautauqua Orator," is said to have the learning of Wendell Phillips and the humor of Artemus Ward, and has the power to sway his audience to laughter or tears at will, with a magnetic personality he holds his audience to the end, and is ideal as an entertainment and instruction.

President Pettengill introduces special attractions almost every week, and, needless to say, they are of the very highest and best talent, literary, dramatic and musical.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

THE SOUL: ITS NATURE, RELATIONS AND EXPRESSIONS IN HUMAN EMBODIMENTS. Third edition now on sale. Price $1.00. This is one of the best books given by the guides of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond. They are really lessons, published primarily, as a book of reference for those who have been members of the classes receiving them. This volume is a careful compilation from reports of lessons, containing the bases of the teachings.

ROMANISM EXPOSED Is a pamphlet of 30 pages, in reply to Prof. David Swing, Priest Cashman and Dr. Withrow, and is principally in defense of Protestantism. A concise little pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

HELIOGENTRIC ASTROLOGY, Or Essentials of Astronomy and Solar Mentality, with Tables of Ephemeris to 1910. By Yarmo Vedra. With 64 illustrations, 35 of which are original drawings by Holmes W. Merton, author of "Descriptive Mentality." "A new system of personally determining the primary fund of Mental and Physical forces and their results in mental aptitudes that dominate the nature of the individual as based upon date of birth. Price: cloth, $1.50.

"THE DREAM CHILD," A Fascinating Romance of Two Worlds. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents. Books like "The Dream Child" spur humanity on to make more and more demands of this nature, and will open up new heights and depths of spiritual knowledge.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Will, I believe, take its place beside Bulwer's "Zanoni" and the "Seraphita" of Balzac.—Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. Although simple and unvarnished with any inflammable descriptions, enthralls the mind to the exclusion of other thoughts, until reluctantly the reader closes the last page.—Minneapolis Sunday Times.

HARMONICS OF EVOLUTION. The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science. As taught by modern masters of law. By Florence Huntley. An exceedingly interesting and distinctly valuable contribution to the literature of evolution, unfolding its laws from the deeper and clearer spiritual aspect, and indicating the defects of the Darwinian theory. Spiritualists and Materialists alike can gain much from its perusal. Price, finely bound in cloth, $2.

Discovery of a Lost Trail BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB, Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by this wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it. "Discovery of a Lost Trail" is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but spread in its scholarly simplicity, it will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

Interesting Extracts.

By Sara A. Underwood, From Letters of Anna Gardner, the Nantucket Pioneer Suffragist.

Many of the earlier converts to Spiritualism in this country were identified with the Anti-Slavery and Woman's Suffrage movements as well, and to these among the readers of The Progressive Thinker the name and doubtless the personality of Anna Gardner, a native of Nantucket Island, a pioneer worker in behalf of her sex, one of the earliest teachers to give her services during the war in teaching the freedmen, and the first person to invite and encourage Frederick Douglass to address a public meeting in her native town where she was born of Quaker parentage—will be familiar. This is why in looking over many letters written to me personally during a number of years by this noble woman, I thought I ought to share some of her thought expressions on Spiritualism and other themes, with the editor and readers of The Progressive Thinker, before giving the originals to the flames.

I never met Anna Gardner face to face. She is one of a delightful group of thought friends made through the medium of the pen, but all dear and real to me as any I have gained otherwise. Miss Gardner was not an avowed Spiritualist, but was deeply interested in the subject. She was to the last a little doubtful, and these doubts I did my best to dispel. Her last letter was written with trembling hand but unshaken soul, in her last painful illness, a short time before she passed on to wider knowledge than my own, at the age of 86, on Feb. 18, 1901. I was happy in being the means of making her acquainted with another daughter of Nantucket of her own name, a Boston friend, Miss Eliza Drow Gardner, a teacher for thirty years in the Roxbury High School, who a few years before the death of Anna Gardner, bought a summer home in her native island Nantucket, from whence she also a year later passed on to the higher home for which they both longed while still doubtful of its possibility. It is to Eliza Drew Gardner that Anna Gardner refers in the following:

"Our mutual friend, E. D. G.—comes to her Nantucket home soon. I know how glad she will feel to receive all your messages. But I am afraid neither she nor I will be able to solace ourselves for enforced mutual separation in this life by the hope to meet in the world beyond, which hope or expectation is made so realistic by your facile pen on paper. We are both somewhat skeptical and desire 'a cloud of witnesses'—in the line of Spiritualism, she, much more than I."

In a later letter she writes: "Of course, my ideas, once bordering on materialism, have materially changed since being psychologically inclined; I am a Spiritualist—but I crave more personal experience to convince me of the truth of the continuity of existence. I have attended seances many times—but if I depended upon what I saw there to deepen my convictions I should lose faith altogether. I am influenced only by its reasonableness as an explanation of the mysteries of this phase of existence."

"In a paper before 'The Unity Club,' I gave 'Some Phases of Psychology,' as my subject a few weeks ago. It was received very much better than I expected. In fact it was very much applauded. It was written for 'Sorosis,' and the 'Unity' committee requested me to repeat it before their society. The name of S. A. U. figured in that paper."

Speaking of the vagaries of some writers on Spiritualism, she remarks: "Emma Hardinge Britten is a woman, I suppose of undoubted veracity—but while she cannot give the names of parties so that her strange story can be investigated, the skeptic would be likely to consider its absurdity to be in proportion to its marvelousness. Could there be downright undeniable proof of its truthfulness, to me, more than any manifestations I have ever heard of, it would be convincing. I think I should be clean gone over to a belief in Spiritualism. I perceive Elizabeth Cady Stanton is looking that way. Should she become a public advocate she would help the cause hugely. But I do not feel, as she seems to, any greater interest in the unseen, mysterious hereafter in consequence of verging toward it—being an octogenarian, I have felt all the interest possible on all subjects, in philosophy and science and humanity. Emotion could not augment my interest now that I am approaching the hereafter."

In August, 1900, she writes me: "My Dear Friend:—When I took up a late number of The Philosophical Journal and read your article on post-mortem experiences, I felt rebuked that so long a time had elapsed since my last communication with you—my last exchange of earth experiences—but I do not forget you. As my years increase I find it more onerous to wield the pen, but in order to earn a response I know I must make an effort. Telegraphy has already taken the place of letter-writing to a great extent, and telepathy, thought-transference will, I doubt not, to a much greater in the years to come. I see you are still interested in automatic writing. What a wonderful mystery it is! I have just finished reading M. J. Savage's late book, 'The Religion of To-Day.' I am a great admirer of Savage, and what he writes is very inspiring generally, as well as profitable, but I cannot always agree with him. It does not seem consistent with the law of evolution that a man born so many centuries ago as was Jesus, should be considered the greatest man who ever lived, even spiritually. Neither can I agree with him that the church as an institution has been the most helpful in promoting the progress of the world. Has it not been the most cruel, bloodthirsty, sanguinary power in history? Even now these terrible wars would never have been brought about if the church as a whole had been opposed to it.

"I read with great satisfaction Mr. Underwood's political speech in the Quincy Journal—responding to every point that I was capable of understanding. Is it discouraging for me to say that I do not see how in his lifetime such a man as your husband can ever reach the popular side? What a pity!"

In another letter she writes: "Yesterday while looking through a pile of pamphlets to find something I wanted, I came across one of Mr. Underwood's 'Progress of Evolutionary Thought'—though I had an engagement I couldn't help stopping to re-peruse it. It was an address that should be heard all over the land! I have very little knowledge of science, but when it is made as lucid as in that address—revealing so broad a scope of knowledge in various directions, accompanied by the most profound thought, it is so helpful to me that I can but wish it could have a wider circulation.

"You asked me to give my idea of the characteristics of some of the earlier pioneers of the Women's Right Movement, and when I commenced this letter I had it in my mind to do so, but it is so long drawn out I think I can only say that I entertain, as of course you do, the most exalted estimation of them all—without attempting analysis. But much as I think of them, I doubt whether any of them excels Ernestine L. Rose, the Polish lecturer on human rights. What a splendid example of humanity she was! In addition to her beauty and superb intellectuality, she manifested so great sweetness and poise of character. It seems lonesome to think how the world is bereft of nearly all who can recall her personality to memory—How I wish you could get from her some genuine spirit message.

"Were Miss Harriet Martineau living in these days I think she would become a student of Spiritualism. What a remarkable woman she was! The best masculine and feminine elements seemed to unite in her character! so strong—so deeply sympathetic! Only think of those letters she wrote on the brink of the grave! Marie Weston Chapman speaks of her as 'This greatest English woman!'

"I think to be as confident of continued existence as you seem to be, would be a solace, and I am so much of a Spiritualist that had I the same personal experience you have had, I would believe as you do. I intend if nothing prevents to attend the Free Religious meeting next May in Boston. How I wish I could meet you there! I should like to see you face to face before hearing the 'One clear call for me' to join the great majority. But as that time cannot be far distant it is hardly to be hoped that we shall meet on this terrestrial sphere."

This brave, loving, beautiful soul met the change we call death, serene and fearlessly. Eliza Drew Gardner, herself at the time an invalid with a like lingering painful disease, wrote me on Feb. 9, as follows: "I sent my housemaid down this afternoon to inquire how Miss Gardner was, and the report was in her own words: 'I am as well as can be expected under the circumstances.' She heard my Annie's voice in the hall and called her to come in. She was sitting up, and spoke, Annie said, in a strong voice, took, and held her hand some time, and gave her messages for me. They have moved her bed into the sitting-room, but she will not go to bed—says she shall not till the last moment. They say that no one has known of her disease until within a few days except one friend who was going to Europe whom she knew she would not meet again, and her doctor. I never knew such heroic conduct. She must have dressed the cancer herself all the time—and how she must have suffered."

One week later Eliza Drew Gardner sent me a postal card with notice of her death. In January of the next year the writer passed on to join her and my friend in as serene a frame of soul!

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

Passed to spirit life at the age of 55 years, from her home at Howard City, Mich., July 26, Mrs. Georgia King. She leaves a husband, two sons, a mother and a host of loving friends to miss her. She was a Spiritualist. She was ill and suffered for many months, and was ready and willing to go. The writer gave the funeral address at the home, and the ladies of the Eastern Star took charge at the grave.

MRS. AMANDA COFFMAN.

Mrs. Julia Johnson of Alma, Mich., wife of the late Theron Johnson, passed to the higher life July 22, at the age of 68, after a brief illness. She leaves eight children and a wide circle of warm friends to miss her physical presence. She was a staunch Spiritualist, a kind, good neighbor, a loving and devoted mother, loved by all that knew her. The casket was covered with choice flowers. Her sons were the pallbearers and the writer spoke the words of cheer and consolation at the burial service.

MRS. AMANDA COFFMAN.
Grand Rapids, Mich.

Sanford Niles of Minneapolis, Minn., after a painful illness, was quietly released July 8, aged 77 years and 10 months. His early life was spent in La Porte county, Ind. He removed to Minnesota in 1855. The work of his life was along educational lines as teacher, editor and author. Possessing a strong religious nature, he early became a student of the phenomena and philosophy of Spiritualism, and never failed to speak or write in its behalf as opportunity demanded.

Mr. Abner Wright left the home of his daughter at Otisco, Saturday, July 28, to join the friends in the higher life. He has been a Spiritualist fifty-seven years, loved and respected by all who knew him. He leaves two daughters and sons and many relatives and friends to mourn his loss. He was 89 years old. He made every preparation for the funeral, requesting that Mrs. Dunham of Ionia, speak. The large home of the daughter was filled with sympathetic friends. Mrs. Webster read an obituary notice, and some beautiful thoughts of her own, which were very fitting for the occasion.

MRS. J. H. DUNHAM.

Passed to spirit life at her home, Lona, N. Y., Mrs. Sabrina E. Reed, July 3, 1905, aged 75 years. She had been a life-long Spiritualist.

Edward Garnett, a member of Billings Psychic Club, passed to the higher life, June 25, 1905, while performing his duties as lineman, coming in contact with a live wire. Thus one more link is formed between this world and that to which our brother has gone.

MRS. CARRIE SMITH,
Sec'y First Spiritual Church Billings, Mont.

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland. Interesting, instructive and helpful; Spiritually uplifting. Cloth bound; Price $1.

"Voltaire's Romances." Translated from the French. With numerous illustrations. These lighter works of the brilliant Frenchman, an invincible enemy of the Catholic church, are worthy of wide reading. Wit, philosophy and romance are combined, with the skill of a master mind. Price $1.50.

Spiritism and Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's Theories in Regard to It. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey. Demonstrates futility and inadequacy of Hudson's explanations of spiritual phenomena. Price 25 cents.

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism." A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood, lecturer upon physical, physiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the molecular or spiritual hypothesis of nature. Scholarly, masterly, trenchant. Price 25 cents.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32. CHICAGO, ILL., AUGUST 19, 1905. NO. 821

MRS. PRIOR IN NEW ZEALAND.

Philosophical Reflections on the Mediumship of Mrs. Prior.

There are features in the objective representation of such mediumship as is so remarkably displayed by that amiable lady and faithful exponent of spiritual principles, Mrs. Lole F. Prior, calculated to suggest the profoundest reflection in the most philosophical mind.

Here in Wellington, although a stranger from the Great Republic, she plunged bravely into the turbulent waters of antagonistic skepticism, and breasted the waves, a credit to herself and an acquisition to the movement.

Cynics, with a slight smattering of psychological nomenclature, have whispered mental telepathy, collusion, hallucination, thought-forms controlled by illusory suggestion, but all these fine-spun theories pale their ineffectual fires before the absolute assurance of truth. The medium steps down the aisle, and by, or independent of, direct contact, enters the thought-spheres of her auditors, and reveals that which is concealed from all else beside. For instance, among many such, one illustration may be cited which makes a perplexed philosopher of the materialist.

Mrs. Prior sees a vessel storm-tossed in the northern hemisphere; the sails are torn to ribbons, and destruction is inevitable. A man is on deck, whom she faithfully describes, after which she sees him go down with the vessel.

This description is identified as the experience of the brother of a gentleman present, a sailor who was lost at sea.

Now, how could the medium see what had transpired years before, and thousands of miles away? To say she is clairvoyant, and saw the vision spiritually, is no solution. How did she see it while there was no data to go by? It could not be mental collusion, when Mrs. Prior was on the platform, and the brother of the spirit was seated in the body of the hall. How could it be a thought-form, when it was unmistakably a representation by a human being on the other side of life? Hallucination was not possible, because the description was unconditionally accepted and identified by the brother.

The spiritual philosopher sees in this manifestation a corroboration of mediumistic teaching, viz., that the spirit world is simply an embodiment of thought. The spirit, wishing to be recognized, impressed on the spiritual surroundings an external symbol of his internal mind; thought representations of certain circumstances. These became objective to the clairvoyant vision of the seer. Carry the suggestive lesson to its logical significance, and what a vista is opened to our view! There is nothing outside of man but thought, ethereal or embodied: nay, what is the human soul itself but an embodiment of thought?—C. G. Oyston, in the Harbinger of Light, Australia.

ALL THE BODY DOESN'T DIE AT ONCE.

Finds Life After Death—Doctor Tries an Interesting Experiment Upon a Guillotine Victim.

An extraordinary incident which occurred at the guillotining at Orleans of the murderer Languille has been interestingly explained by Professor Hartsmann, a famous Paris surgeon. When the blade of the guillotine fell Languille's head was completely severed from the trunk. A doctor who was in attendance immediately picked up the head and called the dead man's name. To the astonishment of all present the eyelids of the severed head opened wide and then closed again.

"Languille! Languille!" called the doctor a second time, and once more the eyelids lifted, but a third call met with no response.

Professor Hartmann says it is quite possible for a form of nervous life to exist after death. This would not be the case if the subject died naturally or of some disease, but undoubtedly it would be so in the case of a healthy person meeting with a sudden and violent death. When a strong man suddenly passes from life to death his bodily tissues show a considerable amount of resistance.

The professor says that he himself dissected the body of a man thirty-six hours after he had been executed and that on pricking with a needle the nerve of the thigh he discovered that it was alive.

In the case of Languille, says the professor, the eyelids opened not because the name of Languille was pronounced, but because the sound of the voice on the ears produced a reflex action on the nerves. They would have lifted had any other name been called.

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

To Be Held in Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19, and 20, 1905.

The thirteenth annual convention of the National Spiritualists' Association will be held in the First Unitarian Church, Eighth street and Mary Place, Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

Among those invited and expected to participate in the exercises are Rev. Dr. Austin, Will J. Erwood, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, Oscar Edgerly, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Mesdames H. P. Ressegue, R. S. Lillie, Laura G. Fixen, Eva McCoy, Margaret Gaule Ridinger, and a galaxy of others.

Come one and all to the greatest spiritual convention ever held.

Special railway rates on the certificate plan can be secured over all lines. Ask your railroad agent for certificate tickets to the National Spiritualists' Convention at Minneapolis; the round trip rate will be one and a third of a fare. Delegates and visitors desiring to receive the benefits of this special rate must have their tickets vised by our railroad agent at convention the last day, October 20, and pay 25 cents each for such vising.

Hotel Niccolet, a first-class hotel on the European plan, will be headquarters of the convention. Special rates for good rooms, one dollar per day each person. Write and secure your rooms from Shattuck & Wood, proprietors of the Niccolet Hotel, Minneapolis, Minn.

The annual reception to delegates and visitors will be held at the First Unitarian Church, Monday, October 16, at 8 p. m.

All are cordially invited. Admission free to all meetings.

MARY T. LONGLEY, Secretary.
HARRISON D. BARRETT, President.

A MOST EXCELLENT TEST.

Illustrating the Power of Prophecy Derived From a Knife.

To the Editor:—At the Mineral Park camp-meeting, on July 21, Mrs. Mary C. Vlasek, a local medium of Los Angeles, Cal., was called to the platform to give public tests. She requested any person who had not received a message while there, who so desired, to send up some personal article. I sent up my pocket knife. When Mrs. Vlasek had held my knife in her hands a few moments she said: "In a short time you will receive a letter telling you of the dangerous illness of some one very dear to you. But do not be alarmed, nor worry; for three days later you will get get another letter saying the person is out of danger. And you may rest assured that he will recover."

August 2, I received a letter saying that my only grandson, at Niagara Falls, N. Y., was dangerously ill. Yesterday, three days later, I got another letter saying that the crisis was past, and there was every prospect of a rapid recovery. The boy had been ill four days when the prophecy was made about the letters; but the first letter, telling of his illness, was not written till a week later.

Here is another strong proof that we are surrounded by intelligences and laws of nature that we scientists know nothing about.

D. EDSON SMITH.

THE MARCH OF A NEW IDEA.

Full Suffrage to Women Granted in Many Places.

It is announced that Victoria, the last of the Australian states to grant full suffrage to women, has at length accorded it. This is a fresh illustration of the tendency of a new idea to run through a series of neighboring communities, as the measles will run through a whole family when one child catches it.

New Zealand led off by giving women the full ballot in 1893. South Australia did so in 1895, West Australia in 1900, and New South Wales in 1902. In 1903 Tasmania and Queensland followed, like sheep over a wall; and the last remaining Australian state, Victoria, has now fallen into line.

A similar series has been observable with municipal suffrage in Great Britain. In 1869 that right was granted to the women of England; in 1881 of Scotland; and in 1898, with practically no opposition, the women of Ireland were given a vote for all officers except members of Parliament.

The course of events in our own country has been much the same. The first American state to grant full suffrage to women was Wyoming, in 1869, and the three other states that have since followed the example all lie close to Wyoming, in a solid block, and all bordering upon one another.

Equal suffrage evidently does not lead to the dreadful results prophesied by its opponents, or we should not find that the communities nearest to those where it prevails are the ones which successively adopt it.

ALICE STONE BLACKWELL.

Not a Religion.

Relegate religion to the dogs. Let it feed on vinegar and ashes, while spiritual unfoldment concerns man.

It seems some speakers take pains to call Spiritualism "a religion." The fact is, Spiritualism is no more a religion than is chemistry, geology or mathematics.

It is a colossal philosophy, and every day growing larger and more commanding. It is a potentate. The apotheosis of civilization.

A dead man burst the cerements of death and the grave, to come forth and tell a sleeping world there is no death. Eternal life is man's destiny. He lives on and on. There is no end. Spiritual unfoldment is his life work. To emulate the gods is his normal ambition. To cultivate knowledge is his pastime.

Man cannot grow old. Senility in human life is a misnomer. He may reach maturity; and maturity grows more mature. The fullness of age may grow more full. He may reach perfection, rather, as the grammars have it, the pluperfect, or the more than perfect. Plus quam perfectus.

No! we want no religion in Spiritualism. It is a suspicious quantity—if quantity at all. It is useless and naturally meddlesome. It can do no good, and may make mischief. It is easier to hurt than to help.

A LETTER OF APPROVAL.

The Writer Is in Favor of Honesty in Every Department of Spiritualism.

What a feast of good things you have spread before your readers the past month. You certainly have outdone yourself.

That article of Nora Batchelor's in your issue of July 29, is worth a whole year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and it ought to be in every household in the land. I call it a very important educational number.

The bold stand you have taken in regard to the frauds and fakes in our ranks (as well as hypocrites outside), MUST COMMAND THE RESPECT, ADMIRATION AND CO-OPERATION OF ALL HONORABLE, UPRIGHT MEN. The ghouls should be putting in their time in some quiet, shady institution for the benefit of the state, and all honorable men and women. May the time come that they will get their just deserts on this side the "divide." May you long live, and have the stamina to stand up and combat all error, fraud and deception, knowing you will be sustained by all true souls on either side of the "divide."

Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp Outdone by an Astral Body.

Remarkable and Startling Manifestations of Spiritual Power, by which a Large and Varied Assortment of Valuable Antiques Is Collected in the home of Thomas Welton Stanford, and which Marvelous Collection Is Refused by President Jordan of the Leland Stanford, Jr. University, of California, as a Gift to that Institution. Astral Relics Are Declared Genuine. Mrs. Addie Ballou, Notary Public of San Francisco, and a Prominent Medium, Lecturer and Author, friend of Thomas Welton Stanford, says there can be no reasonable doubt as to the authenticity of antiquities taken from Assyrian and Egyptian tombs by the astral body of Charles Bailey. Scientists testify to the Australian Mystic's power.

Out of Australia has come a wonderful tale beginning with a blacksmith mystic, garnished with the loot of ancient tombs, tangling in its thread two millionaire philanthropists, the leading scientists of three continents, and a great university, and leading up to its climax in the bitterly criticised attitude of the great university's president. The blacksmith has left his forge to sit in an aura of mystery while his predatory astral double rifles the bodies of dead and dessicated queens. The philanthropists involved are Thomas Welton Stanford, brother of the late senator, and Jane Lathrop Stanford, who died so mysteriously in Honolulu a few months ago. The university concerned is the Leland Stanford Jr. University at Palo Alto. And the criticised university president is, therefore, Dr. David Starr Jordan.

In the library of Thomas Welton Stanford's magnificent home in the city of Melbourne there is a collection of priceless antiquities. On the tables, in cabinets, scattered in bewildering profusion are rare coins of the Bactrian dynasty, of the reign of the Ptolemies, of the day of old Rameses; octagonal clay tablets covered with cunieform inscriptions which were written in the dawn of history; the rings and bracelets, studded with precious stones, which decked the beauties contemporary with Cleopatra and the wife of Potiphar; a throne with a golden peacock on either arm and diamonds encrusting its back, once the seat of Shah Gian of Delhi; money minted at Persepolis of unalloyed silver, inscribed in Greek on one side and in Persian on the other.

These treasures and a hundred others not here listed could be had by Stanford University for the asking. But Dr. Jordan says that Stanford University does not want them and will not accept them.

Thomas Welton Stanford, who built the splendid library which was completed several years ago on the campus of the university founded in memory of his nephew, meant that his marvelous collection of antiquities should go to Palo Alto from the time when he began to acquire it. Mrs. Jane Lathrop Stanford was eager that this disposition should be made of the collection, too; and during the last few weeks of her life spent many hours in considering the details of shipping and disposal in this connection.

But Dr. Jordan, heedless of the wishes of either living or dead benefactors, has made it clear that this collection is not wanted in his domain, basing his objection on the assertion made by Thomas Welton Stanford that all these marvels were jumped from Egypt to Australia by the astral body of the blacksmith mystic, who took but twenty seconds for the round trip.

Not a Spiritualist.

Mr. Stanford is a Spiritualist. So was his brother, the Senator, and so was the late Mrs. Stanford. But Dr. Jordan is not. Time after time he has entered a vigorous denial of the creditability of psychic phenomena which other educators of the very highest rank have witnessed and believed in. That, say his critics, explains in part his refusal to accept this collection gathered under Spiritualistic auspices. But, according to the same critics, there are several other reasons which, if true, put Stanford's president in a position where he must expect much hostile comment. It is said, in short, that Dr. Jordan does not dare to accept these relics because their acceptance would subject him to ridicule from the press, because to admit their authenticity would be to swallow all his previous utterances on the silliness of the Spiritualistic theory, and because the students at the university who profess the orthodox religions would desert their classrooms in a body if this heresy were forced upon them.

Blacksmith Mahatma.

The name of the blacksmith medium, sensitive or mahatma, as he is variously known, and about whom all this discussion is really centered, is C. Bailey. His work as a communer with the inhabitants of the astral world, his undoubted ability to perform seeming miracles and his record of accomplished phenomena are common knowledge among scholars of the highest thought everywhere. Lombroso believes in him and the Spiritualistic theory that he represents. So does Alfred Russel Wallace, collaborator of Darwin and the foremost living European naturalist. So does Professor William Crookes, inventor of the radiometer and the otheoscope, fellow of the Royal Society in England and gold medalist of the French Academy of Sciences. So do Professor James of Harvard, Professor Hyslop of Columbia, Camille Flammarion, first among astronomers; Professor W. F. Barrett, F. R. S. E., professor of experimental physics and dean of the faculty of the Royal College of Sciences in Ireland. So do a hundred others of like eminence.

In Path of Progress.

The question these men are asking is on what grounds Dr. Jordan presumes to contradict the veracity of phenomena which he cannot disprove; why he is unwilling to investigate the manner in which the Thomas Welton Stanford collection was gathered; whether he thinks that one of the chief functions of a great institution of learning is not the study of just such tremendous problems as this one; whether he thinks that a university president does not cut a sorry figure when he stubbornly persists in blocking the path of progress and enlightenment. Just how much these inquiries are justified may be best inferred from the story of just what the blacksmith mystic, Bailey, has done in the case under consideration.

When Thomas Welton Stanford first met Bailey the latter was working at his forge, on the outskirts of Melbourne. The blacksmith had at that time acquired a neighborhood reputation as a medium, or sensitive, who could do wonderful things in spiritualistic manifestation. Stanford determined to investigate the man's ability in this direction, and offered Bailey a salary to forsake the forge and become an inmate of the Stanford house. Bailey consented, and soon began a series of seances that attracted the attention and excited the wonder of psychic students in every country.

Wonderful Seances.

The proceedings at these seances took place on the following general plan; Bailey was conducted into a room in the Stanford residence from which all the furniture had been removed with the exception of a table and enough chairs to seat those invited to be present. The medium was placed in a sack, so that he could not walk about, though his hands were left free. the room was darkened. Almost immediately, on every recorded occasion, voices spoke to the circle, from the ceiling, floors or corners of the room, as soon as the darkness was complete. The voices professed to be those of various disembodied entities, who had, in some previous period of time, walked the earth as men. The questions they asked were intelligent, as were their answers, when they themselves were questioned. And proof that they were not assuming a cloak of mystery to which they were not entitled was always gladly furnished.

For instance, one of the investigators would ask that an astral body, or control of the medium, should fetch into the circle something from a great distance. In less than a minute this was invariably done. Jungle sparrows from India, sitting in their nests and chirruping excitedly, were sometimes plumped down upon the circle. Coins of great antiquity and rarity were instantly produced, when asked for. Burmese rubies, a sacred turtle of Benares, contemporary coin from Cairo, a sea crab—still living—rings covered with verdigris and set with diamonds, sapphires, turquoises, all bearing the unmistakable evidences of having had their origin in past centuries—these offerings were common.

At one sitting, Stanford asked that a live ibis should be brought from Egypt. It was on the table in ten seconds. Some other member of the circle then requested that the astral body controlled by Bailey should bring a fish from the sea. Instantly, or as soon as the lights could be turned on, those present saw on the table a shovel-nosed shark, a foot and a half long and entangled in sea weed from which salt water still dripped. Nothing was too difficult for these forces of the supernatural. A skeptic once requested Bailey to produce a kind of bread called "chaputi," which is made in India and spoils when it has been baked twenty-four hours. The bread came on the heels of the damand for it, still hot from the oven.

Articles Produced.

To show how prolific was the ability of the ghostly messengers who sped on Bailey's errands, the following list is given of things produced at six successive sittings, a list which is submitted by those who were present at these sittings as being a true one, under oath:

Eight live birds from various countries.
One bird's egg from Ceylon.
Four nests from Egypt and India.
One Indian cap.
Eighty-seven antique coins, sixteen of which were produced in full daylight.
One newspaper in Arabic.
One leopard skin.
Four shrubs.
One pair of antique slipper shapes.
One blood garnet.
Two spinifex rubies.
Two green sapphires.
Two chrisobels.
Two cinnamon stones.
Six moon stones.
Three turquoises in full daylight.
Seven clay tablets, with inscriptions in hieroglyphics which were afterward translated, two of these tablets being produced in full daylight.
One Egyptian scarabeus.
One Bedouin woman's head-dress with sequins.
One witch doctor's belt.
Two live sacred turtles from Benares in full daylight.

Astonished Europe.

Naturally, the news of these astonishing performances was received in Europe, where men of the finest type of scholarship are not afraid to proclaim their interest in such matters, with much enthusiasm and curiosity. A movement was soon set on foot, as a result of this feeling, to induce Mr. Stanford to permit Bailey to journey to Italy and repeat his demonstrations before a specially selected circle of investigators. These investigators, headed by Lombroso and Schiapparelli, included such famous names as those of Count Baudi de Vesme, Professor Falcomer, Signora Virginia Paganini, the Florentine philanthropist, Professor Rossi de Guistiniani, and a score of others. Bailey went to Italy, repeated the phenomena of the Melbourne seances and convinced every one of these new witnesses of the genuineness of his psychic power.

A well known business man in this city, whose interest in psychic phenomena has made him a close student of such matters for more than ten years, said when asked yesterday about the probable value of the antiquities which Dr. Jordan is alleged to have refused, that he believed Dr. Jordan's attitude would, if persisted in, bring down upon his head the scorn and derision of men of learning all over the world. "Dr. Jordan," he continued, "has been able to make no better defense of his antagonism to the Spiritualistic theory than the almost unintelligible proposition contained in one of his interviews on this subject."

Dr. Jordan's Stand.

The interview referred to was then shown to a reporter and the passage specifically condemned was pointed out. This is what Dr. Jordan has said:

"In all cases of the alleged spirit manifestations which I have any knowledge of, the plain explanation lies in the nature of the nervous condition of the so-called mediums."

"My only regret in this talk with you concerning Dr. Jordan's position in this matter," said the local partisan of the Australian collection, "is that I am compelled to speak anonymously. In an age of boasted tolerance it is regrettable that one's bread and butter should be affected by one's open investigation into that which is the only means of solving here below the greatest problem that can exercise the human mind—the momentous question of individual immortality. While this stupidly antagonistic and uncharitable attitude in regard to Spiritualistic evidences and investigators thereof, of which Dr. Jordan is an example, might be intelligible in those whose coarse material instincts even the educative process cannot refine, it is quite beyond my comprehension in the quasi-refined classes, and more especially in churchmen whose Bible proclaims charity and teems with instances of spirit communion.

Strongly Criticised.

"Think of the eminent men who are, or were, believers in Spiritualism. Dr. Adam Clarke, the famous Bible commentator, was one. So was Gladstone, so was Lincoln, so, for that matter, was Harriet Beecher Stowe, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, and Lord Tennyson. Sir William Crookes is a Spiritualist, as are Professor Oliver Lodge of University College, London; Dr. John Elliotson, president of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society of London; Dr. Lockhart Robertson, F. R. S., formerly editor of the "British Journal of Mental Science"; Professor Broferio of Milan, Professor Margheri of Naples, Archdeacon Wilberforce of Westminster Abbey. What is the use of naming them all? The list is interminable. And who is Dr. Jordan that he should sneer at the views of men and women of this caliber?

"You may rely on my word for it that this refusal of Dr. Jordan's to accept the gift of antiquities gathered through psychic agencies by Thomas Welton Stanford, a gift meant, not for Dr. Jordan, but for the university of which Mr. Stanford is a patron and of which his brother was part founder, this refusal of Dr. Jordan's is going to focus the attention of broad-minded men upon him, more and more, as the circumstances become more widely known. He has already been accused of lacking sufficient courage to establish a chair of psychology at Stanford. What can be the final judgment on a display of narrowness so pitiful as this latest manifestation?"

Pleased With His Seances.

As I am not a member of any spiritual association, still I would beg for a little space in your paper. I wish to say that W. W. Aber has given seances in my house under the severest of test, such as a skeptic would demand, and friends were recognized readily—without asking names—by both skeptics and non-skeptics, and I am willing, with the undersigned names who attended same, to go before any notary public and take oath, that if W. W. Aber is not a genuine materializing medium, there is not any on this earth plane; and I will say that at the Winfield camp there was perfect harmony, except what was said of W. W. Aber by the two mediums, Mrs. Bryan and Mrs. Jaquet of Chicago, who did not and would not attend the seances, and I will say that W. W. Aber is too well known in Kansas to be injured by mediums that cannot compare with W. W. Aber and his wife, Sallie, in giving tests.

THE GOSPEL OF SONG.

Its Soul Elevating and Spiritualizing Influence.

Christianity is a religion of song. Its forerunner, Judaism, left the ages the rich legacy of the Psalms. Its founder, when he knew that death was imminent, sang one of those ancient songs with his friends. His followers early gathered for worship in song. Peter beguiled prison hours with hymns. Meeting in the catacombs, the early Christians made the galleries echo with their praise.

Today every revival is but a wave of song. The successful churches know the inspirational and ethical power of good hymns. The decline of many a church may be traced to the exclusion of the people from their share in the worship, to the attempt to praise God by proxy, or to substitute an artistic exhibition for an act of exaltation.

Not only in public worship, but in private life, hymns and songs have a significant influence. It is always easy to remember rhymed forms of truth; happy the heart with a store of good hymns; it is provisioned for many a long voyage. When the light burns low the heart is illumined by the memory of choice thoughts expressed in poetry, by song sung long ago. When the burden seems all too heavy, and the traveler would fain lie down in despair, he remembers some word of cheer, some stanza from another pilgrim's song, and he is strengthened for the road.

The song must take the place of the sigh. Happiness must rule the utterance. Even a hearty whistle may be a wonderful means of grace. Every natural expression of happiness becomes a religious act. The flowers praise the gardner by being beautiful and fragrant, and men praise God by being happy.

Song is a creator of happiness. You cannot sing songs of joy and nourish jealousy or hatred. A song of gratitude for things you have will often chase away the clouds of gloom over those who dread. It is a sin to be sad when you might as well be glad, and it is a sin to be silent when you might as well be singing.

Outbursts of song are indications of happiness. You cannot bottle up real happiness; it will break loose some way. When the man with a heart full of praise to God and love to man goes into a church which is fairly glistening with the ice of dignity he had better back out, or his happiness will explode and wake some one up. There are churches in which it would be a catastrophe if some one should sing out as though he meant it.

One song may surpass many a sermon in its power over a life. Great songs have sung men into battle and stiffened their melting hearts. Great songs have touched our clay and thrilled it to the divinely heroic. Songs sung in the stillness of the evening over the baby's cradle have ever been the mother's consecration for all her sacrifice. Hymns bring back hallowed memories; a strain of song will touch a chord no syllogism could sound; the simple words of an old hymn bring comfort and new hope to hearts broken and crushed.

We may not all make sermons, but we can all sing songs. To make the good singer there is needed not the artist but the heart. Sing away the gloom; sing in the gratitude, the joy, and love, and strength; sing in the courage, the aspiration and hope. Men may reject our sermons, but they will rejoice in our songs, for they are theirs also. The creeds change, but the old hymns stand.

Store your memory with the songs that time has tried. The thoughts that were meat and strength to others shall be your bread in desert days, your light in darkness. Praise God by a life of happy praise.—Chicago Tribune.

GERALD MASSEY.

Advice to Mediums From Actual Experiences.

Gerald Massey wishes me to say to the many readers of your Progressive Thinker that Spiritualism is at present passing through the cleasing fires of spiritual evolution—and those that are living up to the spiritual laws of nature's evolutionary forces within themselves will remain leaders in the philosophy and the phenomena of true Spiritualism; but many that are tools for earth-bound, Jesuit spirits, will be forced to leave the ranks of Spiritualism, for the higher spirits are coming to the rescue of all true spiritually-unfolded mediums.

For a sample of the cleansing power of spiritual truth, he wishes the readers of The Progressive Thinker, to be warned by the war between Japan and Russia, which is a battle between truth and falsehood—or the so-called heathen and christian. The gods of christianity are being tested, just as the spiritual mediums are being tested, by the power of the spirit. Spirit is the life and light of matter, when it is unfolded by the spiritual laws of evolution on the plane of spirituality in the human brain, where the voice of divinity speaks to each to follow the light of truth within, and not the man-made gods.

Advice to Mediums From Experience.

I have found out by Experience, that we mortals attract to us by wireless telegraphy the kind of spirits that are evolved on our plane of thought and action. If we are morally and spiritually unfolded, we attract to us both spirits and mortals that are seeking light, that have been led astray by false teachers; and loving thoughts sent out for the spiritual welfare of the mortal or spirit, like a white-winged dove, until it finds a chance to light in the mind of the recipient, then the vibration returns to bless the giver.

Therefore, it is more blessed to give than to receive. This is true Spiritualism—but it is only from the plane of spirituality that those white-winged messengers can be sent, for they are God's thoughts—or good thoughts—for the dividing line between good and evil, or God and devil, are in the human mind; the dividing line is between the finite senses and the Infinite or spiritual senses. God or good is the controlling power on the plane of humanity's infinite or spiritual senses.

IN A QUANDARY.

Knows the Phenomena Are Facts, But—?

Well, about that spirit business, "I'll take my say," and if you wish to publish it you may do so.

As would generally be understood, I am not a Spiritualist, do not belong, or anything like that, but in all matters I am willing to state the truth as I know it and stop at that.

Now, let us remember that there's a great difference between the things we believe and the things we know. I do not know that any spirit at any time has manifested itself to me, but I do know that the phenomena in the common phases, materialization, independent slate-writing, etc., do occur, and that they are not produced by fraud of any kind by any one dwelling in the flesh. If not spirits, what can these phenomena mean? Flatly, I do not know. And to my present thinking, I cannot know. I have searched the matter most carefully, and have not courted the conviction that back of all this there was not fraud lurking, as it frequently happens. I have witnessed much fraud in this line. But for a certainty, just as sure as I do know that I walk upon the earth, do I know that genuine phenomena can be found by any one who seeks earnestly. I have seen the genuine phenomena often, and only this much of the question have I settled in fifteen years, and I find little to encourage me to seek further, because just here there seems a limitation act sets in and demands that mortals wait.

I do not find the phenomena any more a fruitful source of contentment and comfortable faith and trust than other religions. Nor do I find Spiritualism a better character builder than many other forms of belief. So far as my observation can pierce, the above statements will hold good. Certainly the most worth while in this life is the development and maintenance of good character and habits.

No system seems any more perfect than the individuals who become interested in, and attach themselves to them. But strange as it may seem, I am obliged to state that in this, Spiritualism is not the best. I'll add, however, before closing, that of all the belief routes, reaching toward the beyond, so far as I know or believe, Spiritualism offers far the strongest proof that there's a to-morrow for our souls, a life for us beyond the mortal. I painfully regret that we cannot pierce the veil a little further and know more while in the flesh, but I am constrained to believe we cannot. It may be best

"That blindness to the future kindly given
That man may fill the circle marked by heaven."

Perhaps one would ask, "Well if you are not a Spiritualist, why do you take The Progressive Thinker?" Why, I'll tell ye: If there's anything new in science or philosophy worth while, or discovery of possible worth, why, I'll find it in The Progressive Thinker"—and added to this I find its matchless array of poems, its independence, and its freedom from creeds and rules that fetter men's minds and souls.

SOUNDS "SEEN" BY SIX IN FAMILY.

Record Case of Synesthesia Discovered by Physician in Case of Baltimore Clergyman and Children, Who Visualize Words Heard.

A rare case of the association of sound and color has been discovered in the city of Baltimore, Md. Dr. Henry Lee Smith, clinical assistant of the outpatient department of Jonns Hopkins Hospital, reports a remarkable example of synesthesia, where a well-known clergyman and all of his children experience the phenomena of this condition. This is the first case on record where a parent and every one of the children, in this instance numbering three daughters and two sons, have been affected in this way.

The phenomena of synesthesia are known as associated sensations, by which is meant constant and involuntary subjective sensations associated with actual perceptions. Among the rarest types of synesthesia is that known as "sound seeing." It is the constant and involuntary visualization of color associated with some definite sound. For instance, the sound of the vowel "a" carries with it to one person affected with synesthesia a sensation as if he were looking at a red object.

The same sound is blue to another and black to a third. The deeper vowel tones usually suggest the shades and the higher vowel tones the tints of colors.

In the case of the clergyman, Dr. Smith reports:

"The clergyman, aged 49 years, is a man of high attainments but of a retiring disposition. He states that since his early childhood he has associated the sound of each letter of the alphabet with a definite color. The letters f, j, k, r and x are a reddish brown; o and e are snow white; a, d, g, n, s, q, and u have the appearance of glycerin. The remaining letters are of a dull lead color, shading down to black. When a little boy he was laughed at by his older brothers and sisters because he anxiously asked them why a certain bay horse was given the white name of Charlie?"

This phenomenon is something worthy of the attention of Spiritualists.

A DISCOVERY.

We know not life until like old King Lear—
We're driven forth from ease and high repose,
And pride is seen frail as the perfumed rose;
And men no more our state or wealth revere;
And we with poverty of fools appear,
This will reality of love disclose;
Ah! then the wise man false appearance knows,
But he has paid the price for wisdom dear!
To cast aside our robes of pompous state,
And be where want and woe and care are rife,
'S to have fellowship with hated fate,
And feel the dark embitterments of strife;
But let it come when 'twill, or soon or late,
It is discovery of what is life!

MRS. PRIOR IN NEW ZEALAND.

Philosophical Reflections on the Mediumship of Mrs. Prior.

There are features in the objective representation of such mediumship as is so remarkably displayed by that amiable lady and faithful exponent of spiritual principles, Mrs. Lole F. Prior, calculated to suggest the profoundest reflection in the most philosophical mind.

Here in Wellington, although a stranger from the Great Republic, she plunged bravely into the turbulent waters of antagonistic skepticism, and breasted the waves, a credit to herself and an acquisition to the movement.

Cynics, with a slight smattering of psychological nomenclature, have whispered mental telepathy, collusion, hallucination, thought-forms controlled by illusory suggestion, but all these fine-spun theories pale their ineffectual fires before the absolute assurance of truth. The medium steps down the aisle, and by, or independent of, direct contact, enters the thought-spheres of her auditors, and reveals that which is concealed from all else beside. For instance, among many such, one illustration may be cited which makes a perplexed philosopher of the materialist.

Mrs. Prior sees a vessel storm-tossed in the northern hemisphere; the sails are torn to ribbons, and destruction is inevitable. A man is on deck, whom she faithfully describes, after which she sees him go down with the vessel.

This description is identified as the experience of the brother of a gentleman present, a sailor who was lost at sea.

Now, how could the medium see what had transpired years before, and thousands of miles away? To say she is clairvoyant, and saw the vision spiritually, is no solution. How did she see it while there was no data to go by? It could not be mental collusion, when Mrs. Prior was on the platform, and the brother of the spirit was seated in the body of the hall. How could it be a thought-form, when it was unmistakably a representation by a human being on the other side of life? Hallucination was not possible, because the description was unconditionally accepted and identified by the brother.

The spiritual philosopher sees in this manifestation a corroboration of mediumistic teaching, viz., that the spirit world is simply an embodiment of thought. The spirit, wishing to be recognized, impressed on the spiritual surroundings an external symbol of his internal mind; thought representations of certain circumstances. These became objective to the clairvoyant vision of the seer. Carry the suggestive lesson to its logical significance, and what a vista is opened to our view! There is nothing outside of man but thought, ethereal or embodied: nay, what is the human soul itself but an embodiment of thought?—C. G. Oyston, in the Harbinger of Light, Australia.

ALL THE BODY DOESN'T DIE AT ONCE.

Finds Life After Death—Doctor Tries an Interesting Experiment Upon a Guillotine Victim.

An extraordinary incident which occurred at the guillotining at Orleans of the murderer Languille has been interestingly explained by Professor Hartsmann, a famous Paris surgeon. When the blade of the guillotine fell Languille's head was completely severed from the trunk. A doctor who was in attendance immediately picked up the head and called the dead man's name. To the astonishment of all present the eyelids of the severed head opened wide and then closed again.

"Languille! Languille!" called the doctor a second time, and once more the eyelids lifted, but a third call met with no response.

Professor Hartmann says it is quite possible for a form of nervous life to exist after death. This would not be the case if the subject died naturally or of some disease, but undoubtedly it would be so in the case of a healthy person meeting with a sudden and violent death. When a strong man suddenly passes from life to death his bodily tissues show a considerable amount of resistance.

The professor says that he himself dissected the body of a man thirty-six hours after he had been executed and that on pricking with a needle the nerve of the thigh he discovered that it was alive.

In the case of Languille, says the professor, the eyelids opened not because the name of Languille was pronounced, but because the sound of the voice on the ears produced a reflex action on the nerves. They would have lifted had any other name been called.

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

To Be Held in Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19, and 20, 1905.

The thirteenth annual convention of the National Spiritualists' Association will be held in the First Unitarian Church, Eighth street and Mary Place, Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

Among those invited and expected to participate in the exercises are Rev. Dr. Austin, Will J. Erwood, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, Oscar Edgerly, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Mesdames H. P. Ressegue, R. S. Lillie, Laura G. Fixen, Eva McCoy, Margaret Gaule Ridinger, and a galaxy of others.

Come one and all to the greatest spiritual convention ever held.

Special railway rates on the certificate plan can be secured over all lines. Ask your railroad agent for certificate tickets to the National Spiritualists' Convention at Minneapolis; the round rate will be one and a third of a fare. Delegates and visitors desiring to receive the benefits of this special rate must have their tickets vised by our railroad agent at convention the last day, October 20, and pay 25 cents each for such vising.

Hotel Niccolet, a first-class hotel on the European plan, will be headquarters of the convention. Special rates for good rooms, one dollar per day each person. Write and secure your rooms from Shattuck & Wood, proprietors of the Niccolet Hotel, Minneapolis, Minn.

The annual reception to delegates and visitors will be held at the First Unitarian Church, Monday, October 16, at 8 p. m.

All are cordially invited. Admission free to all meetings.

A MOST EXCELLENT TEST.

Illustrating the Power of Prophecy Derived From a Knife.

To the Editor:—At the Mineral Park camp-meeting, on July 21, Mrs. Mary C. Vlasek, a local medium of Los Angeles, Cal., was called to the platform to give public tests. She requested any person who had not received a message while there, who so desired, to send up some personal article. I sent up my pocket knife. When Mrs. Vlasek had held my knife in her hands a few moments she said: "In a short time you will receive a letter telling you of the dangerous illness of some one very dear to you. But do not be alarmed, nor worry; for three days later you will get get another letter saying the person is out of danger. And you may rest assured that he will recover."

August 2, I received a letter saying that my only grandson, at Niagara Falls, N. Y., was dangerously ill. Yesterday, three days later, I got another letter saying that the crisis was past, and there was every prospect of a rapid recovery. The boy had been ill four days when the prophecy was made about the letters; but the first letter, telling of his illness, was not written till a week later.

Here is another strong proof that we are surrounded by intelligences and laws of nature that we scientists know nothing about.

D. EDSON SMITH.

THE MARCH OF A NEW IDEA.

Full Suffrage to Women Granted in Many Places.

It is announced that Victoria, the last of the Australian states to grant full suffrage to women, has at length accorded it. This is a fresh illustration of the tendency of a new idea to run through a series of neighboring communities, as the measles will run through a whole family when one child catches it.

New Zealand led off by giving women the full ballot in 1893. South Australia did so in 1895, West Australia in 1900, and New South Wales in 1902. In 1903 Tasmania and Queensland followed, like sheep over a wall; and the last remaining Australian state, Victoria, has now fallen into line.

A similar series has been observable with municipal suffrage in Great Britain. In 1869 that right was granted to the women of England; in 1881 of Scotland; and in 1898, with practically no opposition, the women of Ireland were given a vote for all officers except members of Parliament.

The course of events in our own country has been much the same. The first American state to grant full suffrage to women was Wyoming, in 1869, and the three other states that have since followed the example all lie close to Wyoming, in a solid block, and all bordering upon one another.

Equal suffrage evidently does not lead to the dreadful results prophesied by its opponents, or we should not find that the communities nearest to those where it prevails are the ones which successively adopt it.

ALICE STONE BLACKWELL.

Not a Religion.

Relegate religion to the dogs. Let it feed on vinegar and ashes, while spiritual unfoldment concerns man.

It seems some speakers take pains to call Spiritualism "a religion." The fact is, Spiritualism is no more a religion than is chemistry, geology or mathematics.

It is a colossal philosophy, and every day growing larger and more commanding. It is a potentate. The apotheosis of civilization.

A dead man burst the cerements of death and the grave, to come forth and tell a sleeping world there is no death. Eternal life is man's destiny. He lives on and on. There is no end. Spiritual unfoldment is his life work. To emulate the gods is his normal ambition. To cultivate knowledge is his pastime.

Man cannot grow old. Senility in human life is a misnomer. He may reach maturity; and maturity grows more mature. The fullness of age may grow more full. He may reach perfection, rather, as the grammars have it, the pluperfect, or the more than perfect. Plus quam perfectus.

No! we want no religion in Spiritualism. It is a suspicious quantity—if quantity at all. It is useless and naturally meddlesome. It can do no good, and may make mischief. It is easier to hurt than to help.

Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp Outdone by an Astral Body.

Remarkable and Startling Manifestations of Spiritual Power, by which a Large and Varied Assortment of Valuable Antiques Is Collected in the home of Thomas Welton Stanford, and which Marvelous Collection Is Refused by President Jordan of the Leland Stanford, Jr. University, of California, as a Gift to that Institution. Astral Relics Are Declared Genuine. Mrs. Addie Ballou, Notary Public of San Francisco, and a Prominent Medium, Lecturer and Author, friend of Thomas Welton Stanford, says there can be no reasonable doubt as to the authenticity of antiquities taken from Assyrian and Egyptian tombs by the astral body of Charles Bailey. Scientists testify to the Australian Mystic's power.

Out of Australia has come a wonderful tale beginning with a blacksmith mystic, garnished with the loot of ancient tombs, tangling in its thread two millionaire philanthropists, the leading scientists of three continents, and a great university, and leading up to its climax in the bitterly criticised attitude of the great university's president. The blacksmith has left his forge to sit in an aura of mystery while his predatory astral double rifles the bodies of dead and dessicated queens. The philanthropists involved are Thomas Welton Stanford, brother of the late senator, and Jane Lathrop Stanford, who died so mysteriously in Honolulu a few months ago. The university concerned is the Leland Stanford Jr. University at Palo Alto. And the criticised university president is, therefore, Dr. David Starr Jordan.

In the library of Thomas Welton Stanford's magnificent home in the city of Melbourne there is a collection of priceless antiquities. On the tables, in cabinets, scattered in bewildering profusion are rare coins of the Bactrian dynasty, of the reign of the Ptolemies, of the day of old Rameses; octagonal clay tablets covered with cuneiform inscriptions which were written in the dawn of history; the rings and bracelets, studded with precious stones, which decked the beauties contemporary with Cleopatra and the wife of Potiphar; a throne with a golden peacock on either arm and diamonds encrusting its back, once the seat of Shah Gian of Delhi; money minted at Persepolis of unalloyed silver, inscribed in Greek on one side and in Persian on the other.

These treasures and a hundred others not here listed could be had by Stanford University for the asking. But Dr. Jordan says that Stanford University does not want them and will not accept them.

Thomas Welton Stanford, who built the splendid library which was completed several years ago on the campus of the university founded in memory of his nephew, meant that his marvelous collection of antiquities should go to Palo Alto from the time when he began to acquire it. Mrs. Jane Lathrop Stanford was eager that this disposition should be made of the collection, too; and during the last few weeks of her life spent many hours in considering the details of shipping and disposal in this connection.

But Dr. Jordan, heedless of the wishes of either living or dead benefactors, has made it clear that this collection is not wanted in his domain, basing his objection on the assertion made by Thomas Welton Stanford that all these marvels were jumped from Egypt to Australia by the astral body of the blacksmith mystic, who took but twenty seconds for the round trip.

Not a Spiritualist.

Mr. Stanford is a Spiritualist. So was his brother, the Senator, and so was the late Mrs. Stanford. But Dr. Jordan is not. Time after time he has entered a vigorous denial of the creditability of psychic phenomena which other educators of the very highest rank have witnessed and believed in. That, say his critics, explains in part his refusal to accept this collection gathered under Spiritualistic auspices. But, according to the same critics, there are several other reasons which, if true, put Stanford's president in a position where he must expect much hostile comment. It is said, in short, that Dr. Jordan does not dare to accept these relics because their acceptance would subject him to ridicule from the press, because to admit their authenticity would be to swallow all his previous utterances on the silliness of the Spiritualistic theory, and because the students at the university who profess the orthodox religions would desert their classrooms in a body if this heresy were forced upon them.

Blacksmith Mahatma.

The name of the blacksmith medium, sensitive or mahatma, as he is variously known, and about whom all this discussion is really centered, is C. Bailey. His work as a communer with the inhabitants of the astral world, his undoubted ability to perform seeming miracles and his record of accomplished phenomena are common knowledge among scholars of the highest thought everywhere. Lombroso believes in him and the Spiritualistic theory that he represents. So does Alfred Russel Wallace, collaborator of Darwin and the foremost living European naturalist. So does Professor William Crookes, inventor of the radiometer and the otheoscope, fellow of the Royal Society in England and gold medalist of the French Academy of Sciences. So do Professor James of Harvard, Professor Hyslop of Columbia, Camille Flammarion, first among astronomers; Professor W. F. Barrett, F. R. S. E., professor of experimental physics and dean of the faculty of the Royal College of Sciences in Ireland. So do a hundred others of like eminence.

In Path of Progress.

The question these men are asking is on what grounds Dr. Jordan presumes to contradict the veracity of phenomena which he cannot disprove; why he is unwilling to investigate the manner in which the Thomas Welton Stanford collection was gathered; whether he thinks that one of the chief functions of a great institution of learning is not the study of just such tremendous problems as this one; whether he thinks that a university president does not cut a sorry figure when he stubbornly persists in blocking the path of progress and enlightenment. Just how much these inquiries are justified may be best inferred from the story of just what the blacksmith mystic, Bailey, has done in the case under consideration.

When Thomas Welton Stanford first met Bailey the latter was working at his forge, on the outskirts of Melbourne. The blacksmith had at that time acquired a neighborhood reputation as a medium, or sensitive, who could do wonderful things in Spiritualistic manifestation. Stanford determined to investigate the man's ability in this direction, and offered Bailey a salary to forsake the forge and become an inmate of the Stanford house. Bailey consented, and soon began a series of seances that attracted the attention and excited the wonder of psychic students in every country.

Wonderful Seances.

The proceedings at these seances took place on the following general plan; Bailey was conducted into a room in the Stanford residence from which all the furniture had been removed with the exception of a table and enough chairs to seat those invited to be present. The medium was placed in a sack, so that he could not walk about, though his hands were left free. the room was darkened. Almost immediately, on every recorded occasion, voices spoke to the circle, from the ceiling, floors or corners of the room, as soon as the darkness was complete. The voices professed to be those of various disembodied entities, who had, in some previous period of time, walked the earth as men. The questions they asked were intelligent, as were their answers; when they themselves were questioned. And proof that they were not assuming a cloak of mystery to which they were not entitled was always gladly furnished.

For instance, one of the investigators would ask that an astral body, or control of the medium, should fetch into the circle something from a great distance. In less than a minute this was invariably done. Jungle sparrows from India, sitting in their nests and chirruping excitedly, were sometimes plumped down upon the circle. Coins of great antiquity and rarity were instantly produced, when asked for. Burmese rubies, a sacred turtle of Benares, contemporary coin from Cairo, a sea crab —still living—rings covered with verdigris and set with diamonds, sapphires, turquoises, all bearing the unmistakable evidences of having had their origin in past centuries—these offerings were common.

At one sitting, Stanford asked that a live ibis should be brought from Egypt. It was on the table in ten seconds. Some other member of the circle then requested that the astral body controlled by Bailey should bring a fish from the sea. Instantly, or as soon as the lights could be turned on, those present saw on the table a shovel-nosed shark, a foot and a half long and entangled in sea weed from which salt water still dripped. Nothing was too difficult for these forces of the supernatural. A skeptic once requested Bailey to produce a kind of bread called "chaputi," which is made in India and spoils when it has been baked twenty-four hours. The bread came on the heels of the damand for it, still hot from the oven.

Articles Produced.

To show how prolific was the ability of the ghostly messengers who sped on Bailey's errands, the following list is given of things produced at six successive sittings, a list which is submitted by those who were present at these sittings as being a true one, under oath:

Eight live birds from various countries.
One bird's egg from Ceylon.
Four nests from Egypt and India.
One Indian cap.
Eighty-seven antique coins, sixteen of which were produced in full daylight.
One newspaper in Arabic.
One leopard skin.
Four shrubs.
One pair of antique slipper shapes.
One blood garnet.
Two spinifex rubies.
Two green sapphires.
Two chrisobels.
Two cinnamon stones.
Six moon stones.
Three turquoises in full daylight.
Seven clay tablets with inscriptions in hieroglyphics which were afterward translated, two of these tablets being produced in full daylight.
One Egyptian scarabeus.
One Bedouin woman's head-dress with sequins.
One witch doctor's belt.
Two live sacred turtles from Benares in full daylight.

Astonished Europe.

Naturally, the news of these astonishing performances was received in Europe, where men of the finest type of scholarship are not afraid to proclaim their interest in such matters, with much enthusiasm and curiosity. A movement was soon set on foot, as a result of this feeling, to induce Mr. Stanford to permit Bailey to journey to Italy and repeat his demonstrations before a specially selected circle of investigators. These investigators, headed by Lombroso and Schiaparelli, included such famous names as those of Count Baudi de Vesme, Professor Falcomer, Signora Virginia Paganini, the Florentine philanthropist, Professor Rossi de Guistiniani, and a score of others. Bailey went to Italy, repeated the phenomena of the Melbourne seances and convinced every one of these new witnesses of the genuineness of his psychic power.

A well known business man in this city, whose interest in psychic phenomena has made him a close student of such matters for more than ten years, said when asked yesterday about the probable value of the antiquities which Dr. Jordan is alleged to have refused, that he believed Dr. Jordan's attitude would, if persisted in, bring down upon his head the scorn and derision of men of learning all over the world. "Dr. Jordan," he continued, "has been able to make no better defense of his antagonism to the Spiritualistic theory than the almost unintelligible proposition contained in one of his interviews on this subject."

Dr. Jordan's Stand.

The interview referred to was then shown to a reporter and the passage specifically condemned was pointed out. This is what Dr. Jordan has said:

"In all cases of the alleged spirit manifestations which I have any knowledge of, the plain explanation lies in the nature of the nervous condition of the so-called mediums."

"My only regret in this talk with you concerning Dr. Jordan's position in this matter," said the local partisan of the Australian collection, "is that I am compelled to speak anonymously. In an age of boasted tolerance it is regrettable that one's bread and butter should be affected by one's open investigation into that which is the only means of solving here below the greatest problem that can exercise the human mind—the momentous question of individual immortality. While this stupidly antagonistic and uncharitable attitude in regard to Spiritualistic evidences and investigators thereof, of which Dr. Jordan is an example, might be intelligible in those whose coarse material instincts even the educative process cannot refine, it is quite beyond my comprehension in the quasi-refined classes, and more especially in churchmen whose Bible proclaims charity and teems with instances of spirit communion.

Strongly Criticised.

"Think of the eminent men who are, or were, believers in Spiritualism. Dr. Adam Clarke, the famous Bible commentator, was one. So was Gladstone, so was Lincoln, so, for that matter, was Harriet Beecher Stowe, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, and Lord Tennyson. Sir William Crookes is a Spiritualist, as are Professor Oliver Lodge of University College, London; Dr. John Elliotson, president of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society of London; Dr. Lockhart Robertson, F. R. S., formerly editor of the "British Journal of Mental Science"; Professor Broferio of Milan, Professor Margheri of Naples, Archdeacon Wilberforce of Westminster Abbey. What is the use of naming them all? The list is interminable. And who is Dr. Jordan that he should sneer at the views of men and women of this caliber?

"You may rely on my word for it that this refusal of Dr. Jordan's to accept the gift of antiquities gathered through psychic agencies by Thomas Welton Stanford, a gift meant, not for Dr. Jordan, but for the university of which Mr. Stanford is a patron and of which his brother was part founder, this refusal of Dr. Jordan's is going to focus the attention of broad-minded men upon him, more and more, as the circumstances become more widely known. He has already been accused of lacking sufficient courage to establish a chair of psychology at Stanford. What can be the final judgment on a display of narrowness so pitiful as this latest manifestation?"

Pleased With His Seances.

As I am not a member of any spiritual association, still I would beg for a little space in your paper. I wish to say that W. W. Aber has given seances in my house under the severest of test, such as a skeptic would demand, and friends were recognized readily—without asking names—by both skeptics and non-skeptics, and I am willing, with the undersigned names who attended same, to go before any notary public and take oath, that if W. W. Aber is not a genuine materializing medium, there is not any on this earth plane; and I will say that at the Winfield camp there was perfect harmony, except what was said of W. W. Aber by the two mediums, Mrs. Bryan and Mrs. Jaquet of Chicago, who did not and would not attend the seances, and I will say that W. W. Aber is too well known in Kansas to be injured by mediums that cannot compare with W. W. Aber and his wife, Sallie, in giving tests.

THE GOSPEL OF SONG.

Its Soul Elevating and Spiritualizing Influence.

Christianity is a religion of song. Its forerunner, Judaism, left the ages the rich legacy of the Psalms. Its founder, when he knew that death was imminent, sang one of those ancient songs with his friends. His followers early gathered for worship in song. Peter beguiled prison hours with hymns. Meeting in the catacombs, the early Christians made the galleries echo with their praise.

Today every revival is but a wave of song. The successful churches know the inspirational and ethical power of good hymns. The decline of many a church may be traced to the exclusion of the people from their share in the worship, to the attempt to praise God by proxy, or to substitute an artistic exhibition for an act of exaltation.

Not only in public worship, but in private life, hymns and songs have a significant influence. It is always easy to remember rhymed forms of truth; happy the heart with a store of good hymns; it is provisioned for many a long voyage. When the light burns low the heart is illumined by the memory of choice thoughts expressed in poetry, by song sung long ago. When the burden seems all too heavy, and the traveler would fain lie down in despair, he remembers some word of cheer, some stanza from another pilgrim's song, and he is strengthened for the road.

The song must take the place of the sigh. Happiness must rule the utterance. Even a hearty whistle may be a wonderful means of grace. Every natural expression of happiness becomes a religious act. The flowers praise the gardner by being beautiful and fragrant, and men praise God by being happy.

Song is a creator of happiness. You cannot sing songs of joy and nourish jealousy or hatred. A song of gratitude for things you have will often chase away the clouds of gloom over those who dread. It is a sin to be sad when you might as well be glad, and it is a sin to be silent when you might as well be singing.

Outbursts of song are indications of happiness. You cannot bottle up real happiness; it will break loose some way. When the man with a heart full of praise to God and love to man goes into a church which is fairly glistening with the ice of dignity he had better hack out, or his happiness will explode and wake some one up. There are churches in which it would be a catastrophe if some one should sing out as though he meant it.

One song may surpass many a sermon in its power over a life. Great songs have sung men into battle and stiffened their melting hearts. Great songs have touched our clay and thrilled it to the divinely heroic. Songs sung in the stillness of the evening over the baby's cradle have ever been the mother's consecration for all her sacrifice. Hymns bring back hallowed memories; a strain of song will touch a chord no syllogism could sound; the simple words of an old hymn bring comfort and new hope to hearts broken and crushed.

We may not all make sermons, but we can all sing songs. To make the good singer there is needed not the artist but the heart. Sing away the gloom; sing in the gratitude, the joy, and love, and strength; sing in the courage, the aspiration and hope. Men may reject our sermons, but they will rejoice in our songs, for they are theirs also. The creeds change, but the old hymns stand.

Store your memory with the songs that time has tried. The thoughts that were meat and strength to others shall be your bread in desert days, your light in darkness. Praise God by a life of happy praise.—Chicago Tribune.

GERALD MASSEY.

Advice to Mediums From Actual Experiences.

Gerald Massey wishes me to say to the many readers of your Progressive Thinker that Spiritualism is at present passing through the cleasing fires of spiritual evolution—and those that are living up to the spiritual laws of nature's evolutionary forces within themselves will remain leaders in the philosophy and the phenomena of true Spiritualism; but many that are tools for earth-bound, Jesuit spirits, will be forced to leave the ranks of Spiritualism, for the higher spirits are coming to the rescue of all true spiritually-unfolded mediums.

For a sample of the cleansing power of spiritual truth, he wishes the readers of The Progressive Thinker, to be warned by the war between Japan and Russia, which is a battle between truth and falsehood—or the so-called heathen and christian. The gods of christianity are being tested, just as the spiritual mediums are being tested, by the power of the spirit. Spirit is the life and light of matter, when it is unfolded by the spiritual laws of evolution on the plane of spirituality in the human brain, where the voice of divinity speaks to each to follow the light of truth within, and not the man-made gods.

Advice to Mediums From Experience.

I have found out by experience, that we mortals attract to us by wireless telegraphy the kind of spirits that are evolved on our plane of thought and action. If we are morally and spiritually unfolded, we attract to us both spirits and mortals that are seeking light, that have been led astray by false teachers; and loving thoughts sent out for the spiritual welfare of the mortal or spirit, like a white-winged dove, until it finds a chance to light in the mind of the recipient, then the vibration returns to bless the giver.

Therefore, it is more blessed to give than to receive. This is true Spiritualism—but it is only from the plane of spirituality that those white-winged messengers can be sent, for they are God's thoughts—or good thoughts—for the dividing line between good and evil, or God and devil, are in the human mind; the dividing line is between the finite senses and the Infinite or spiritual senses. God or good is the controlling power on the plane of humanity's infinite or spiritual senses.

Knows the Phenomena Are Facts, But—?

Well, about that spirit business, "I'll take my say," and if you wish to publish it you may do so.

As would generally be understood, I am not a Spiritualist, do not belong, or anything like that, but in all matters I am willing to state the truth as I know it and stop at that.

Now, let us remember that there's a great difference between the things we believe and the things we know. I do not know that any spirit at any time has manifested itself to me, but I do know that the phenomena in the common phases, materialization, independent slate-writing, etc., do occur, and that they are not produced by fraud of any kind by any one dwelling in the flesh. If not spirits, what can these phenomena mean? Flatly, I do not know. And to my present thinking, I cannot know. I have searched the matter most carefully, and have not courted the conviction that back of all this there was not fraud lurking, as it frequently happens. I have witnessed much fraud in this line. But for a certainty, just as sure as I do know that I walk upon the earth, do I know that genuine phenomena can be found by any one who seeks earnestly. I have seen the genuine phenomena often, and only this much of the question have I settled in fifteen years, and I find little to encourage me to seek further, because just here there seems a limitation act sets in and demands that mortals wait.

I do not find the phenomena any more a fruitful source of contentment and comfortable faith and trust than other religions. Nor do I find Spiritualism a better character builder than many other forms of belief. So far as my observation can pierce, the above statements will hold good. Certainly the most worth while in this life is the development and maintenance of good character and habits.

No system seems any more perfect than the individuals who become interested in, and attach themselves to them. But strange as it may seem, I am obliged to state that in this, Spiritualism is not the best. I'll add, however, before closing, that of all the belief routes, reaching toward the beyond, so far as I know or believe, Spiritualism offers far the strongest proof that there's a to-morrow for our souls, a life for us beyond the mortal. I painfully regret that we cannot pierce the veil a little further and know more while in the flesh, but I am constrained to believe we cannot. It may be best

That man may fill the circle marked by heaven."

Perhaps one would ask, "Well if you are not a Spiritualist, why do you take The Progressive Thinker?" Why, I'll tell ye: If there's anything new in science or philosophy worth while, or discovery of possible worth, why, I'll find it in The Progressive Thinker"—and added to this I find its matchless array of poems, its independence, and its freedom from creeds and rules that fetter men's minds and souls.

SOUNDS "SEEN" BY SIX IN FAMILY.

Record Case of Synesthesia Discovered by Physician in Case of Baltimore Clergyman and Children, Who Visualize Words Heard.

A rare case of the association of sound and color has been discovered in the city of Baltimore, Md. Dr. Henry Lee Smith, clinical assistant of the outpatient department of Johns Hopkins Hospital, reports a remarkable example of synesthesia, where a well-known clergyman and all of his children experience the phenomena of this condition. This is the first case on record where a parent and every one of the children, in this instance numbering three daughters and two sons, have been affected in this way.

The phenomena of synesthesia are known as associated sensations, by which is meant constant and involuntary subjective sensations associated with actual perceptions. Among the rarest types of synesthesia is that known as "sound seeing." It is the constant and involuntary visualization of color associated with some definite sound. For instance, the sound of the vowel "a" carries with it to one person affected with synesthesia a sensation as if he were looking at a red object.

The same sound is blue to another and black to a third. The deeper vowel tones usually suggest the shades and the higher vowel tones the tints of colors.

In the case of the clergyman, Dr. Smith reports:

"The clergyman, aged 49 years, is a man of high attainments but of a retiring disposition. He states that since his early childhood he has associated the sound of each letter of the alphabet with a definite color. The letters f, j, k, r and x are a reddish brown; o and e are snow white; a, d, g, n, s, q, and u have the appearance of glycerin. The remaining letters are of a dull lead color, shading down to black. When a little boy he was laughed at by his older brothers and sisters because he anxiously asked them why a certain bay horse was given the white name of Charlie?"

This phenomenon is something worthy of the attention of Spiritualists.

A DISCOVERY.

We know not life until like old King Lear—
We're driven forth from ease and high repose,
And pride is seen frail as the perfumed rose;
And men no more our state or wealth revere;
And we with poverty of fools appear,
This will reality of love disclose;
Ah! then the wise man false appearance knows,
But he has paid the price for wisdom dear!
To cast aside our robes of pompous state,
And be where want and woe and care are rife,
To have fellowship with hated fate,
And feel the dark embitterments of strife;
But let it come when 'twill, or soon or late,
It is discovery of what is life!

CITY OF LIGHT ASSEMBLY.

Mrs. Matilda Orr Hays Portrays the Interesting Events Occurring There.

Sunday, August 6, all nature seemed to have conspired to do her best to perfect the day when Mrs. R. S. Lillie was to be welcomed home to Lily Dale—bright sunshine, balmy breezes, placid lakes, blooming flowers—a day and conditions as ideal as could have existed in her far-off sunny city of the Golden Gate. Old friends and new were here to give her welcome, and once more listen to the beautiful inspirational thought of this great soul. The platform was banked with flowers—great spikes of gladioli in their gorgeous colorings, geraniums, roses, ferns—expressions of that great Over-Power, that force revealed in the face of a pansy as clearly as it is in the face of man—the God of true Spiritualism.

Loving messages were sent and read by the chairman from friends who could not attend the assembly; floral offerings and greeting from Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Cushman of Sylvania, Ohio, were sent, and helped to make bright the place and people. As those who have heard Mrs. Lillie speak know, she never knows what her subject will be until she takes her seat on the rostrum and it is given to her from the audience. Two subjects were thus given her on Sunday. The first, "The Soul—the Seen and Unseen," she wove into a poem full of beautiful, spiritual thought, and yet to the discerning ones full of such practical, helpful thought as takes hold of the inner consciousness, and there remains as seed, taking root to bloom out into the sweetest attributes of the mind and soul.

Her second subject, "Voices of the Times," she treated in a practical, forceful manner which carried conviction in its every line.

"All the great discoveries of the ages are but voices of the Infinite; the progress of the century just past has been greater than all the centuries combined preceding this, and are but voices calling mankind to higher planes of living—progression is the law. The steam car, the electric car, the telegraph and telephone are voices giving but a hint of the possibilities in this vast universe to which as yet mortal sight is blind.

"What voices do you as Spiritualists hear? One of the strongest voices calls mankind to united effort. Spiritualism was not sent to cultivate or create an ism. We listen to the voices and find they call for mankind to reach the needy, to reach those who need consolation; for the welfare and uplifting of humanity—for this Spiritualism came.

"What next? A call for honesty, integrity, and upright life. One of the greatest needs is to apply these principles to self or individual life—that which is you and I, the ego; let us live up to the highest ideals of Spiritualism.

"I am sometimes asked of certain phenomena 'Is it true?' I answer, wherever you find chaff there must be wheat; but I believe it possible to live up to such a state of spirituality that we will not need or want to drag our loved ones down into our earthly conditions in order to help us cultivate unselfishness, cultivate love, cultivate soul, cultivate the spirit. The time is luminous with promise. Every attribute of the human mind is to unfold harmoniously. Voices speak to you individually. You have aspirations never expressed; these are voices—listen to them, make the most of yourself, do the best you can, and again I say, listen to the voices, and be a child of the Infinite."

Sunday night a most enjoyable and successful meeting was held in the auditorium—psychometric readings by Annette J. Pettingill, and clairvoyant and clairaudient tests by Georgia Gladys Cooley. By special invitation of President Pettengill the former lady has consented to stay until the close of Assembly. Both she and Mrs. Cooley bring with them as workers that atmosphere of sincerity and high honor which would scorn deception in the slightest degree so much so, that did either feel their forces had forsaken them they would confess it before an audience of thousands rather than make the slightest approach to "fake" or false mediumship. Happily there is not the slightest indication of the spirit forces deserting either and on the occasion above mentioned both did marvelous work, proving their great psychic power to the satisfaction of all.

The musical part of Sunday night's program was sustained by the sweet singer, Mrs. Jessie Star Hawkes of Warren, Pa.

She has a mezzo-soprano voice with the contralto quality, and with broad culture and excellent method, has in her renditions been giving much satisfaction and pleasure to the large audiences.

Mr. de Vaux-Royer, the noted violinist, made his last appearance at the City of Light for this season, on Sunday night. He was accompanied on the piano by Mr. Lynn of California.

The lecture of Dr. John F. Geddes during the week was a masterful effort on the philosophy of Spiritualism.

Tuesday night, Aug. 8, was given over to the Lillies and California. A most enjoyable time was expected and none were disappointed. The first part of the evening was taken up with music—songs rendered by Prof. Uvedale and recitations by Miss Clara Clark; her delineation of the different characters in a monologue descriptive of the La Rue Races was graphic, full of action and enthusiastically received.

President John Lillie, at request of many friends, sang a song adapted from the old-time favorite, "The dearest spot on earth to me is home, sweet home."

But the event of the occasion was Mrs. Lillie's lecture on the subject of California. We regret that lack of space prevents the reproduction of the entire lecture, filled as it was with instruction and enthusiastic recital of the pleasure enjoyed during their eight years' residence in the golden state. She declared: "All the reading, all that we had heard from those who had lived in California had not prepared us for the reality. We were surprised to find such vastness in size; such beauty in vegetation and natural scenery. We remembered the maps in our geography of childhood, the great, wide waste termed the great American desert. Beyond this the Rocky Mountains with their snow-covered peaks pointing skyward; an hour's ride and we descend into the Sacramento Valley, where we gather great roses in full bloom, and eat oranges and other fruits, thoroughly ripened. In California you can find every kind of climate. Eight hundred miles in length and one to two hundred miles in width. California covers as much space as any other ten states on the Atlantic coast. Gold was discovered in 1848. The first organization of woman suffragists was formed in 1848. Spiritualism, the proof of the continuity of life, and the phenomena of intercourse with the loved ones passed over, was established in 1848—a great trinity that, don't you think?—gold, woman, Spiritualism!

In the very early days the priests or Franciscan fathers, as they were called, built missions for the education of the Indian tribes of which there were many. The Spanish sent soldiers to protect these missions. The architecture of their buildings was taken from Spain and Italy, and showed such artistic taste in construction that many small villages have patterned after them, and the majority of their houses, though simple, are beautiful works of art. The schools and educational advantages in general, are as good in California as in the older states.

Berkely College, the University of California, is free to all the children of the state, and both it and the world-renowned Stanford University give advantages for higher education equal to any, and surpassing many of the eastern institutions.

There are other good, though smaller schools all over the state.

The Stanfords—as is generally known, and was commented upon by the press at the time of Mrs. Stanford's passing, were avowed Spiritualists, and the influence of the higher thought as promulgated by and through the Stanford University at Palo Alto will be as wide reaching as only eternity can tell!

Very beautiful in application was Mrs. Lillie's description of the fertility of soil, the wonderful growth of roots, seeds, etc., carelessly thrown into a plat of ground intended for a dumping place for debris—the roots and branches probably cut away in the pruning of plants had been thrown there, taken root and produced great beds of geraniums, roses, etc., proving that even the waste places of that beautiful summer land are capable of producing strong, sturdy plants and beautiful blossoms, just as in the garden of the human heart—no matter how barren the soil—seeds of kindness and love may spring up and bloom out into a life of purity and uprightness. Mrs. Lillie's description was graphic as she told of the great calla lilies, the immense heliotrope, in some instances climbing over trellis or side of the house; roses climbing up and up until even the roof was covered; roses here, there, nothing but roses, roses everywhere!

The immense grape vine at Carpenteria, planted sixty years ago by a Spanish woman, which has attained such proportions as to have become a wonder. There is no tree in the forests about or in Lily Dale whose trunk is as large in circumference as this vine; in fact, the branches growing out from the main trunk are large as ordinary trees; that the great beams which form a support or trellis resemble those forming the roof of the great auditorium at Lily Dale, its dimensions being 120 by 130 feet. Last year the product of this one California grapevine was eleven tons of fruit, and it wasn't an extraordinary good year for grapes, either! Mrs. Lillie's lecture was exceedingly interesting and instructive from start to finish, and was thoroughly enjoyed by the large audience in the auditorium.

The Wednesday and Saturday night dances are proving still greater attractions as the season advances. Not only do the permanent visitors, both young and old, attend, but excursion trains bring a great number of young folks from all points along the railroad lines for these semi-weekly social functions, which prove very brilliant affairs.

MATILDA ORR HAYS.

"Hard Problems of Scripture."

A Reply to the Animadversions of R. A. Torrey, D. D. By Moses Hull.

[Note.—The readers of The Progressive Thinker have been saved quite an infliction. I expected to have made about six articles, instead of the two I here send; but when I started from home on my recent trip I was sure I packed the book to which I was replying, together with notes and references I had made, in my trunk, but, alas, they seem to be hopelessly lost. As the subjects and papers have no intimate connection with each other, the readers will experience no loss in not having the lost documents. There were points in the lost book which contained more unpardonable mistakes than any yet reviewed. Perhaps in his remarks on Jonah and the whale he made worse blunders than in any other part of his pamphlet. He even denies the existence of scripture which I will be very happy to show him when we meet. M. H.]

Several times within the last half-dozen years has this 25-cent pamphlet, a reproduction from a Christian paper called "The Ram's Horn," been sent me with a request that I review it. As it contained the old-fashioned Christian arguments—arguments now being rapidly abandoned, on questions which I as a Spiritualist have long since laid on the shelf as matters of little importance, I have thus far ignored these requests; also some other effusions of this Doctor of Divinity. For the sake of those to whom the arguments of this man are new, and to whom they may seem strong, I will pay a little attention to them.

This man Torrey, in this, and in his other books and articles manifests a kind of know-it-all spirit, which says to all others: I know, and all who differ from me are ignoramuses or fools.

Here are a few specimens of his manner of treating those who hold different opinions from him. He is Sir Oracle, when he speaks "let no dog dare wag his tongue." For instance he says: "In this assertion the infidel simply displays his ignorance of the Bible." "The one who says this displays his ignorance of modern science." "The one who says so simply displays his ignorance of the history of biblical interpretation."

When it is learned that all of these expressions occur within less than thirty lines, we can form something of an idea of how thoroughly determined Rev. Mr. Torrey is to convince his readers that the people whom he designates as "infidels" are nothing more nor less than a mob of ignoramuses. Such expressions are kept up ad nauseam.

One of the most honorable attorneys in America is by this man called "an arrant hypocrite."

The only infidel whom he mentions by name is the late lamented Col. Robert G. Ingersoll. He says: "The unclean classes, both men and women, were devoted admirers of Col. Ingersoll."

This statement is somewhat equivocal. It does not tell us whether admiring Col. Ingersoll made people "unclean," or whether people were attracted to, and admired Col. Ingersoll because they were unclean. The only thing positively known is, that somehow Ingersoll had an affinity for uncleanness, or uncleanness had an affinity for Ingersoll—this clean Reverend has left us in the dark as to which is true.

It is enough for me to here challenge his reverence to show where Ingersoll ever uttered one sentence or one word in favor of uncleanness or bordering on uncleanness; one sentence, one word in favor of immorality; one sentence, one word in favor of injustice; one sentence, one word, the carrying out of which would render a person either wicked or unclean.

Will this gentleman, who says, "The unclean classes, both men and women, are devoted admirers of Col. Ingersoll," show where Ingersoll, either by tongue or pen, uttered one sentence, one word, which might not be read in any audience of ladies and gentlemen without bringing a blush to the cheeks of pure and modest people?

Can Rev. Mr. Torrey say as much for his Bible?

No! In the pamphlet under review he several times confesses that he can not.

I must not spend more time in general remarks. I will come directly to the book. The subjects on which this pamphlet animadverts are "The First Chapter of Genesis," "Where Did Cain Get His Wife?" "Human Sacrifices," "Slaughter of Canaanites," "Impure Bible Stories," "Contradictions in the Bible," "The Unrighteous Steward," "Was Jesus Three Days and Three nights in the Heart of the Earth?" "Will Those Who Reject Jesus as Their Savior Be Lost Eternally?"

The First Chapter of Genesis.

It is just possible that I may not find time and space to review all this man says on all of these subjects, but I will find room for a "few feeble remarks" on some of them, perhaps enough to convince him and some of his friends that, though we infidels often "display our ignorance," the people whom he is pleased to call infidels are not the only people who occasionally manifest ignorance.

In the first paragraph of this book the Rev. Mr. Torrey attacks infidels for believing that Gen. i, teaches that the world was made in six days of twenty-four hours each. He says: "In this assertion the infidel simply displays his ignorance of the Bible. Anyone at all familiar with the Bible knows that the use of the word "day" is not limited to periods of twenty-four hours. It is frequently used for a period of time of undefined length."

While I admit that in the Bible the word day has different meanings, in Gen. i, it means only the light part of the twenty-four hour day. Before I attempt to prove this by scripture, I would like, if this is ignorance, to point out the "ignorance displayed" by some of the greatest and wisest of the orthodox churches. Prof. Moses Stuart, of Andover, one of the finest scholars of his day, said: "To speak of six periods of time for the creation is flying in the face of scripture. Genesis expressly speaks of six days, each made up of the evening and morning." Thus the great professor of Hebrew of Andover University, in the estimation of this modern infidel-killer, "displays his ignorance." In the estimation of this learned professor of the Hebrew language, Rev. R. H. Torrey is himself an infidel.

Martin Luther, the father of Protestantism, said: "Moses spoke properly and plainly, and neither allegorically nor figuratively, when he said, the world, with all its creatures, was created in six days."

Even the Westminster Confession of Faith asserts that "all things, visible and invisible were created out of nothing in six days."

Melancthon, Luther's associate, asserted that "the world was made out of nothing in six days."

Adam Clarke, Benson and Bishop Horne, as well as the authors of the Cottage Bible all assert substantially the same thing.

The Bible itself makes the matter so plain that it is useless to quote commentaries.

Gen. ii:3 says: "And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it; because that in it he had rested from all his work which he had created and made."

Did God, when he got tired from his over-exertion, simply rest for a "period of time of undefined length"? And is that our Sabbath? The fourth of the ten commandments, after commanding the people to keep it holy, gives as a reason: "For in six days (that is, six periods of time of undefined length), the Lord made heaven and earth and sea and all that is in them, and rested on the seventh day; the seventh period of time of undefined length," wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day (period of time of undefined length), and hallowed it."—Ex. xx:11. In another place where the Sabbath is given, the writer says: "It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever, for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth and on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed."—Ex. xxxi:17.

Here I assert the impossibility of drawing any other rational conclusion than that God had a hard week's work, and needed and obtained a day's rest and refreshment. For this reason the Hebrews were commanded to rest on the day on which God rested.

The fact is, in the first and second chapters of Genesis are two different statements of the case written by two different individuals, worshipers, if worshipers at all, of two different Gods. One of these stories comes from the north—perhaps from Nineveh or Babylon, and the other from Egypt. The stories disagree on almost every point. The gods in the two chapters are not the same; nor are the men the same. In Gen. i, and in the first three verses of Gen. ii, the word God occurs thirty-one times, and every time comes from the word Elohim, which is plural, and should be rendered, "the gods." In the second and third chapters the word, Lord God, occurs nineteen times. It comes from the word J-H-V-H., sometimes spelled Yahveh. In the American Revised Version of the Bible it is eight thousand times rendered Jehovah.

The last thing the God Elohim did was to make man and woman in his own image and likeness, and commanded them to multiply and replenish the earth. This God then retires from business, and Jehovah takes his place. The first discovery that this Jehovah-god makes is that there is not a man to till he ground. Jehovah, when he made this discovery, went to work and made a man, but not a woman, out of the ground. See Gen. i:2, 27 and ii:7.

There are many points of difference in the work of these two Gods. In Gen. i:12, God caused the earth to bring forth grass, herbs, etc. In chapter ii, every plant and herb of the field was made before it was in the earth. In i:20, 27 God made great whales and every creeping thing and winged fowl, and living creature before he made man. In Gen. ii:7, the Lord God made man first; then after deciding that it was not good for man to be alone, he made the beasts out of dirt as he had made man. After this he put man to sleep, and took a bone out of him and made a woman out of that. In Gen. i, the waters "brought forth" about everything; in chapter ii, man and beast, in fact everything was made out of the ground.

The fact is, the contradictions in the Book of Genesis—not merely the first two chapters, but all through the book, can only be harmonized by taking the position that the book had two authors—perhaps one of them was a Ninevite or a Babylonian and the other an Egyptian.

PERSONAL.

Harrison D. Barrett, President of the N. S. A., Explains His Attitude Towards Mediumship.

To the Editor:—Permit me to make a personal statement to the Spiritualists of America. I am in receipt of numerous letters from all sections of the nation with regard to my knowledge of and attitude toward mediumship. Some of the writers declare that, as I am not a medium, I cannot know anything of phenomena, nor of the conditions required for successful seances. Let me say to these good people that I have been a medium all my life, and have been able to use my psychical powers for more than twenty-five years, as a servant of the spirit world. I believe in and honor mediumship more to-day than I ever did in my life. I prize my own medial powers as pearls beyond price, and depend upon them for many of my messages from the spirit side of life.

To those who accuse me of being an enemy to mediums, I say openly that there is not an atom of truth in the assertion. It is a falsehood of the blackest dye, and he who utters it, after seeing these words, utters a falsehood, and knows it to be false. I have never attacked a medium in my life, nor said one word against genuine psychic phenomena. I have attacked counterfeiters and the bogus manifestations they have exploited in the sacred name of Spiritualism, without fear or favor, and I shall continue to do so, regardless of the wounded birds who are fluttering in thick droves about the information bureaux of the "Unknown Brotherhood," to which they belong!

Just why any earnest, honest, sincere Spiritualist or medium should be so terribly upset when an attack is made upon fraud, is beyond my comprehension. If any one calling himself a Spiritualist is hurt by such attacks, there are but three explanations to be offered for his position: First, he may be an honest, overcredulous dupe (as several of my friends once were); second, if not a dupe, he is himself a fraud; or third, he is an abettor of fraud. It is safe to conclude, therefore, that those who defend counterfeit mediumship and apologize for rascality in phenomena belong to one or the other of these three classes, and they should be dealt with accordingly.

I ACCEPT EVERY PHASE OF MEDIUMSHIP enumerated by Andrew Jackson Davis as having been verified in Psychism, and hold that the phenomena produced in their name can be scientifically demonstrated. I am not an enemy to phenomena; I want phenomena in a geometrically increasing ratio, but I want them all to be honest, straightforward, genuine! I will not retract one thing I have said against counterfeiting in mediumship; I will not apologize for fraud, nor will I cover it up for the sake of any one who happens to be hit by a stray arrow from the quiver of truth. Spiritualism is too pure, too sacred to be thus traduced and cruelly misrepresented by those who have stolen its name, but cunningly omitted all of its virtues.

Yours for mediumship and true Spiritualism,

HARRISON D. BARRETT.

Sunapee Lake, N. H.

After the rain storm of last Sunday and Monday, August 1 was very nice weather. At 2:30 p. m., with the secretary in the chair, in the absence of the president and vice-president. Lecture and tests by Mrs. Sadie L. Hand, the subject, It Is Just a Step Beyond. The lecture was well received by all, and Mrs. Hand is making a host of friends at this camp.

August 3, at 2:30 p. m., a lecture by Mrs. Hand. A good meeting and a good attendance.

August 4, at 2:30 p m., lecture by Wellman C. Whitney. Had good weather and a good meeting, and the speaker was well received.

August 5, no meeting; at 7:45 p. m., a seance in the hall by Mr. Whitney. Had a good audience and the messages were well received and recognized.

Had good weather all of the week, and this closed the first week of Sunapee Lake camp-meeting.

August 6, at 10:30 a. m.—Sunday morning. The day opened fine, the sun shining on the mountains around old Sunapee Lake, with all of the cottages well filled up, and the hotel also, with John Gage, the president in the chair, who presented Mr. Wellman C. Whitney as the speaker for the forenoon. Had a good audience which was well pleased with the lecture, and the spirit messages were all recognized. At 1.15 p. m., seance in the hall by Mr. Whitney. About one hundred people in the hall to receive messages. At 2:30 p. m., lecture by Edgar W. Emerson, who delivered one of his best lectures to a large audience. He was at his best.

LORENZO WORTHEN.

A VERY PLEASANT SURPRISE.

The members of the Spiritual Society of Truthseekers, of St. Louis, Mo., met on Monday evening, August 7, at the home of Rev. Josie K. Folsom and C. W. Stewart, who were united in marriage July 19, and after an hour spent in pleasant conversation, Mrs. M. E. Rea, wife of Capt. Rea, of the Metropolitan Force, in an appropriate speech presented to Mrs. Folsom and Mr. Stewart as a wedding present, a most lovely double set of silver pearl-handled knives and forks, in an elegant case. The surprise was so complete that the newly wedded couple were almost speechless, but they rallied and in appropriate remarks accepted the gift and pledged their united efforts anew to the upbuilding the cause of spiritual truth in St. Louis. It was a very pleasant occasion.

THE FAR WEST.

Spiritualism as It Appears in Washington.

It has been some time since I have contributed anything to your valuable paper from this part of the world, nevertheless I have enjoyed the feast of good things found in its columns.

We are just now having a feast of good things at the state Spiritualist camp-meeting being held at Edgewood, between Seattle and Tacoma, which opened July 30, the meeting being opened at 11 a. m., by that grand old worker and former state president, P. E. Mills, who gave us an inspiring address in which he instructed his hearers to stand strong for pure Spiritualism upon their rostrums.

At 2:30 p. m., Mr. Will C. Hodge took the platform and spoke of the Naturalism of Spiritualism, which greatly inspired those who listened. Mr. Hodge has the happy faculty of explaining our philosophy so well that the most hard-headed skeptic would be compelled to stop and think, and say in the words of Paul: Almost thou persuadest me to become a Spiritualist.

In the evening a large audience came together and after a song which was beautifully rendered by Mrs. Lucille Kenworthy, your correspondent made the address of the evening.

I wish to state that the most pleasing feature of this camp is the officers, who are whole-souled, doing all they possibly can to make every one feel at home, and one can not but feel the uplifting conditions thrown to them from those whom they meet at this camp. R. F. Little, our genial state president, is so kind and affable, broad and liberal, that those who come in his vibrations feel spiritually benefited.

As for Mr. George Knowlden, every Spiritualist in this far West can testify to the great esteem in which he is held. But as I am writing this for my eastern friends who will not have the privilege of visiting this camp, but who, I hope, will avail themselves when opportunity presents itself to visit this camp sometime in the future, I think it best for them to know what we are doing for our grand old philosophy out on this western coast.

I at the present time am holding meetings in Seattle, but later on expect to go to California. I send greetings to my many eastern friends, trusting that we shall all meet again soon.

THE RELIGION OF NATURE.

A Glance at Some of the Most Prominent Teachings of the New Testament.

Spiritualism is, in fact, the religion of Nature, and has been in existence ever since humanity has had coherent thought on the continuity of life. Of course, the ideas of primitive man on the subject of the after life, were crude and imperfect, but those ideas were cherished as of inestimable value. As man has slowly advanced along the avenue of progress, those ideas have become more and more reasonable and sane. There is even now an abundance of room for improvement in the religious beliefs of the present age.

There is not a single important tenet of the Christian faith of to-day that is not borrowed from the teachings of ancient Spiritualism. In other words, if the essential canons of Spiritualism were fully eliminated from the gospels and other writings of the New Testament, there would be nothing left worth contending for.

Spiritualism has always taught the continuity of life, the immortality of the soul. It has ever maintained that the spirits of the departed have the power, under proper conditions, to commune with their friends, who are traveling the rough and rugged road of human life. And it has shown that we are required to serve a hard apprenticeship on earth, in order that we may become individualized in spirit; and thus fitting us for the discharge of those higher duties which await us, on the other side of the grave.

We will now take a glance at some of the most prominent teachings of the New Testament. In the second epistle of St. Paul to Timothy, the great apostle said that Christ has abolished death" and had brought life and immortality to light." In other words that Jesus Christ had brought to light the transcendent truth that the human soul is immortal. How did Christ bring to light that great truth? Let us see. Before his crucifixion Christ informed his disciples, so we are informed by sacred writ, that he would be crucified, but that he would rise again in glory. As he had foretold, upon the cruel cross he gave up the ghost, and his earthly body was entombed. But he rose again from the tomb and appeared to many of his friends, and remained here upon this earth of ours for forty days. He conversed freely with his disciples and others, so that the fact of his resurrection could not be questioned by any fair-minded person. He also spoke from out a heavenly light to St. Paul, while the latter was on his way to Damascus to persecute and slaughter the disciples of the Lord. He converted St. Paul and the great apostle fought a good fight and kept the faith to the end of his earthly pilgrimage. At this point it is eminently proper to say that during the period in which St. Paul lived and labored, he was, by far, the greatest advocate of the immortality of the soul. His religion was Spiritualism and not materialism. Nothing can be more beautiful and glorious than his allusions to the natural body and the spiritual body, and his assurance that death shall be swallowed up in victory. In short, the great apostle demonstrated that no grave was ever dug deep enough to hold a human soul.

To many of the children of men Christ did, indeed, bring life and immortality to light. He demonstrated, by his own resurrection, that the soul of man survives the tomb and that it is immortal. And when he had completed this great mission upon the earth—when he had finished the work which God gave him to do, he entered upon that higher phase of life in the great beyond.

Christ impressed upon all those with whom he came in contact that God is no respecter of persons. No one, certainly, can doubt that such then was, now is and ever will be a truth as eternal as God Himself. From this great truth it follows that the men and women of the present age of the world, are just as much beneficiaries of the bounties of heaven, as the men and women of any other period of the world's history.

As the spirits of Moses and Elias appeared to Christ and the disciples at the transfiguration, so the spirits of those who have passed through the portals of death, commune with the living of to-day. There is no reason why the American people of this day and generation should not merit the approval of Heaven, as much as any other people that ever existed on the face of God's green earth.

In his epistle to the Ephesians, St. Paul said there is "one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."

God then is the Father of all peoples, and as such must of necessity, treat all alike. The Jewish nation never demonstrated to the naked eye, any reason why they should be especially entitled to divine favor. The spirits of Christ, Moses and Elias survived the grave, and communed with mortals, why, then, do not the spirits of others also survive the tomb, and commune with the children of men?

St. Paul, speaking of the whole human family, declared that "this corruption must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality." As all of the roads of Italy led to Rome, when that great nation was mistress of the world, so every human soul, however humble, leads to God.

As we have seen, the immortality of the soul—the eternal continuity of life—is the glorious foundation upon which Spiritualism rests. This foundation is as old as the rock-ribbed hills, and it cannot be shaken. So far as the sects and the churches of the world rest upon the same foundation they are secure.

IT WILL ALL COME OUT RIGHT.

Whatever is a cruel wrong,
Whatever is unjust,
The honest years that speed along
Will trample in the dust.
In restless youth I railed at fate
With all my puny might,
But now I know if I but wait,
It will all come out right.

Though vice may don the judge's gown
And play the censor's part,
And fact be cowed by falsehood's frown,
And nature ruled by art;
Tho' labor toils through blinding tears,
And idle wealth is might,
I know the honest, earnest years
Will bring it all out right.

Tho' poor and loveless creeds may pass
For pure religion's gold;
Though ignorance may rule the mass
While truth meets glances cold—
I know a law complete, sublime,
Controls us with its might,
And in God's own appointed time
It will all come out right.

THE CREATURE OF THE SLUMS.

Vividly and Impressively Portrayed by Jacob C. Peterson.

Unwashed, unkempt, ill-feed, half-clothed, diseased—
He stands—mute witness to man's barbarous creed;
Upon his face the look of one accursed,
Disowned, disinherited, and by his fellow-man cast out;
A social leper, burden, aye, and menace to the state.

Upon his features, ill-shaped, repulsive; scarred
By evil passions; deep lined by brutish lust and sin,
Yet stamped indelibly upon them is the tale
Of shame, humiliation, bitterness, unutterable despair—
A bitter travesty upon our grand enlightened creed.
The trace of vicious thought; the stamp of immorality;
The stains, hall marks of crime, deeply engraved
Upon that lowering, narrow, slanting brow;
His eye—blurred, blood-shot, lit up with glare ferocious,
Proclaims the animal—fierce, desperate, untamable;

Hid, deep within their depths, the anguished shade of Hope,
Crushed out, forever lost; and there canst see the haunted look
Of one who lives in terror of man's stern, unyielding law.
Heartless he is; a Thing that loves not; yet that feels
The power and passion of a bitter, unrelenting hate
Towards all humanity. The soul in him now dead
To sense of decency; depraved, despondent;
And lost, its outward semblance of immorality.

Hunger, Want, Disease, upon him have placed their mark—
Wan, bloodless is his cheek; the body swathed in rags;
The frame, emaciated, with pain's torture racked;
Unceasingly the cup of Misery placed to his lips,
That he must drink, drain to the very dregs.
Vice claims him as her own; grim Despair there sits,
Doth clutch and throttle, with remorseless hand,
Those higher aspirations of his soul—what he might be
But is not. Brute, in the guise of man, is he;
Law shields not such as he; the hand of man against
This homeless wretch, lost in the depths of sin and crime.

Yet such as these His children; unto each one He gave
From out His plenteous mercy, the vital, divine germ
Of Immortality; and in their hearts did plant
The seeds of Love, of Light, of Liberty and Truth;
And decreed that all should have the opportunity
To sow, reap and enjoy the produce of their toil.

The Most High gave him plenty. What power decreed
His frame be wasted; wan, bloodless be his cheek,
Through pangs of ceaseless hunger; and the ravages of disease,
Unchecked, sweep through the earthly tenement He made
And breathed therein the wholesome breath of life?
Who housed the one in castle; in raiment costly
Enwrapt his frame about; gave him all wealth and power;
And drove the other forth into the storm, to live with beasts;
Unhoused, unfed; his starving body swathed in cast-off rags?

What power marred the creation of His hands, grossly defiled
That temple, holy and pure, in His own image cast?
What placed the crimson stains of crime upon that brow;
Transformed the loving heart into a seething hell of hate;
And on his features placed the stamp of bestiality?
What seared the noblest, God-given impulses of His mind;
Lit deep within those eyes the glowering fires of Hell;
And maimed, dwarfed and destroyed His masterpiece—the Soul?

This poor, degraded, filthy wreck, your handiwork;
Child of your thought; the product of your brain;
Your institutions—barbarous, unjust, inhumane,
Of God's highest creation, have made of it—this Thing.
And such as he, are but the living monuments
To human selfishness; man's blind, immoral greed.

As his environments, so is man; this poor unfortunate,
Bred, raised up in the hot-bed, breeding-place of crime;
Of hope bereft; menaced, hounded down unto his lair,
By your stern laws; half mad with hunger; homeless;
Clothed in rags; with frame racked by the torture of disease;
Small wonder, then, that he should now be what you call—
The spawn of hell; the human type of bestiality.
Small wonder, that he, in his wrath, howls curses down
Upon those who made of him the bestial, shapeless thing he is;
Or that he now should jeer at you, ye whited sepulchres,
Who come and preach Morality to such as he.

Such as he is, man's hand fashioned him;
Now, who shall cast at him the stone of condemnation;
Revile him for his evil; point with scorn's finger,
And mock him for the shapeless, bestial thing he is?
Yours not the right to judge; for by your hand hurled down,
From his high estate, to yawning gulfs of black despair;
Robbed of his livelihood, and by your laws condemned
To banishment, starvation, sin, ill-health and crime.

Of nobler sentiments you have shorn; yet left to him,
Strong with the strength of nature, the instinct primeval;
That hates, with eternal hate, seeks e'er to overthrow,
His ancient enemy—the maker of the law—Society.
A menace to your peace you made of him; beware; such as he,
Have, ere this, at their lot revolted and overthrown
Kingdoms and kings; compelled the world to wonder,
And to see, feel and acknowledge, that soon or late,
Grim Justice comes, swift, silent, sure, to claim her own;
And those, who in the arrogance of power, rode on Rough-shod, trampled upon the weak and helpless,
Must feel the iron fingers of Retribution upon
Their throat, and that to the offended law, must pay
The price; tooth for a tooth; eye for an eye.

Redressed must be, the wrongs done unto him; on you the blame;
If the Most High send such as he to wreak upon the earth,
The punishment due to His offended law; then, even so,
As you have dealt with him, so shall he deal with you,
When such as he shall be His rod to scourge the world.

When this poor wretch appeals to the Eternal God
For redress of his grievances, sufferings and wrongs,
Will He not hearken; aye, and then will speak
That still, small Voice (awful, by virtue of its mighty calm)
Unto the hearts of men, the message, fraught with stern menace:

Behold, oh, man, this shapeless Thing—now sunk unto
The lowest level of the brute creation—gaze upon thy handiwork;
He, whom I created as thy equal, imbued with immortality,
Gave thy command, that he, with thee, should rule the earth,
Thou hast crushed down, disowned, cast out and left to starve;
A thing of evil hast thou made of him; the author thou
Of all the suffering, crime and want upon the earth;
And 'tis upon thy head, not his, there shall be visited
The punishment of all these violations of My law;
Upon thee, too, shalt rest the state of his immorial soul.

"Inasmuch as ye have done unto the least of these,
My children, so have ye done to Me"—thy God and Over-Lord.
Uneasy be thy slumber; bitter shalt be thy rest;
Peace shalt not know; My face turned from, and My hand
Against thee; until this grievous wrong against thy brother man
Be righted, and to him restored his birthright; and thou
Hast made of him, even such as I designed that he should be.

Long has he cried to Me for justice and the dues
His own birthright; unto him I hearkened;
This is My decree: That which is his, shall unto him be given;
Thy handiwork is he; thy evil work thou must undo;
Else will the phials of my wrath be oped and poured upon
Thee and thy children; and there be meted out to thee
My punishment—swift, sure and terrible—that shall endure
Till all the earth be purged of thine iniquity.

Heed well this warning; fulfill the Divine command—
This man thy brother, then as thy brother love;
Low as he's fallen, from the pit of moral degradation
Lift him up; place him upon that high pinnacle
Lord God intended he should hold and occupy;
Give him, not charity, but the dues his own by birthright;
Be patient, just in your dealings; treat him with equality;
Enough of wealth is there for you both; so deal with him,
As the Creator, All-Wise, All-Merciful, has dealt with you.
This do; then shall the land blossom as the rose;
Disease, pain, want and misery vanish from the earth;
Peace reign supreme; the world be Paradise.

The Fake Mediumship—Record of Spirit Return Over 250 Years Ago—Criticism of C. Bailey's Seances at Milan and Rome—Prentice Mulford's Works Translated Into French—The Welsh Revival—Scientists in Rome on Psychology and Criminology—N-Rays in Disease—Murder Revealed Through a Dream.

Private correspondence from Spiritualists in America has brought painfully under our notice the prevalence of what is called "Fake Mediumship," which term covers not only imitation mediumship by non-sensitive individuals, but fraudulent practices by those having limited or intermittent mediumship dependent upon their physical or mental condition, and who, from lack of moral stamina, and desire for gain, simulate the phenomena when conditions are adverse to its legitimate production. The insensate demand for physical or sensational phenomena is largely responsible for this state of things, but it is not so much the general public that are to blame as those Spiritualists who, having proved the fact of spirit communion, instead of profiting by that fact and acquiring a knowledge of its laws, philosophy and religion, go from seance to seance in search of the most startling and sensational phenomena. Anyone who can produce or simulate this can command a large clientele and substantial fees; the inducement is great to smart but unprincipled individuals, and the substantial support given to them by Spiritualists makes it practicable for them to exist and flourish, whilst the numerous detections of fraud have a very deterrent effect upon would-be investigators, and at the same time disgusts the cultured or religious Spiritualists, causing them to withdraw from public identification with the movement, and thereby in two important directions is the spread of its comforting and elevating influence retarded. The American Spiritualistic press is awakening to the necessity of doing something to amend this state of things and purge the movement of its impurities, and prominent amongst it The Progressive Thinker (Chicago) makes, in its issue for April 29, an appeal for "a pure, angelic, and undefiled Spiritualism, always insisting on absolute honesty."

This we cordially endorse; it is what we have been working for and trying to disseminate a knowledge of for the last thirty-five years. The mischief is the prominence given to the primary phenomena which has been proved to repletion; the cumulative evidence of thousands of competent investigators has been printed and is easily procurable; and when we speak of thousands, we refer only to men of world-wide reputation in science, literature, art, politics and theology; and has been confirmed by the twenty-two years' investigations of the "London Society for Psychical Research." No well-informed, unbiased mind denies the existence of the phenomenal facts; what we have to do with now is their meaning. The question, "If a man die shall he live again," has been answered in the affirmative, and anyone who desires personal proof can get it for the seeking; but he must first learn the road by study, and following in the track of those who have traversed it and reached the desired goal before him; the footprints are definite enough and the obstructions in the way have been pointed out by experienced travelers, and, we may say, magnified by the inexperienced who have not got there yet. That there are dangers we admit, but these apply to the thoughtless people who start on the journey without any knowledge of the road; similar dangers would have to be met by a person entering into a practical investigation of chemistry without any previous knowledge of the subject.

We have pointed out THAT THE PHYSICAL PHENOMENA OF SPIRITUALISM ARE DIRECTLY AND NECESSARILY PRODUCED BY SPIRITS VERY NEAR THE EARTH PLANE AND MORE OR LESSUNDEVELOPED; that the necessity for such phenomena is not endorsed by the higher intelligences who were the instigators and instructors in the earlier stages, and that only a few of the higher forms, such as direct writing, painting and photography, are directed by them now, their main purpose being the normal and spiritual elevation of mankind. The basement of the spiritual edifice is built, and if those Spiritualists who are wandering about it would come up and help those who are at work at the superstructure, the temple would become more beautiful and imposing in the eyes of the world, and many of their brothers and sisters would be attracted to its gates and commence the ascent to its higher chambers. It is gratifying to know that Spiritualism is making steady headway in England, and in consequence the leading papers are opening their columns to the subject, recent numbers of The Daily News, Chronicle, and even The Times having published reports of articles on Spiritualism, Hypnotism and automatic writing; and there is but little evidence of the existence of the blighting phenomenalism which is impeding spiritual progress in America. It is also making considerable progress in New Zealand, especially in Wellington, where the Spiritualists have a strong association with a fine hall of their own and attract large audiences.

Record of Spirit Return Over 250 Years Old.

Readers of "Annales des Sciences Psychiques" are much indebted to Professor Richet for a translation from the Latin of an account preserved in the archives of the Venerable Chapter of Presbourg of spirit return in 1641. It is the narrative of "a remarkable case in Presbourg of a spirit coming from Purgatory in order to speak to a virgin, speaking, crying to her for help, and finally delivered, according to sworn witnesses and public acts which were published with the authorization and by the order of his Lordship, Geo. Tippai, appointed Archbishop of Strigon, according to the example printed in Presbourg, 1643."

The story has to do with a certain John Clement, who, at about 44 years of age, became tainted by the heresy of Luther, and lived a little to be recommended life. Seven years before his death he returned to the Catholic faith and altered his manner of living so that he was often seen in church weeping and moaning and leading the life of a worthy Christian then over sixty years of age. He died on June 29th, 1641, and began to appear to this young girl, Regina Fischerin, on July 24th, of the same year, He appeared such as he used to be and spoke, showing himself in the same form and speaking with the same language and voice as in earth life. That it was the man himself was established beyond doubt by the imprints of his hands, which he left on some cloth. He made himself known between eleven o'clock and midnight in the parental home of this young girl, who is described as exceedingly charming and modest. First of all he knocked three times on the bed, then showed himself to her dressed in a white robe which descended to his heels. The story, which covers twenty pages, is to the effect that John Clement had murdered a man for the sum of two hundred florins and he desired Regina to go to his widow and ask for the money so that a statue could be raised to the Virgin in expiation of his crime. How the widow would not entertain the idea and other money available could not be accepted, and the final denouement when the spirit at last contented is allowed to pass into Paradise, and Regina, relieved from the spirit's persecutions, resumes her normal condition, is as interesting as a novel. Professor Richet says he has literally translated the account from the Latin version in the Archives of Presbourg.

Criticism of C. Bailey's Seances at Milan and Rome.

A highly important paper appears in the "Annales des Sciences Psychiques" on Bailey's apparently doubtful success in Italy during his visit there last year. The article from the pen of M. C. de Vesme, is written, he says, as a second visit of Mr. Bailey's to Europe is spoken of, generous offers having already been made by intelligent sympathizers to bring this about, and he thinks it necessary to review the facts of his late visit, showing the weak points in the conditions. Stress is laid on the fact that an insufficient search of the medium was made and that the seances took place in the dark. M. de Vesme says: "It is not the committee which deserves harsh criticism, but the medium himself, who, after having come from the Antipodes to show us his alleged marvelous faculty, withdraws from his lofty mission for fear of getting a cold in his head, and in a room so overheated that fresh air had to be introduced in spite of proper ventilation." The article, which covers twenty-five pages, deserves to be read in its entirety, and doubtless appears in English in the editions of the "Annales Psychiques' published since the beginning of the year in London.

Prentice Mulford's Works Translated Into French.

There is a highly appreciative review in the "Revue Spirite" of a translation into French of two volumes of Prentice Mulfords's writings which have so wide a circle of readers in America and every English-speaking country. The power of the spirit as portrayed by Mulford is recognized as the way all Spiritualistic teaching is tending. The reviewer says: "It is the spirit then we must know; we must discover its capacity and laws if we would draw from life the best possible results. * * * And yet it is the spirit which we neglect the most, or rather it is the spirit which is the worst directed and cultivated."

The Welsh Revival.

In "La Lumiere," much space is given to the remarkable psychical phenomena noticed in the June number of the Harbinger, and in addition to the lights and apparitions noticed with Evan Roberts' mission, lights connected with the work of a Mrs. Jones are described. Mrs. Jones was on the way to the chapel where she held revival services, and a reporter of the Daily Mirror, who was with her, reports that "All at once a soft and vapory light appeared in front of the vehicle which illumined the way in front of them. Immediately the light spread around them, lighting up everything within a circle of ten feet, as if produced by an acetylene lamp. * * * Rapidly the light rose above their heads * * * and it as suddenly disappeared, leaving darkness as great as that which had preceded it."

Scientists in Rome on Psychology and Criminology.

During the morning session of the fifth and greatest meeting of the International Congress of Psychology, opened in the great hall of the Capitol, Rome, on April 25, Professor Sergi, who is an eminent criminal psychologist, enlarged upon the great aid rendered in criminal cases by the science of psychology, which should enable judges and prosecutors to fathom the souls of criminals, to ascertain their inborn pathologic tendencies, and to estimate the influence of their surroundings and education in producing criminality. Such results when obtained from a scientific standpoint would enable the government of all countries to find a means of reducing the amount of crime. As showing the rapid advance of research in psychic matters, it is interesting to note that Signor Fortis, the Prime Minister, several members of the Cabinet and high government officials, together with numerous foreign diplomatists, were present at the opening ceremonies.

N-Rays in Disease.

The N-rays which are among the latest scientific illustrations of psychical action, are referred to in "La Lumiere" in connection with recent experiments by Commander Darget, recorded in "La Nouvelliste" de Bordeaux. He says he has discovered that diseases in general arise from an accumulation or congestion of vital fluid sometimes over the whole body or in one part of the body, and photographic plates have confirmed this theory. "I believe," he says, "that each malady has a special vibration and that when photographic plates for registering more exactly and rapidly this kind of vibrations are invented, that the practice of medicine will have taken a great step, since the diagnosis will be accurate and certain." The Commander thinks that the power of the N-Rays as shown by him to prevail all through nature, animal and vegetable, may be the point of departure of new and most important discoveries.

Murder Revealed Through a Dream.

In the latest number of Le Messager, a story is told of a criminal case, investigated two years ago by the law courts of Greece, in which unsuspected murder was revealed through a dream.

"In 1903, a fishing boat, having as owner a man named Antonios, left the Pireaus for Syra, having on board besides the master two sailors, one a Cretan, named Balazakis, and another islander. Some time after, on the day of a great storm, the sailors arrived alone at Syra. They stated that on the previous night the barque had been lost, and that they had with great difficulty saved their lives. Their story was believed.

However, on the same night that Antonios disappeared, his sister had a frightful dream. She saw her brother strangled and thrown into the sea by the two sailors. She did not think much about it, however, as the Cretan, Balazakis, had always been much attached to her brother, in whose service he had been for ten years. But some days later she had another dream. She saw her brother, who reproached her for indifference regarding his fate. "You are an accomplice with the assassins," said the voice from beyond the tomb, "since you will not avenge me. Look at the barque and the house of Balazakis; he has bought them with the money of which he has robbed me, and of which you are despoiled." The poor woman woke terrified; she began to make inquiries, and actually discovered in a place she had never seen the barque and the house described by her brother. She appealed to the law officers, and when Balazakis entered port two days later he was arrested. He confessed to having strangled his master during his sleep, and to having thrown him into the water. He told them where his accomplice was hiding, and the latter was also arrested, and made a full confession.

SINGULAR DREAM.

Which Proved True in All Respects.

On Sunday night last Dr. McWhorter of New Haven, dreamed that the body of Freddie Ohlinger, drowned on the 24th of June, was lying just above Clifton. He described the body as lying just below a clump of willows, the lower limbs widely apart, and downstream and the arms extended.

On the afternoon of Monday a party put out in a skiff to look for the boy's body and Dr. McWhorter asked to go along. He was accordingly accommodated and when they got to a point just above Clifton that looked like the one seen in his dream, he so informed the party and asked them to pull over there to the shore. They did so, and there they found the body conditioned just as he said he had seen it in his dream.

This dream is verified by some very reliable people of New Haven.—Pomeroy Leader.

There is not a single moment in life that we can afford to lose.—Goulburn.

PREDICTS PERDITION.

New Arrival Declares Race for Dollars is Sending People of This Country to Spiritual Destruction.

P. Ramanathan, a Hindoo, solicitor general of the island of Ceylon, who arrived in New York on the steamship Campania, will tell Americans they are in danger of spiritual destruction because of their greed for the almighty dollar.

Ramanathan is not a Hindoo priest, but a high official of the government. He told a passenger on the Campania at a concert that Americans are driving fast to perdition in their pursuit of money. Some of the Americans on board did not like the way the Hindoo put it, left the saloon until he had concluded his remarks.

Ramnathan has come here to lecture on "The Unification of the Religious Faiths of the World." He said that, although a Hindoo by birth, his interpretation of the gospels of St. John and St. Matthew is that the Hindoo and Christian religions are one.

"I am satisfied," he said, "that the Hindoos and Christians have the one God, and that our ambitions are similar, all tending to worship him. He also said a great deal of the missionary work in India is wasted, and that the natives pretend to be converted only to secure government positions.

The people of India can teach Spiritualists nothing of any value so far as religion is concerned. ASTRAL.

A CURIOUS STORY.

Spent Millions in Search for a Lake of Gold.

This narrative comes from Silverton, Col., setting forth that once in a while there is a variant from the established order of things in the mining industry. For the most part, mining means risk. It means the investment of a considerable amount of good hard cash and the employment of much hard labor, endless thought and many anxious days. And the end, too often, is merely a hole in the ground, a mile or so of underground tunnel, and a choice collection of blasted hopes in memory of humanity's overpowering ambition to get rich quick.

The exception to this rule is usually one of absorbing interest, as witness the tale of the Ennis brothers, who sunk one million dollars in their search for a fabulous spirit mine and at the last, when their resources were gone, and their workings abandoned, other men came along and reaped the reward of their efforts.

Away back in the early '70s a Gotham medium told Edward and John Ennis of New York that a great lake of gold existed in a certain point in the United States. It had been especially reserved for the Ennis brothers, and they might secure it by merely following the medium's directions to the letter.

They did. Their directions landed them in San Juan county, Colorado, where, high up on King Solomon mountain, seven miles north of Silverton, they set their stakes and christened their prospective bonanza the Highland Mary. The ennises had ample capital. They built a $10,000 residence before beginning their work. As their tunnel proceeded into the mountain toward the fabled golden lake, specific maps and diagrams of its course were from time to time sent to the New York medium, who as regularly sent back instructions how to proceed with the big bore. Her changes of direction were erratic and frequent and to-day the main tunnel of the Highland Mary mine, which is about a mile in length, would put to shame a tunnel through the Roman catacombs.

The Ennis brothers followed instructions to the letter, but the lake of gold, always "just a little way ahead," persistently failed to materialize. At last, after the expenditure of more than $1,000,000 and driving into the mountain 4,100 feet, bankruptcy overtook the operators, and the property was sold. The only person known to have materially profited by the venture was the New York medium, who is said to have received something like $50,000 for advice and sympathy. During the operation of the property, no secret was made of the "system" under which the development work was done, and the result was that the miners finally became so imbued with the spirit idea that none of them would work in the tunnel alone and there were frequent tales of strange noises and shadowy forms in various parts of the property. Toward the end of the Ennis brothers' career it became difficult to obtain miners to work in the property at all.

For years the mine laid idle. Two years ago, however, it passed into the hands of practical mining men who, under a system other than "Spiritualistic" have opened up several good veins of lead, silver and copper. And before the close of the present season they bid fair to place the old mine in the front rank of the country's producers. It is now one of the most promising in the whole district.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Is the Time Ripe for Woman Suffrage?

Much is being said about giving women a right to vote at all elections. Brilliant women and fair-minded men are pushing this question to the front. For years I have believed in the absolute justice of this measure. The fact is, woman is about the only animal in the United States that is not allowed to vote. While I fully recognize the justice of giving women the full right of electors, both state and national, yet there is a question as to whether the time is ripe for it.

If the Emancipation Proclamation by President Lincoln had been issued one year sooner than it was, it would have ruined the cause of freedom for the slaves—the time was not ripe—the public mind had not been educated up to that point. The enfranchisement of the colored people in the South proved so disastrous to the white people of the South that measures had to be taken in nearly all Southern states to practically disfranchise the colored race—the time was not ripe for placing the ballot in the hands of ignorant and irresponsible persons, to be used by unprincipled politicians for their own interests.

Now I would like to ask the brave and noble women who are advocating woman's suffrage, if they are sure that the great mass of women would use the ballot to sustain the principle of civil and religious liberty for all, or will they at the dictation of priestcraft, sink this country under the iron heel of a religious despotism? Are they sure they would not be placing a weapon in hand to crush their own liberties?

We know that women constitute the greater part of the membership of orthodox churches and are zealous workers for their respective churches—some are fanatical—and all are taught and believe that we owe all our civilization and liberty to the churches or the Christian religion.

Do women generally recognize the fact that the Christian religion is the tyrant that for nineteen hundred years has held them in bondage and as inferiors, under mancraft, priestcraft and churchcraft? The very foundation of the Christian religion is the foundation for the degradation of women, and that is that mythical Garden of Eden story about woman being responsible for the "fall of man."

Priestcraft and churchcraft have held women down, on scriptural grounds, for centuries, but let women become a political power and priestcraft will be the first to seize upon it for their own selfish ends, and will boldly assert that women owe all their advancement to the churches. We know that religious zealots and religious bigots are scheming all the time to trample our liberties under the heel of religious bigots and we can rest assured that they would attempt to use the women's votes to aid in their schemes. Would they succeed? After woman has fought her way to the ballot and equal rights with man against priestcraft, the church, and the Bible, will she cower and fawn and give praise to the tyrant that has held her down, or will she stand up in all the dignity of true womanhood, and henceforth use her power in the interests of civil and religious liberty, not for herself and creed alone, but for every American citizen.

Is the time at hand for Woman's suffrage?

Medical Tyranny Defeated.

A case of decided interest not only to Christian Scientists but to the various schools of mental healers, has just been decided by a New York judge, who holds in his decision, that parents have a right to use any tender means of caring for their children in time of sickness, and the method of treating sick children by prayer, and by laying on of hands is legally sanctioned.

The decision holds that the parents of children have a right to determine, within reasonable bounds, what mode of treatment their children shall have, and that the child of a Christian Scientist, placed in the care of a reader or healer, has the same safety in life and limb as the child who is given into the hands of a licensed physician.

There is no offense, it is held, in giving a child tender care, though it conflicts with recognized schools of medicine.

The decision is by County Judge Platt, of Westchester county.

The court sustains the demurrer of John Quinby, his wife, Georgiana Quinby of White Plains, and Dr. John C. Lathrop of Manhattan, all Christian Scients to the indictments against them for manslaughter in the second degree. The decision dismisses the case and no further prosecution will follow.

The charge against Mr. and Mrs. Quinby and Dr. Lathrop was that they allowed Esther Quinby, a young daughter of the Quinbys, to die from diphtheria without calling a physician, and instead "laid on hands" and prayed.

The decision is a victory for the followers of the sect, who contended they had a right under the constitution to care for the ill according to their belief. The three Scientists were indicted by the Westchester grand jury on Oct. 31, 1902, and they have been fighting the case in the courts ever since.

A Sad Lesson.

The following account of the unhappy condition of the "Holy Ghost and Us" people may well afford an object lesson to such Spiritualists as put aside and ignore the use of their own best common sense and judgment, at the dictation of spirits.

The "Holy Ghost and Us" people, instead of exercising their reason and best judgment, accepted and obeyed the directions of their inspired leader, "Elijah" Sandford. The result is seen in the statement of the daily press that the "Holy Ghost and Us" colony at Shiloh, Me., is on the brink of starvation. "Elijah" Sandford's people admit they are suffering for want of suitable food and that a famine seems inevitable.

"Until two or three days ago the people lived on mush and water and corn bread. Their supply of meal is now exhausted and they have no money to buy more. Since Sunday morning they have been living on green pears and beans, of which there is a limited amount on their farms. They eat these without butter or seasoning or bread of any kind. The crops at Shiloh are stunted and in a few days the people will be without green stuff.

"At present there are 800 people at Shiloh, the headquarters of the society. Most of these people are physical wrecks. They are wasted away to mere skin and bones and are pitiful objects to look upon. The people are discouraged. Many are losing faith in 'Elijah' Sandford's power to save and some have already left from the hilltop. Scarlet fever is raging among the children, while the adults are so weak from lack of nourishment that they are unable to work their miserable land. The town authorities of Durham have called on the state to relieve the suffering at Shiloh.

"'Elijah' Sandford is now in the holy land. Before leaving he took most of the money from the treasury."

"Wedding Chimes." By Delpha Pearl Hughes. A tasty, beautiful and appropriate wedding souvenir. Contains marriage ceremony, marriage certificate, etc., with choice matter in poetry and prose. Specially designed for the use of the Spiritualist and Liberal ministry. Price 75 cents.

Shattered History.

One of the greatest difficulties of the present age, for the scholar, to use a very common barbarism, is to know where he is at. He spends half a lifetime in posting himself in learning the history of the past; then he begins research outside the ordinary and stereotyped channels, and finds that which he supposed was authentic history is the production of the forger. These fictions and exaggerations become so numerous as he advances, he does not put trust in anything. Sacred and profane history alike have suffered in this respect, and the so-called historic events of the last half-century seem to have been misrepresented and colored in the interest of heroes without merit, or, possibly, to conceal their crimes. It would be a positive pleasure to know what we read for history is a truthful record of past events.

We have all supposed the account of Columbus' discovery of America, with all the principal details, was accurately correct. But here cames the statement of a modern scholor, Henry Vignaud, who for thirty years has been secretary of the American Embassy, in Paris. He tells us he has devoted all his leisure time since early youth in the study of Columbus. He has a private library, embracing more than 13,000 volumes, with everything extant relating to the object of his search, and he is conceded the ablest living authority on Columbus and his times.

We must not detain the reader with a full account of Vignaud's discoveries, as given in his "Toscanelli and Columbus," published in 1901. He says: "I have not sought to attack Columbus, but to separate fiction from history." And then:

"The object I have had in mind for many years is to prove the history of Columbus is imperfectly known; that the most erroneous ideas prevail as to the true causes of the discovery of America." He says: "Columbus arranged things as he wanted them to be known. It is with the utmost difficulty critical study has succeeded in setting aside from doctored history numerous facts which Columbus and his interpreters have introduced.

"The conclusion I reach is, Columbus never intended going to the Indies. It was only after he thought he had reached India he announced he always wanted to go there. What he really hoped was, to discover new lands of which he thought he had information. Columbus was not a great man; but he possessed superior energy and perseverance. He was mistaken in all his previsions, and persisted in his errors after making discoveries which should have opened his eyes."

At the rate scholars are unloading the errors, misrepresentations, and exaggerations of history, what will remain when they are done? There is scarcely a statement the finger can be placed upon, and it can be honestly said, "This is unerring truth." The only thing in which there is no variation or shadow of turning, let theosophs tell the story, is holy writ. And though it came to us through the hands of cloistered monks whose testimony would not be taken on any other subject, yet the bible is received by the churches, every word of it, as inspiration from God himself.

"No Standard Oil in Ours."

Jesus is reported to have said to his disciples: "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God."

If the proposition is a true one, and sewing needles were referred to, then the multi-millionaires have a poor show in kingdom come. Who blames Carnegie for partly unloading? If a good orthodox believer, which we learn he is not, then he should give all to the poor, else the pearly gates will be closed against him.

But how about John D. Rockefeller? He is in the faith, and said to be a devout Baptist, but "the poor are not candidates for his favors. His treasures are allowed to accumulate, $80,000,000 a year it is reported, else are given to wealthy churches and sectarian schools of learning. This is not a compliance with the teachings of the Master.

Recently Mr. Rockefeller expressed a desire to contribute $100,000 in aid of a Boston Missionary Fund. The Missionary Board turned it down, alleging the money was accumulated by dishonest means and its use would defile the cause for which they were laboring.

A good take-off appeared a few days ago in the Minneapolis Journal, in the form of a caricature, which we regret our lack of ability to transfer to these columns. The home of a cannibal family is presented. The wife is looking out the door of her rude cabin. The children have human bones in their hands which they have been gnawing. Other bones are scattered on the ground. The husband and father is in the foreground. The rotund missionary has just arrived, with apparently a female servant bearing a box labeled "tracts." Both wear glasses. The man of God is finely clothed, with a dress hat, an umbrella in hand, Bible and hymn books under his arm. He had apparently addressed the cannibal standing before him mostly nude, when, quoth the benighted heathen:

"What we want to know before accepting your services, is, whose money is being used to send you here. No Standard Oil in ours!"

It would be very wrong, of course, to apply ill-gotten gains to Christianizing cannibals. It would be far better to beg pennies from Sunday-school children, for the little tots, possibly, would otherwise invest it in candy and produce colic, or some other infantile ailment, causing death, thus adding another to the choir of the redeemed.

Ashamed of His Parentage.

Rev. Minot J. Savage must have been in a reminiscent mood when he wrote:

"One of the strangest facts of history is that, although what calls itself the civilized world has exalted a Jew to heaven and placed him on the throne of the universe as an object of worship, yet this same civilized world has always treated the Jew with despite and contempt."

The dominie evidently did not stop to think when he penned the above that artists who have given us pictures of "our Lord" and his mother, "the Queen of heaven," have always given them Caucasian faces. No one would suspicion for a moment that they were of the Semitic race while adoring or bowing before such pictures in worship, after the manner of the Catholics, or that they were other than the fairest of the European race.

Believe or Be Damned.

The highwayman, with a cocked revolver pointed at his victim's head, with the demand, "Believe I am an honest man, else I will kill you," will get an abundance of lip-service, showing he is an ardent believer in the goodness of his assailant; but the chances are a thousand to one the new convert is acting the part of a hypocrite, and believes no such thing as is demanded of him.

We are told John 3:16. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."

Now that is a large reward for the simple act of believing; but dear Christian brother, do tell us how we are to believe if our judgment is not convinced. Though the wealth of the world was at our feet, and was promised on condition we should believe the sun was shining in brilliancy when all was darkness we could not gain the coveted treasure. Neither can we believe that the Eternal Father begat a son by a mortal maiden without other proof than such as appeals to our reason.

"Believe or be damned," Mark 16:16, seems to be the voice of inspiration. "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise," Jesus is reputed to have said to the thief on the cross, simply because of the criminal's belief. And in our day the murderer, suffering for his many crimes, leaps from the scaffold with the rope about his neck, to heaven, his only virtue: He believed with his dying breath.

Good works don't count. "By works of the law shall no flesh be justified," wrote the good Paul.

A Beautiful Example.

A beautiful example and worthy all emulation by people calling themselves Christians, is that of the Japanese, who have no societies for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, because in Japan there is no need of such societies. In this respect the Japanese exemplify a higher civilization and purer ideals than any existent nation on earth, claimed to be Christian.

The callous brutality engendered by the vivisection of animals is not known in Japan, and the Japanese are known as a humane people.

Remembering these facts, one may well hope and pray that the Japanese may never become Christianized and the exemplifiers of Christian civilization as it now exists.

Far better that Japan retain its own civilization and its own humane standards of life and action, wherein it sets a noble example that should shame the peoples that pride themselves on being Christians, the world over.

It is painfully evident that the Christian nations, so-called, have something more to learn of Japan than the science of warfare, and that is, the art, the science, the philosophy—the religion, if you will—of humane feeling and action in life and practice. This, even more than her war, is the crowning glory of Japan.

Things Worth Knowing.

Such facts as the following are not the sort of proof as that which the "satisfied faith" of Rev. J. L. Withrow and other bibliolaters accept and use in their expositions of scripture. Under the head of "Things Worth Knowing," the Chicago Daily News states,—what Rev. Withrow doubtless would consider as things not worth knowing—that Prof. Flinders Petrie, the Egyptologist, in his new book on the history of Egypt says one of the most important and perplexing "finds" made in that ancient land is the newly discovered inscription on the stele of Merenptah, the supposed pharaoh of what is usually termed "the exodus," meaning the coming forth of the Israelites 2,000,000 strong from the land of Egypt, according to the history in the book of Exodus. Egyptian monuments have no record of "Israel in Egypt" as an ethical entity. The only mention of the name of Ysrael or Israel on any monument is to be found on this stele of Merenptah. But, if these were the same people as those of the Hebrew "Exodus," the deliverence of the Israelites from Egypt is turned into the deliverance of Egypt itself from the Lybian confederacy of raiding barbarians, among the horde of which the Israelites were a hardly distinguishable unit. There is nothing in the inscription to corroborate the story told in the Pentateuch. On the contrary, the Israelites mentioned by Merenptah instead of going up from Egypt as a conquering army of 600,000 fighting men never really got to Egypt. They were driven back from the borders of the land in wreck and ruin by the victorious Merenptah.

Quite Too Ethereal.

"The premises of Christian Science are that God, Spirit, Mind, is the only real life, substance, and intelligence; that man is the image and likeness of God; not as pantheism [all is God] teaches, partaking of the substance of Deity, but expressing God."

The above explanation by a believer in Christian Science we find in "Public Opinion," the writer correcting the editor for misstating what Rev. Mary G. Baker Eddy teaches. God and mind are everything to him; matter is nothing. Such a faith is too ethereal for our senses. We are so gross we cannot comprehend how spirit exists in the absence of refined matter.

A POOR ILLUSTRATION.

That Did Not Impress the Audience as Was Intended.

Hudson Tuttle, the Ohio lecturer, made an address recently wherein he described the pitfalls of the lecture platform.

"One pitfall," Mr. Tuttle said, "is the unwise choice of examples and proofs.

"A temperance lecturer wished to prove to his audience the deadly power of whisky.

"Accordingly he caused a drop of water to be magnified and thrown upon a magic lantern screen. The picture was a terrible one. Worms bigger than pythons, crabs bigger than elephants, spids the size of a ship, fought together in the drop of water like fiends in the infernal regions.

"The lecturer now caused a drop of whisky to be added to the water.

"'Watch, friends,' he said; 'watch the whisky's effect.'

"The effect was marvelous; the liquor killed all those ferocious horrors instantly. Their vast claws and tentacles and feelers stiffened. All became peaceful and still.

"An old lady in the front row whispered hoarsely in her husband's ear:

"'Wall, Jabez, that settles me. I'll never drink water again 'thout puttin' some whisky in it.'"—San Antonio Express.

Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp Outdone by an Astral Body.

The Progressive Thinker is a Leader. It never lags in the discharge of a duty. This week's issue is chockfull of most thrilling spiritual experiences, a veritable mine of valuable information. From the first to the last page you will find something of special interest, particularly the experiences with Mr. Bailey, the noted Materializing Medium, and the article by Prof. Hyslop. The one who will not read the paper will be sadly deficient in valuable information.

No matter how individual opinion may express itself regarding Dr. David Starr Jordan's attitude in refusing to accept for the museum at Stanford University, or to recognize as authentic, the archeological relics collected by Thomas Welton Stanford through the instrumentality of a humble mahatma, the immediate results of the story with this eerie thread as published yesterday morning in "The Examiner" were unanimously conspicuous for their substantiation of the evidence already adduced to prove that Charles Bailey, the mahatma concerned, is taken seriously by eminent scientists and that his employer, the late Senator Stanford's brother, is by no means a simple-minded dupe. It is freely admitted by the initiated that Bailey has materialized, during a long series of highly interesting seances, hundreds of alleged antiquities from the remoter periods of time, which have been successfully subjected to the unsparing scrutiny of dispassionate experts. And it can also be demonstrated that the assertion made regarding Mrs. Stanford's faith in the genuineness of this collection, as well as her earnest wish that it should be placed on exhibition at Palo Alto, is perfectly true.

Mrs. Stanford Believed.

The witness who testifies concerning Mrs. Stanford's feeling in this matter is Mrs. Addie L. Ballou, a notary public, whose office is at 1190 Market street. Mrs. Ballou, who incidentally is a pensioner of the United States for services rendered as a nurse on the battle-fields of the Civil War, has been an earnest student of psychic problems for more than forty years, was an intimate friend of the late Mrs. Stanford, and had been a confidant of the late Thomas Welton Stanford since 1891.

She attended seances at Mr. Stanford's house in Melbourne, Australia, where she was his guest for three years. She had several long talks with Mrs. Stanford about Bailey and the remarkable work he did as a sensitive. She received the first photographs sent to this country of the now famous clay tablets, coins and other curios produced by Bailey during the sittings in the Stanford residence. She took these photographs to Mrs. Stanford and discussed them with her. Finally, she has a complete record of the translations made by distinguished scientists of the cuneiform inscriptions on the tablets, as well as their classification of the other antiquities.

A Gifted Clairvoyant.

The fact that Mrs. Ballou has herself been active in spreading the Spiritualistic propaganda since her girlhood, and that she believes herself to be gifted with a certain degree of clairvoyant power, may be submitted as having a possible bearing on her point, though it can scarcely be said to impugn her veracity.

And it may be added that her gifts as a clairvoyant have some substantiation in the testimony of many persons, yet living, who heard her pause in the midst of a lecture at Mankato, Minn., on the night of April 14, 1865, and cry out, "A tragedy at Washington! The president has been assassinated!" As there was no telegraphic connection between Mankato and the outside world, the announcement thus made was not verified until the arrival of the mail a few days afaerward. It will probably be admitted, on this basis of consideration, that Mrs. Ballou is at least a witness who may be trusted to have investigated the Stanford mystery with enthusiasm and a plastic mind. Thus, in brief, is her testimony:

"I first met Thomas Welton Stanford several years ago, when I went to Australia to lecture on psychic subjects as the representative of allied psychic societies in this country. He was at that time a very rich man, though he had gone to Australia with no more substantial fortune than a venture in kerosene and an agency for a certain sewing machine.

Present at the Seances.

"Mr. Stanford, previously Consul General for the United States in Melbourne, had retired from public life when our acquaintance began, and was devoting his time and money to a sincere investigation of psychic phenomena. With this mutual interest as a foundation for our friendship it was not long before we agreed to carry on our researches in company. I accordingly went to live at Mr. Stanford's house, was present at scores of the seances there, and can personally vouch for the truth of every utterance made regarding their wonderful developments.

"When Mr. Stanford discovered Charles Bailey and became his patron, both Mrs. Stanford and myself felt that the phenomena immediately resulting were of the first importance. Mrs. Stanford made a special trip to Australia to attend the seances at which this wonderful sensitive presided, and saw enough to convince her beyond all possible doubt that both Bailey and the relics he materialized were genuine. She satisfied herself still further, however, by helping her brother-in-law to arrange for a series of sittings at which those present should be not only converts to Spiritualism, but men and women of learning and authority in other fields.

To Be Sent to University.

"These unbiased witnesses who accepted the invitation extended to them were lawyers, clergymen, newspaper men and physicians. They attended six sittings and made their affidavits that they had seen Bailey do the things he has elsewhere been recorded as doing. Mrs. Stanford then agreed with Mr. Stanford that the archeological wonders produced at Bailey's seances should ultimately be forwarded to Stanford University, and I know that she wrote to her brother-in-law regarding this subject while she was on the steamer which took her to Honolulu."

Mrs. Ballou then showed the reporter several documents bearing on the authenticity of the antiquities which Bailey in his astral capacity rifled from the tombs of Cairo, the mounds of Assyria, the temples of Benares and the palaces at Khartoum. Among these documents was a pamphlet issued by the Society for Psychic Studies in Milan, Italy, in which was chronicled, over the signatures of many well known Italian scholars, the astonishing results obtained under rigorous test conditions through the mediumship of Bailey in fourteen sittings held in Milan between the 28th of February and the 12th of April, 1904. The compiler of this pamphlet makes the following statement in his preface:

Committee Testifies.

"Since the return of Bailey to Melbourne, some charitably disposed persons have circulated a report that his visit to Italy was a failure, and this mendacious statement was accompanied by expression of compassion for a number of ladies and gentlemen who witnessed the phenomena produced through his mediumship. That people of average intelligence, high personal character and good social standing should venture to attest certain uncommon occurrences, of which they had individually and collectively been the observers, appeared to be incomprehensible to the author or authors of the dishonest report referred to. They discredited the facts and appeared to consider the narrators of them to be either the bearers of false witness, or the imbecile victims of fraud and delusion.

"Now, in Milan, the phenomena were duced before a committee of the local Society for Psychic Studies, composed of gentlemen of high literary and scientific attainments, Dr. Eugenio Griffini acting as their honorary secretary, and the proceedings at each sitting were published from month to month in the periodical entitled 'Luce and Ombra,' which is the recognized organ of that society, and were duly authenticated by the signatures of those present."

From Ancient Babylon.

One of the most interesting items among the objects in the Stanford collection which Dr. Jordan is said to be unwilling to even examine is a seven-sided, terra-cotta cylinder, 5½ inches long, 3½ inches wide, and weighing 1 pound and 2 ounces avoirdupois. Six of the facets of this cylinder, which, it is claimed, had its origin in Babylon, are covered with inscriptions described by the scientists who have seen them as of the cuneiform kind, and on the seventh are a number of seal impressions. When procured, the markings on its surface were partially obliterated by an earthly deposit, and the specimen had to be carefully cleaned. The cylinder is hollow, and is said to contain the following record of warlike dealings of the ancient Babylonians with the Jews:

Inscription on Tablet.

"These are the acts of Essar Haddon, the great King, the mighty King, the builder and restorer of the temple of the gods, the favored of Ashur (the chief Assyrian divinity). The people called the Jews (in Assyrian, Yahud) have sent unto me many ambassadors, many offerings, and the people of Khita (meaning in Assyrian the people of the Hittite nation) gold and silver, precious stones and chariots. My favor would they regain. Subdued are they. Also the people of Elam. The great lords commandeth. In the temple of Merodach I placed the records sealed by my hand. And the inhabitants of Kirdush were conquered and subdued with the fleet horses and men of valor. These are the acts of ...., who dispenseth justice and exalted his people. The great gods, Assur, Bel, Nebo, command, and I obey. Which shall be as a given sign and a witness (here follows the line of seals, possibly impressed with the royal signet). The men of Erech came against me. Their mighty men I slew, and impaled I their mighty men alive. Amati-Bel their towns burned with fire, and took their women captive. These are the acts of the great King."

Coins of About 226 B. C.

Ten of the coins in this collection are thus described: "Two of the larger coins are of the reign of Ptolemy Philopater, about 226 B. C. One of the larger specimens and three of the smaller ones are covered with verdigris and much corroded. Those corroded were got in mounds in Egypt, the cleaner ones from mummy coffins, where possibly they were placed as toll money. Three of the smaller ones are Roman coins of different reigns. The four other smaller coins are of a metallic combination once known as electron, and is probably an alloy of silver, copper and a little gold. On one side of these was the head of Zeus, on the other side a double-headed eagle holding thunderbolts. Two of these coins are of the time of Ptolemy Euergetes II, nicknamed Ptolemy the Pot-bellied; another of the Ptolemy and Berenice reign, another of the Cleopatra reign, and another of the reign of Ptolemy Soter, this one having reproduced upon it Ptolemy's own head."

The Famous Scarabeus.

The famous scarabeus, brought to the library of Thomas Welton Stanford by Bailey's astral double, has also been painstakingly examined. "It is," says the chronicler, "a sacred beetle of the time of Rameses the Great, found at Thebes, and is nearly 4,000 years old. These scarabei were placed in the right hand of deceased royalties when their bodies had undergone the process of preservation. On the back of this scarab is a hieroglyph; a cartouche in the center, a flail at either side, and what was called a determinative underneath, somewhat in the shape of a wide, shallow goblet. On the upper part of the cartouche is a representation of the sun's disc, 'Ra'; in the center of that is some Egyptian agricultural implement, and below is a well carved diminutive beetle—the whole being translated Ra-me-ses (Son of the son). The top of the flail is gone, making determination on this point uncertain, but it is believed that the Rameses indicated was Rameses II, that is, Rameses the Great, called by the Greeks Sesostris."

Asked to comment on the story published in yesterday's "Examiner," concerning this strange story, M. Brodzky, a prominent Australian newspaper man, who recently came to this country, had this to say:

Stanford Took Precaution.

"Thomas Welton Stanford is the high priest of Spiritualism in Melbourne, a man who does not lay himself open to the ridicule heaped on those who practice the occult art 'a la Pantouffle.' When Stanford patronizes a spiritualistic medium he or she must have a reputation for genuineness. It was, therefore, a sensational occurrence when Bailey, who, by the way, was a laundryman and not a blacksmith, became the protege of Stanford. The brother of the Senator gave special seances for the laundryman, who undoubtedly produced fac similes of ancient Assyrian tablets covered with cuneiform writing, similar to those discovered by Bruggsh and other Assyriologists, and given by them to the British Museum.

"Stanford, at first, was not quite sure whether he was being fooled regarding these tablets, and submitted them for decipherment to experts who declared that they undoubtedly contained genuine Assyrian cuneiform writing, at least 4,000 years old.

"Subsequently, when Bailey's name crept into the newspapers, the Melbourne police hunted up the laundryman's history, and it was established as a fact that he had started as a common, low-grade fakir, telling fortunes at a shop in Gertrude street, Fitzroy. While thus employed Bailey was visited by one McManamy, the cleverest detective in Melbourne, whose fortune was told for 40 cents. Bailey was arrested for thus disobeying the municipal ordinances and was fined in the Fitzroy Police Court. Mr. Stanford's faith was not, however, shaken by these happenings. He stood by Bailey and proclaimed his confidence in the Bailey antiquities. And it is certain that to those who do not believe in Spiritualism the mystery of these antiquities is a long way from being solved."

Says She Hears the Voices of Spirits

Musical Speech from the Dead Informs Miss Scriven of Their Thonghts--Yet She Is Not a Spiritualist.

FROM ALL SECTIONS OF THE WORLD COMES THE INFORMATION THAT A PROFOUND BELIEF IN SPIRIT RETURN IS SPREADING, MAKING NEW INROADS INTO QUARTERS WHERE HERETOFORE IT WAS BUT LITTLE KNOWN, AND MANY WHO ARE THE TRANSMITTING INSTRUMENTS BETWEEN THE TWO WORLDS DENY THEY ARE SPIRITUALISTS, AND ARE INDIGNANT IF ANNOUNCED AS SUCH. HUNDREDS IN CHICAGO, RICH, INFLUENTIAL AND INTELLIGENT, ARE FIRMLY ESTABLISHED IN THE BELIEF THAT SPIRIT RETURN IS A FIXED FACT, BUT FIRMLY DENY THEY ARE SPIRITUALISTS. PROMINENT AMONG THOSE WHO COME UNDER THE HEAD OF SPIRIT RETURNISTS IS THE LADY WHOSE EXPERIENCE IS GIVEN BY A NEW YORK WORLD REPORTER, IN THE FOLLOWING NARRATIVE. WE HAVE NO WAY OF COERCING SPIRIT RETURNISTS INTO THE RANKS OF SPIRITUALISM TO AID IN AN ORGANIC MOVEMENT, HENCE MUST LET THEM DRIFT AS THEY SEE FIT, FOR FREEDOM OF THOUGHT IS OUR WATCHWORD. SO LONG AS THEY ARE HONESTLY SEEKING THE TRUTH, THEY WILL DEVELOP IT ALONG THEIR OWN LINES. BUT WOULD IT NOT BE WELL FOR SPIRITUALISTS TO RENDER THEIR LIVES AND RANKS SO PURE, ATTRACTIVE AND CLEAN, THAT THE SPIRIT RETURNISTS WILL BE DELIGHTED TO CO-OPERATE WITH THEM, FOR IN SPIRITUALISM IS THEIR PROPER PLACE, AND SHOULD BE THEIR HAVEN OF REST. READ CAREFULLY THE EXPERIENCE OF MISS SCRIVEN.

A strange power of communication with departed spirits is claimed by Miss Clara Scriven of Plainfield, N. J., who has been visiting Mrs. Charles Daniel, of No. 425 Mott avenue, Bronx. Miss Scriven says she is not a Spiritualist, and she does not pose as a professional. For two years, she avers, she has been talking with the spirits of dead relatives.

Miss Scriven is twenty-two years old and of rather nervous temperament. She was until about two years ago a telephone operator at Plainfield, and it was while receiving messages over the wires that she first became aware of voices.

"These voices," she said, "were in a high, musical key. I could not understand the phenomenon. I attributed it to nervousness and gave up my position as an operator. The voices had become so uncanny and so fearsome that I dared not continue at work. I did not realize then that it was the spirits talking to me.

"I first came to know that when I went to visit friends in Plainfield. They had an amusement device called the Ouija board. The hands were placed on a small, triangular board on which the letters of the alphabet were printed. The smaller board spelled out answers to questions asked.

Spirits Made Her Answer.

"Some one asked a question that none of us understood about a dead relative while my hands rested on the board and instantly I heard a voice in the same musical key that I have mentioned. The voice dictated the answer and my hands instinctively spelled it out. The person who had put the question looked at me in dumb astonishment. I then found that I could talk to the dead relatives of all those present. I trembled from excitement. Gradually this feeling passed away and at home after I had made a board of my own, I became quite used to conversing with the spirit world."

Miss Scriven uses a round chart of pasteboard about 12 inches in diameter, on which the alphabet is printed, each letter being inclosed in a double circle. The name of God stands near the center of the chart, with entwined circular lines that connect the three letters. Other circles contain parts of the Lord's Prayerv. Miss Scriven explained that as God is the controlling power she had placed His name on the chart, and that the circular lines were intended to represent the current of thought which she believes to run in circular waves.

Answers Stranger's Questions.

Miss Scriven gave a demonstration of her method to the World reporter. She did not affect any mysterious air. She asked the reporter, who was a stranger to her, what he would like to know, and his question being propounded, she answered them in a very brief space of time. Much information was volunteered by the young woman aside from that brought out by the questions. The manner of death of several relatives was communicated, and many of the strongest characteristics of the departed while in life were related through the medium of the chart. Miss Scriven did not, in all that she told, make one error. Incidents in the lives of the departed were told in a manner that was amazing.

"I am told by the spirits," she said, "that all is happiness in heaven. I understand that there are seven states through which they must pass to reach the highest plane. Some people who pass away are prepared for higher planes than others. They tell me that all spirits may see one another but that the difference in planes enables those in a higher state to hold closer communion with God. Spirits may perfect themselves for the highest plane. Perfect harmony exists among the spirits. The voices are always pleasant to listen to."

Miss Scriven says many of the people on earth have spirit guardians. Nearly every one has one guardian and same have more. These guardians always exert an influence for good. The more guardians the better the impulses and the fewer temptations.

"A friend of mine has thirteen guardians," said Miss Scriven, "and she is peculiarly free from temptation."

COUNTERFEITING THE GENUINE.

It Is the Great Curse of the World To-Day.

Throughout the entire commercial world in every branch of industry—no exception—counterfeiting is going on. Especially is that true in regard to food, money, spirit phenomena and textile fabrics. A special cable dispatch from London, England to the Chicago Record-Herald, says that there is more spurious money in circulation just now than ever was known in that country.

Not only that, but the art of false coinage is more near perfection than ever. It is estimated that there are no fewer than 200 persons now engaged in England in private coining, counterfeiting and uttering bad money, and of that number probably two-thirds live in London. The number of private mints is probably not short of 100.

There is also now a recrudescence of what is known as "sweating" sovereigns, which is more difficult to detect. Two thousand of these "sweated" coins were secured by the police during the last twelve months.

Counterfeiting permeates the whole commercial and industrial world. That which is of the greatest value is the most generally counterfeited. Bring out any thing good, whether among textile fabrics or in the phenomena of Spiritualism, and the counterfeiter will step to the front and give it a critical examination, and then closely imitate it. It is a crime to counterfeit textile fabrics or money, but it is a thousand times worse to counterfeit genuine spirit phenomena, or pretend to materialize spirits with the aid of wigs, false whiskers, illuminated crosses, and dresses rendered luminous by artificial means. It shows degeneracy on the part of those who patronize such shows, claiming they are genuine.

BITS OF PERSIAN PHILOSOPHY.

Gathered From Omar Khayyam, the Persian Poet.

It is well to become acquainted with the philosophy contained in the Rubaiyat of good old Omar Khayyam, the astronomer poet of Persia, who was born at Naishapur in Khorassan, in the latter half of the eleventh century.

Nizam ul Mulk, the vizier, in his "Wasiyat," says of Omar Khayyam: "His illustrious years exceeded eighty-five, and it was the universal belief that every boy who read the Koran or studied the traditions in his presence, would assuredly attain to honor and happiness. * * * At Naishapur thus lived and died Omar Khayyam, busied in winning knowledge of every kind, and especially in astronomy, wherein he attained to a very high pre-eminence * * * The Sultan showered favors upon him."

The tomb of Omar Khayyam is in Naishapur, just outside a beautiful garden. Trees, burdened with fruit, extend their branches protectingly above it; and earlier in the season drop their blossoms upon it, so that at times the cover-stone is quite hidden from view.

Looking thus upon the petals blowing gently down upon the poet-philosopher's tomb, one remembers his quatrain:

"Whither resorting from the vernal heat
Shall old acquaintance old acquaintance greet
Under the branch that leans above the wall
To shed his blossoms over head and feet."

The best lines ever written by Persia's poet of the people are these:

"A book of verse underneath the bough,
A jug of wine, a loaf of bread—and thou
Beside me singing in the wilderness—
Oh, Wilderness were Paradise enow!"

The entire theory of domestic bliss is symbolically expressed in the above lines. The "book of verse" represents the poetic aspiration for a higher plane of thought life; the "jug of wine" ably symbolizes the stimulation found in the desire to provide the material comforts of life for those we love, while the "loaf of bread" represents the reward of our labors. The meaning of "and thou" is self-evident. Without the "thou" each one's "paradise" will eventually become a "wilderness."

Find the "thou," and you will have gained a paradise beside which the famed Elysian fields will seem as unattractive as a vacant lot overgrown with weeds. It has been well and truly said:

"The test of gold is fire;
Of man, woman."

True spirituality flourishes, as does a green bay-tree by the side of sparkling waters, in the atmosphere of wedded love; and the test of all fine-spun theories is found in the home where two souls have decided that only love shall rule.

Where Love is the household god we find happiness; and when the idea of a personal, man-shaped, demoniacal god is introduced into a home where Love does not abide—at that moment the fuse that leads to the powder-magazine of domestic woe is ignited.

If it were more generally understood that it is better to do good for good's sake than to obtain "happiness in heaven;" to be pure for purity's benefits, rather than to please a silly, impractical god (the Christian's god, who by his own record is a brute in passion and a murderer in action)—then, I say, men and women would hesitate to rush into matrimony for other motives than pure love. Until the time comes when individuals realize that there is no god, no walled-up heaven, no burning brimstone hell, we may expect to find civilization retarded by loveless marriages contracted for lust and revenue only.

Thinking along these lines, we appreciate the thought that prompted the Persian poet when he exclaimed:

"Ah, Love! could you and I * * * conspire
To grasp this sorry scheme of things entire
Would not we shatter it to bits—and then
Re-mold it nearer to the heart's desire!"

The pernicious effects of the Christian-made theory, that anyone can be happy throughout all the ages to come in a nice roomy heaven (no matter how vile and immoral one's earth-life has been), providing one merely professes "faith in Christ" and is "washed in his blood," may be seen every day in the divorce courts, the penitentiaries, the jails, the wards for the insane, the homes for imbeciles.

It is this mad Christian theory that converts many thousands of possible paradises into actual wildernesses.

If you doubt that Persia produced a philosopher, read Omar's search for the answer to the question of his soul:

"Up from earth's center through the Seventh Gate
I rose, and on the throne of Saturn sate,
And many a knot unravel'd by the road
But not the master-knot of human fate.
"There was the door to which I found no key;
There was the veil through which I might not see:
Some little talk awhile of Me and Thee
There was—and then no more of Thee and Me."

After other equally fruitless attempts to solve the problem of life, he says:

"I sent my soul through the Invisible,
Some letter of that After-life to spell:
And by and by my soul return'd to me,
And answer'd, 'I myself am Heaven and Hell.'"

Thus, through years of toil, after years of struggle to conform to certain formal rules of conduct, the soul suddenly finds that both heaven and hell are contained within itself. Truly a profitable lesson for those who will learn its truths!

Remove the fear of hell and the hope for heaven, and the individual is placed upon his own responsibility. Then and only then will creed-bound selfishness cease making this planet a place of oppression.

To the selfish wealthy classes "heaven is but the vision of fulfilled desire, and hell the shadow from a soul on fire," but in time they find that the soul never forgives itself its crimes; and it is only by devoting ages of unselfish endeavor toward alleviating the suffering which they have caused that they can hope to hear the soul's commendatory words: "Well done! Enter thou into happiness by continuing thy good work."

Psychical Research and the Future Life.

Dr. James H. Hyslop, Ph. D., Former Professor of Logic and Ethics in Columbia University, N. Y., Presents in the Homiletic Review his views on Psychical Research and a Future Life. They will be read with deep Interest by thoughtful Spiritualists.

By James H. Hyslop, Ph. D., Former Professor of Logic and Ethics in Columbia University, New York.

One of the most astounding incidents of modern times is the attitude of many religious minds toward those phenomena which purport to afford scientific evidence of a life after death. One would expect the average Christian to seize every opportunity to confirm his faith by scientific evidence, but, since he has lost confidence in Bridgwater treatises, he seems to have put on the skepticism which has so obdurately characterized the "infidels" in the past. For many generations religious minds kept up a constant warfare against science for not accepting its hopes and beliefs, and that conflict is not yet wholly laid. The persistent complaint against science was that it would not admit the evidence for the existence of God and the immortality of the soul. But now that science has actually taken up the question of trying to ascertain positively whether there is any evidence for personal consciousness after death, religious minds take up an attitude of indifference or hostility to the effort, often maintaining that the phenomena which apparently attest such a life are the work of the devil. In former periods it was the work of the devil that we should doubt this evidence, but now the same agency is invoked to explain respect for that evidence. The attitude of such minds is like that of the Irishman who was "always agin' the Government."

For the last century scientific materialism has made such progress that the belief in a future life has been greatly discredited, and this feeling about it has been very much strengthened by the results of biblical criticism, which has destroyed faith in mere authority. Science has so persistently asked for evidence in present experience of any claims whatever that the human mind tends to distrust all stories of the past unless their credentials show some scientific character. The consequence is that men are coming to rely upon scientific methods for their convictions. It matters not whether this is a right or a wrong instinct; it is a fact, and in life we have always to reckon with facts in our daily intercourse. Any evasion of them is always disastrous in the end. Now there is about us a vast mass of phenomena alleging a significance as proof of survival of death, that is, the refutation of the materialistic theory of life. It matters not what its character is—a feature which can not be determined off-hand; the duty of intelligent men is to examine into its credentials. Above all others, the religious mind is bound to regard the problem as affecting the one belief to which it clings with the most passionate tenacity and fervor. The clew to its whole view of life and human duty is found in the belief. The social organism is profoundly affected by its integrity, as we can hardly expect the sentiment of human brotherhood to survive the interest which immortality attaches to the value of human personality. If man has no value as a personal soul, from the standpoint of nature, we must expect that those who have the power will treat their fellows as means to their individual ends. The assurance of a future life establishes the value of personality in the world quite as effectively as the conservation of energy establishes the permanence of force, and we must expect corresponding moral consequences for a belief that insures the permanence of personal consciousness. This ought to be apparent to the religious mind without argument, and, once accepted, should enlist an interest in whatever purports to represent scientific evidence of the belief.

The attempt to afford scientific proof of a future life began with the organization of the Society for Psychical Research, though it may be a misrepresentation of its motives to imply that it had any such object. In fact, its primary intention was to investigate and not to predetermine any conclusion by its methods. But it was inevitable, from the nature of the phenomena with which it had to deal, that it should very early become complicated with this problem. It began with the alleged phenomena of telepathy or thought transference, which is not evidence of anything transcending the capacities of the embodied human mind. Though the claims of Spiritualism are more or less weakened by the fact of telepathy, if fact it be, the doctrine of transmission of thought is a revolutionary one in psychology and suggests human powers that may well arouse wonder in regard to cosmic agencies. But there are two classes of phenomena which most distinctly support the claim that deceased persons may occasionally give evidence of their continued existence after death, especially if the phenomena can show credentials making them more trustworthy experiences than legends and myths. They are cases of apparitions and of mediumistic phenomena purporting to represent communications with the dead.

FRAUD AND ILLUSION ARE THE TWO GREAT DIFFICULTIES IN THE WAY OF BELIEVING STORIES OF SUCH EVENTS. But in certain instances these objections have been removed, until further skepticism as to the importance of the facts is no longer excusable, though it is quite admissible that suspended judgment in regard to their proper explanation is quite proper and advisable. The point in the present stage of inquiry is not what they prove as to so stupendous a question as a future life, but do they suggest something supernormal in human experience. When the subject has been studied for a much longer time we may be able to form a better judgment as to the meaning of the phenomena.

In the study of apparitions we have to be careful that we can discriminate those that are evidential of outside agencies and those that are explicable by ordinary hallucination. The vision of "spirits" is too common a fact among the insane to be hasty in accepting any alleged apparition as indicative of foreign influence. Only the most extraordinary amount of evidence will justify serious treatment of stories alleging the appearance of deceased friends. Only those will have any scientific interest which coincide with the occurrence of a corresponding event not known by the person who sees the apparition. For instance, if A. sees a phantasm of B. when it can be proved that B. had died without the knowledge of A. and near the time of the experience, we have a type of phenomenon that can claim serious attention, especially if similar experiences can be multiplied in large numbers with different people. Even then we cannot be hasty in adopting an explanation, particularly a spiritistic explanation; because it seems to be a well-accredited fact that apparitions of living persons are as frequent as those of the deceased, and, whatever theory we adopt, we must make the two types consistent with each other. We cannot assume discarnate spirits to explain the phantasmal appearance of the living. Neither will it be easy to explain the appearance of the dead as mere cases of telepathy, though we may not be satisfied with any application of living minds to account for them.

THE PUBLIC HAS VERY LITTLE CONCEPTION OF THE EXTENT TO WHICH FRAUD IS PRACTICED BY ADVENTURERS PREYING ON THE CREDULITY AND INNOCENT INSTINCTS OF THE UNWARY. Genuine phenomena can be so easily simulated that the course of wisdom for the untrained man and woman is to let the subject alone and hand it over to the scientific man. None but trained experts should deal with mediumistic phenomena. The history of the layman's investigation in this subject is but one long account of illusion and fraud, and this is true even though genuine experiences may have occurred in the process. But until we have some criterion for discriminating between the fraudulent and the genuine phenomena, there is no reason for popular investigation. The whole subject should be left to qualified men for investigation.

Modern knowledge has affected the problem of a life after death in such a manner that there is no way, to substantiate it scientifically but to prove the personal identity of certain deceased human souls. Materialism is based upon the doctrine that consciousness is a function of the brain or the human organism. The knowledge that all organic compounds exhibit functions that are results of organization tends to support the idea that consciousness is an incident of composition—that is, the result of atomic combination, like digestion and circulation, which certainly do not survive the bodily organism. In addition to this, the discovery that we have a soul would not assure us that we have the same consciousness after death, though it might prove it possible. We know that things change their functional activities in the process described as dissolution, and what we know of changes of personality in the loss of identity, amnesia or loss of memory, and various alterations of consciousness, makes it necessary to know, not merely that there is something else than the brain involved in the occurrence of consciousness, but also that after such a change as death we should continue the same consciousness with its memory as a condition of realizing the only kind of survival that could possibly interest a moral being.

What we must know is whether the personal consciousness which we knew in life survives, and it will not satisfy the present conditions of belief to know that this consciousness is not a function of the brain, though it would establish a strong probability that a future life was quite possible or likely. To assure us that its destiny or existence is not involved in anything like the alteration of personality as it is known in abnormal psychology, we must in some way get into communication with a discarnate spirit, if that be possible, and have it establish its identity.

Apparitions can satisfy this demand only on two conditions: First, the recipient of them must be able either to recognize the person appearing or to obtain some mental impression or apparent auditory indication of the person concerned. Secondly, the percipient must not have known the person in life, or, if he has known the person, he must not have known of his death. In both cases the experience must be verifiable by others than the subject of it. Otherwise the apparitions will be referable to hallucination as an explanation.

The Society for Psychical Research undertook the collection of a census of apparitions. It comprehended those of living, of dying, and of deceased persons. The latter class was excluded from its report. The largest number of these was of living persons. The whole number was 382. Doubtful cases reduced these to 350. Of this number 30 were death coincidences, and this small number in the census sufficed to convince the committee—made up of Mr. F. W. H. Myers, Professor and Mrs. Henry Sidgwick, Mr. Frank Podmore, and Miss Alice Johnson—that they were not due to chance alone. They represent 440 times the probable number of such occurrences according to the law of chance. This census represented England and Wales, and, as I said, excludes the apparitions of the dead. These latter sufficed in number and evidential value to convince Mr. Myers, and Mr. Andrew Lang accepted Mr. Myers' opinion as proved, that the deceased could occasionally manifest their existence after death. THERE ARE PROBABLY A THOUSAND SUCH CASES ON RECORD IN THIS COUNTRY, AWAITING THE MEN AND FUNDS TO CLASSIFY THEM AND PUBLISH THE RESULTS IN A FORM TO MAKE THEIR IMPORTANCE IMPRESSIVE.

Mediumistic phenomena, when they can be made genuine, are of the nature of experiments in proof of the same contention. They first represent supernormal phenomena of some kind, and, when they relate to the identity of deceased persons, they are evidence of a future life, whether they are regarded as proof of it or not.

There are several instances of this type of phenomena which deserve scientific consideration, though they are defective in some aspects of their nature. Dr. Liebault, the celebrated French physician, narrates a case of some interest. Its value rests mainly on his authority and not on the variety of its incidents. Mr. Henleigh Wedgwood, the brother-in-law of Charles Darwin, reports personal experiences which certainly resemble communications from deceased persons, and vouches for others in the experience of certain intelligent friends. Mr. Myers reports the instance of a celebrated European physician whose name he has to withhold. The case of Rev. Stainton Moses is a most remarkable one, subject to qualification for the lack of scientific investigation. His moral probity was never questioned, and some of his real or apparent communications with the dead are at least impressive and on any theory command the respect of psychology.

But the most remarkable case on record is that of Mrs. Piper. The characteristic of this case is that it depends more upon the precautions taken against fraud and illusion and upon the perfection of the contemporaneous record made of the experiments than upon the clearness of the messages. Other cases have either represented material too meager for convincing the scientific skeptic or involve no such careful experiment and record as in this case. Besides, its importance is much enhanced by the mass of evidence taken with its variety and complication with many witnesses. All these features of it represent the reason for perpetually urging its importance.

This is no place to summarize even the types of incidents involved in the Piper record, and it must suffice to remark that it consists of that kind of messages which we should expect a continuing personal consciousness to transmit in proof of personal identity, or such as living people would send over a telegraph line or through a telephone for the same purpose if their identity were challenged. These incidents are necessarily trivial as nothing else will establish personal identity either between the living or between the living and the dead. Communications about the nature of a transcendental life are worthless as evidence, and must be put aside until the problem of identity has been solved and the triviality and confusion of the messages have been explained. At present the mass of evidence tending to satisfy the conditions of the first problem is very great, and it is time that it should be the subject of intelligent estimation. Its relation to the moral and religious wants of the age entitles such an investigation to munificent endowment, especially as much less worthy causes do not lack in financial support.

The material bearing upon the question and related to the supernormal generally is represented in some nineteen volumes of Proceedings, ten volumes of a Journal, two volumes of "Phantasms of the Living," and two volumes of "Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death," by Mr. Frederick W. H. Myers, to say nothing of the work of Mr. Podmore and of Flammarion, the French astronomer. Telepathic, apparitional, and mediumistic phenomena abound in them to such an extent that their possible significance can no longer be ignored without incurring the reproach of bigotry. Not that any special conclusion is necessarily sustained by them, but that they so pertinently suggest the existence of supernormal knowledge or challenge scientific investigation that it is no longer wise to neglect them. The kind of estimate placed upon such records may be seen by observing what men of high scientific standing say of the results already on hand.

Sir Oliver Lodge, one of the leading physicists now living, says: "If anyone cares to hear what sort of conviction has been borne in upon my mind, as a scientific man, by twenty years' familiarity with these questions which concern us, I am willing to reply as frankly as I can. I AM FOR ALL PERSONAL PURPOSES CONVINCED OF THE PERSISTENCE OF HUMAN EXISTENCE BEYOND BODILY DEATH, AND, THOUGH I AM UNABLE TO JUSTIFY THAT BELIEF IN FULL AND COMPLETE MANNER, YET IT IS A BELIEF WHICH HAS BEEN PRODUCED BY SCIENTIFIC EVIDENCE THAT IS BASED UPON FACTS AND EXPERIENCE."

Professor Stout, of St. Andrew's University in Glasgow, thinks that telepathy "cannot with any approach to probability explain away" the phenomena which Mr. Myers quotes in support of a future life. Professor Muirhead, of Holloway College, England, is hardly behind Professor Stout in sympathetic interest. Mr. Arthur Balfour, Prime Minister of England, though not in any way committing himself, speaks in a tone of hopefulness regarding the evidence. Mr. Andrew Lang admits that Mr. Myers has given in apparitions alone sufficient evidence of survival after death, though he is not yet convinced by mediumistic phenomena.

Sir William Crookes does not announce a definite conclusion for more than something supernormal, but he is thoughtfully sympathetic and probably withholds conviction in deference to the judgment of psychology, being himself a physicist. Cesare Lombroso, the Italian criminologist and whilom materialist, says that "there is a great probability now given us through psychical researches that there is a continued existence of the soul after death." Even Mr. Huxley admitted that the "actuality of a spiritual world is a matter which lies as much within the province of science as any other question about the existence and powers of the various forms of living and conscious activity."

These are no mean judges, and to the list may be added Professor Barrett, Prof. William James, and many others as at least interested in the issues involved and supporters of the investigation, and the writer happens to know personally of many other men of similar public standing who hold similar views upon the subject, but he does not feel at liberty to mention their names in any public manner. They suffice to justify the demand for the scientific consideration of a problem which is one of the most momentous ever opened by science, and, as it is wholly in the interest of the religious mind, the neglect of it, in the face of an opportunity to reconcile science and religion, is inexcusable.

Political men, like goats, usually thrive best among inequalities.—Landor.

We want fewer things to live in poverty with satisfaction than to live magnificently with riches.—St. Evremond.

Pleasure soon exhausts us and itself also; but endeavor never does.—Richter.

Man is not born to solve the problem of the universe, but to find out what he has to do; and to restrain himself within the limits of his comprehension.—Goethe.

As to the priestly organization, the practical effect of the Christian organization, "the church," has always been averse to morality, and is now.—William Kingdon Clifford.

A NOTABLE MEDIUM.

Victorien Sardou, the Great Dramatist, Gives His Spiritual Experience.

"I was one of the first to declare myself a believer in Spiritualism, and that at a time—half a century ago—when there was some merit in doing so, for it usually entailed being stigmatized as a fool, a madman, or a charlatan. Nowadays, with so many of the leading scientific men of the world on the same side, there would be nothing heroic about such a course. In fact, the day is much nearer at hand than is commonly supposed when to scoff will be the hall mark of ignorance.

The incident I have to relate caused me no surprise whatever, for I had witnessed much that was far more singular. I had been a medium for rather more than six months. In my possession was a round table which would walk across the room and turn round and round at my bidding, exactly as if it were a well-trained dog. On several occasions white roses had fallen from the ceiling on my desk and I had seen the keys of my piano rise and fall as if under invisible fingers, to play sweet, unknown airs to me. So familiarized had I become with all these phenomena, of which I was both the instigator and the witness, that I viewed them without the least emotion and, I can positively declare, without any trace of auto-suggestion. I was merely an attentive observer, skeptical at first, then won over by the unimpeachable evidence of facts. Extremely critical, absolutely calm and self-possessed, I looked upon such incidents as unconcernedly as on any of the ordinary acts of my daily existence, the routine of which was then the most regular it is possible to conceive. I used to draw in pen and ink with surprising rapidity extraordinary designs in which my own individual imagination and will had no part. My hand no longer belonged to me, but obeyed some foreign influence which professed to be the spirit of Berard de Palissy.

One Sunday, towards two o'clock in the afternoon, I had sat down at my desk to draw, as usual, with the assistance of this occult influence, and had spread out in front of me on the table a sheet of drawing paper of ordinary dimensions. Instead of beginning to trace a design, however, the pen, obeying a sudden impulsion of my hand, brusquely described an oblique line, reaching from top to bottom of the paper, which was thus rendered useless. On this occasion I interrogated Bernard de Palissy, or, rather, the spirit professing to be his, by the ordinary means, and received for answer, "Paper too small!" I then selected a larger sheet. Again the pen made a line from top to bottom of the paper. Again I put the same question; again I received a similar answer—"Too small!" Larger paper I did not possess, a fact which I pointed out to the spirit. "Go and buy some!" was the immediate order.

I protested. It was raining at the time, and the stationer I usually dealt with had his shop pretty far from the Quai St. Michel, where I then lived. "Go to the Place St. Andre des Arts," said the spirit. I tried to recollect whether there was a stationer's shop there, but could recall none, and told the spirit so. "Yes! There is a shop there. Go and look!" Much astonished, I at last made up my mind to sally forth, and duly reached the spot indicated. I looked all around. Just as I had foreseen, no such shop was to be discovered. Considerably annoyed at having come out on a fool's errand in a heavy downpour of rain, I was about to return, when my eye fell on a signboard over a large doorway, on which was written "Wholesale Dealer in Cardboard." Entering the place, I asked for drawing paper, and found to my surprise that the shopkeeper possessed a stock of every size. I selected what I wanted, and returned home. There I at once spread the paper on the table, and my pencil, without the hesitation wrote, "You see I was right!"

The facts I have related took place in 1857, and shortly after this my mediumistic faculties vanished as suddenly as they had appeared."—The Grand Magazine.

TUMBLE-BUG THEOLOGY.

The Habits of the Scarabaeus Parallel With Theology.

In reading the late W. H. Gibson's accurate description of the habits of the scarabaeus, I was struck by an "inspiration" of the palpable significance of the black-coated priest of entomology as a fair symbol of his human imitators from the days of ancient Egypt down to the present hour. There is a striking resemblance of the strictly orthodox mode of this beetle in handling, coddling and finally depositing for the next generation, their dirty little ball of filth containing their only hope of resurrection, with that of the black-coated human priest, with his blood atonement theory of salvation.

The former is truly a symbol of the latter. The argument is parallel and from the same undoubted origin. We still have "Jesus Christ and him crucified," etc., as the "scapegoat" to take the place of the Jewish sacrifice of bulls and goats of the theological era long past. The well-informed reader will readily trace the theory back to its origin in Egyptology, which regarded this beetle as the emblem of immortality.

Is it not a soul elevating theme for the twentieth century of Roman civilization, that college bred gentlemen, who in some things are up-to-date and intelligent, still cling to the old blasphemous theory of a God of vengeance? There is perhaps not a better symbol of the perverted theory of the resurrection and the immortal life, still insisted on by the theological world, than this poor little tumble-bug.

If a man believes in a God of vengeance and hatred, that man will be vengeful and sufficiently hateful to be a disciple of Jesus, according to Paul, "If any man come unto me and hate not his wife," etc., "he cannot be my disciple."

Yes, it is a sorrowful fact that a large part of Roman or Christian civilization is still playing the tactics of the scarabaeus to perfection.

All this, too, in the face of a world full of light offered us freely from the real immortal life. Is it not time we might take a lesson from the words of the greatest naval hero now living—Admiral Togo—who has just attributed the greatest naval victory the world ever knew—not to human power or sagacity, but to the intervention of the spirits of their ancestors?

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. There is no risk or experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. Below we print extracts from testimonials such as are received by us daily.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutua Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 78 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kan., writes: "My honest opinion of Actina is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It cured my eyes, and cured my wife of asthma."

Hundreds of other testimonials can be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept 342B, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

To Camp Correspondents:—Notices of camp-meetings should reach this office not later than Friday afternoon to secure insertion in the next issue of The Progressive Thinker.

Mrs. M. T. Longley notifies us that H. W. Richardson contributes $10 to the Mediums' Relief Fund.

Dr. G. B. Warne lately returned from Michigan where he had been filling several lecture engagements.

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "The warm weather of Sunday, August 6, did not deter the friends coming out in full force to attend the services of The Rising Sun Mission at the president's home. Both of the parlors were filled with an anxious throng eagerly listening to the able remarks of that grand old orator, Dr. J. MacFarland. He carried his audience with him through his entire discourse, and carried conviction to many a skeptic through his eloquence. His expounding of our grand philosophy was more than a surprise to quite a few orthodox friends, who were in the audience. At the conclusion of his remarks he was roundly applauded. Our choir was out in full force, as several had been away on vacations. The music they rendered was appropriate for the occasion. Spirit messages were given by Brother and Sister Thompson, all of which gave proof positive of spirit return. Services are held Sundays at 8 p. m. at our president's home, 22 Jackson Place, Between Jackson Blvd and Van Buren street, west of Hoyne avenue. We cordially invite friends and strangers to all our meetings. Our speaker for Sunday, Aug. 20, will be Mrs. Martha Price of Boston. All are welcome."

Horace Vernet is the best example of visual memory. He could paint a striking portrait of a man, life-size after having once looked at his model. Mozart had a great musical memory. Having heard twice the "Miserere" in the Sistine chapel, he wrote down the full score of it. There are soloists who during twenty-four hours can play the composition of other masters without ever skipping a note.

About forty Toledo Spiritualists spent Sunday at Lemoine, enjoying an out-of-door luncheon, and holding services on the old Indian camping-ground. The speakers of the day were Mesdames Schoulf, James, Benton, Normberg, Mossbach and Beck; Messers. Decker, Benton, Frick and Ingel.—Toledo (Ohio) News.

James R. Little, lecturer and medium for private and public platform work. Ordained January 10, 1895. He will officiate at weddings and funerals. Send all letters to permanent address, P. O. Box 43, Oakland, Cal.

Thos Rose writes from Toronto, Ont.: "I must congratulate your uptodateness. Honesty will always come out on top."

Those who are thoroughly critical see many chances for improvement in the Chesterfield Camp. The News of Indianapolis, Ind., says: "The rule for several years has been to choose elderly men for practically all of the offices, and particularly on the board of trustees. The younger element in the association is asserting that it is time it should have representation in the executive affairs. The younger members desire to come into power in order that they MAY EXECUTE THEIR PLANS FOR A MORE PROGRESSIVE SPIRIT IN CAMP IMPROVEMENTS AND ENTERTAINMENTS. If they can not gain power desired, they will undertake to pledge the next official board to make several improvements in camp. A modern camp hotel is demanded. A sewer system and water works plant are wanted to improve the sanitation of the camp. A large pavilion for entertainments is also desired, and finally program of social features that will add more life to the camp and therefore attract more people who can then divide their time between the auditorium, seance rooms and modern social entertainments."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

J. A. Toren writes: "The attendance at the meetings at our hall, 361 E. 43rd st., continues to be excellent, and the interest manifested continues to increase as the work of the speaker and medium become known to the investigators. The highly inspired and able lectures delivered by the Rev. Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt, and the convincing and soul-stirring tests given through Mrs. Isa Cleveland, are the means of bringing to many hungry souls the beautiful truths of Spiritualism. Let those who have their doubts and fears, come to our meetings if they wish to be convinced. Strangers are especially invited."

It was currently reported at the Chautauqua grounds last night that strange sights and sounds had again been noticed at the old house just this side of the grounds shortly before 9 o'clock last evening. A prominent business man of this city, whose family is staying out at the Chautauqua grounds, came in this morning and told the story. It is said that a party were passing the old house, which has now come to be known as the "haunted house," when they observed a faint and lurid light flickering out from the black, vacant windows of the old rookery and sounds like moans or groans were distinctly heard. The party did not stop to make any investigation but hurried on their way. The matter was the all-absorbing topic of conversation at the Chautauqua grounds last evening.—Herald-Leader, Menominee, Mich.

G. M. Roberts writes: "On Wednesday evening, July 26, at 112 East 8th street, Jacksonville, Fla., the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Dunn was christened by our medium, Mrs. Amy Buchanan. The parlors were decorated with palms, ferns and rubber plants; vases filled with white and red roses; white lilies and other tropical flowers were in profusion, making the house a bower of fragrance and beauty. The fire place and mantel were a bank of sunflowers. An inspirational lecture by Bro. Thomas B. Davis was read. The baby was named by spirit friends, and christened with the petals of the red and white rose, the sunflower and green leaves. The services were beautiful and impressive. This is the first baby christened in Jacksonville, according to Spiritualistic ideas. Instrumental and vocal music enlivened the occasion. The members of the Zuleika Society and other invited guests witnessed the ceremony. Delicious refreshments were served."

Out at Surprise Lake, seven miles from Tacoma, Wash., and just off the line of the Interurban electric line, a new white-topped city has sprung up. The occasion of the city of tents is the fourth annual encampment of the State Spiritualists association. Surprise Lake is a short distance from Edgewood. Between thirty and fifty tents had been erected the first day and a number of cottages are in course of construction. The grounds are platted in regular manner and lots for tents or cottages are leased, but cannot be purchased outright. The State Association, which was organized nine years ago, owns ten acres of land adjoining the lake."

Correspondent writes: "The First Society of Spiritualists of Syracuse is holding services through the warm weather. We consider the society fortunate in having secured the services of the gifted speaker, Rev. J. C. F. Grumbine, of Boston, Mass. His lectures are spiritual and eloquent. The hall is well filled each Sunday evening with the deep thinkers instead of curiosity seekers. Mrs. Addie Cooper of this city is the message bearer. She seems able to bring the spirit world very close with her psychometric readings."

The Sun of Norwich, N. Y., contains the following notice of one of our most valued contributors, Henry Morrison Tefft: "However much one may disagree with him in opinions, his sincerity as a speaker and writer, no one can question. Every sermon he ever preached, every lecture he ever delivered, every article he ever wrote was born out of life's experience. He has lived in ecstasy of success and in the gloom of despair, he has felt the glory and flush of victory and the mortification of defeat. He is brilliant, but uncertain; he is always interesting but not always consistent. His opinions are on wings ever ready to take a new flight, and no one ever knows when he has finished one sentence, on what topic he will light next and yet there is a rhythm and a harmony running all through, so that when you have finished reading his article, or heard him through with his lecture, you feel as though the mental picture he has made is complete and that not a sentence could be left out without marring its beauty."

D. G. Hill writes: "Notwithstanding the warm weather on Sunday evening, Aug. 6, an audience filling all the seats greeted the Golden Rule Spiritualist society at its hall, to listen to the lecture delivered by H. M. French of Peoria, Ill. He chose for his subject mediumship, and held the rapt attention of the audience until the finish. His talk was practical and to the point under consideration and merited the hearty thanks of the listeners. The messages were given by Mrs. Nellie Kussgrow, and the speaker, Mr. French, and were equally well received and recognized. The steadily increasing attendance at our summer Sunday evening meetings is a source of great encouragement to all who have a hand in the conducting of same, and we still extend a cordial invitation to all to meet with us on each Sunday evening, at O'Donnell College Hall, So. Paulina street, between Washington Blvd and Park avenue. Open Door."

Mrs. Charles Gage writes from Jackson, Mich.: "On Sunday, Aug. 6, the Spiritualists of Jackson were favored with an opportunity to visit the beautiful grounds of the Grand Ledge Spiritualist camp-meeting association, and attend the meeting now in session there. It was indeed an enjoyable occasion, as about three hundred of our people went on the special train furnished us by the camp management. We had the pleasure of listening to the inspired utterances of that peer of the best Spiritualist lecturers, Dr. B. F. Austin. His discourses were indeed soul-inspiring. It was also a pleasure to find our old friend, Oscar A. Edgerly, presiding as chairman of the meeting. There can but be a good influence when he and his guides are at the helm. The music at the camp was exceptionally fine, the Wertz family of Anderson, Ind., having charge, ably assisted by Dr. Charles Stevenson, and his gifted and most spiritual wife. By the way, Dr. Stevenson is a most versatile man. I knew him in Bay City, Mich., where as both magnetic physicians and entertainers he and his wife, Mrs. Blanche Stevenson, were highly appreciated. The Spiritualists of Jackson hope to be able to visit Grand Ledge camp often, for it is a beautiful place. I think The Progressive Thinker is the best Spiritualist paper ever printed."

Dr. Juliet H. Severance is at home enjoying a family reunion. Her son, Fred W. Stillman, known on the boards as Walter Fredericks, will resume his work on the 20th of the present month. Her daughter Lillian Stillman, a beauty specialist of New York, who is now home on her summer outing, will start east about the 25th, accompanied by her mother and brother Byron and the three will visit the Doctor's only sister now on the physical plane, who lives near the place of their birth, about 20 miles from Syracuse. Lillian will spend about two weeks there, returning to her business in New York. The others will be back in Chicago about November 1. Dr. Severance would like to make engagements to lecture during the fall and winter; also for next camp season. Address Juliet H. Severance, M. D., 578 East 60th street, Chicago.

Virginie Barrett writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "I am at present serving the Grand Rapids Spiritual society, and am meeting with success in the open-outdoor meetings, drawing the interest of the strangers. These are held on the large and beautiful lot upon which a spiritual temple will be erected in the near future. Though not a public park yet, I am pleased that the friends of the good cause of this city have seen the wisdom in this new movement of open-air mission for the benefit of the cause. I shall give a full account of the work here later. Camps or societies desiring my services for fall and winter work will please address me at No. 224 Lagrave street, Grand Rapids, Mich. I will try and secure a test medium. Friends do not forget to secure a copy of the 'Katydid' song, for the benefit of the Mediums' fund."

Sam Foss writes that he has returned to the city from Indiana, and is now located at 3514 Vincennes avenue, where he will hold circles and give readings. Telephone Douglas 6749.

TWENTY EIGHT AUG 11

Mrs. Lora Holton writes: "I will receive pupils for development in inspirational singing and piano playing after September 1. All interested in this line of work, please call or write from 7 to 9 p. m. (except Sunday and Monday evenings) at 497 East 43rd street, Flat 11, third floor. I have been engaged in giving scientific psychic palm reading in Michigan this summer and have succeeded in interesting many new investigators in the grand truth of spirit return. I always find The Progressive Thinker a welcome visitor in the lovely homes throughout that grand old state."

Joseph M. Bare writes: "In your issue of July 1, under the heading of Bogus Mediums' Tricks, falsifying or denying of mediumship is plainly shown. I positively affirm that those numbered tricks, if done in the plain, simple, unaided manner, as stated, cannot be done without mediumship; if they can, then spirit phenomena is in no way superior to legerdemain or sleight-of-hand tricks. If these simple tricks can be so done as stated, spirit phenomena could not do more." Brother Bare should remember that the trickster can only "imitate" a certain class of phenomena and while the "imitation" may in some cases deceive, the way it is done is always different from the genuine spirit manifestation. One is deception and the other is not.

L. E. Beal writes from Lewiston, Maine: "I congratulate you on the superexcellence of the late numbers of your paper. The article by Nora Batchelor is worth its weight in gold. Your selections on the woman question are highly appreciated and show that you are willing others should enjoy the rights you claim for yourself. Stand by your colors on the fake business! If spirits or Spiritualism need the help of fraud and deception, the sooner they go down the better. I know by sad experience that there is an obsession of inherited tendencies it is hard to be rid of, and there may be other obsessions, but I fancy not so frequent as some imagine."

Sunday, September 3, 1905, the Spiritual Church of the Students of Nature will begin its Sunday services at 7:30 p. m., at Van Buren Opera House, corner Madison street and California avenue. Speakers and test mediums will be present to give communications. The pastor, Mrs. M. Schumacher, will answer calls for such duties as are generally performed by the clergymen. Residence, 144 Loomis street, near Van Buren. Telephone Polk 1873.

James A. Patterson, secretary, writes from Denver, Colo.: "The Psychical Research Society will begin holding public meetings on September 3, 1905. Speakers and platform test mediums expecting to be in Denver during the G. A. R. encampment, or those passing through en route to the East or West are requested to correspond with the secretary in regard to engagements. State phase of work and lowest terms in first letter. Good opportunity for lecturers to make expenses while seeing the sights and visiting the resorts in and around Denver. Address me at No. 1434 So. 15th street, Denver Colo."

Miss M. Adele Thieman writes: "I have just spent some time at the Western Wisconsin Camp Association, Unity Park, Wonewoc, Wis. Unity Park is one of the most beautiful spots at which a camp meeting could be held, it being situated on the top of a very high hill from whose steep cliffs I have witnessed a most gorgeous sunset. The camp is rapidly growing. The talent there is of the best, Will J. Erwood, Mrs. J. P. Whitwell, Mrs. Amanda Coffman, Dr. B. F. Austin, Dr. and Mrs. Noyes and Edna Ford-Pierce being on the grounds during my stay there, Rev. Moses Hull and others are expected. Mrs. Coffman's blindfolded seances are very convincing to the skeptic and unbeliever. The best recommendation I can give the camp is to say I am not sorry I went."

E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "Mrs. M. T. Longley, secretary of the N. S. A., has departed for the East. She will join Prof. Longley at Boston, and will speak at Onset Aug. 20. Mr. F. A. Wood, president of the First Spiritualist Society, is spending his vacation in the East. Mrs. W. Farrow has returned and meetings of the Temple League will be held as usual at her home, and at Marshall Hall. Mr. Walter Williams is secretary of the Temple League; Miss Wilson is recording secretary. The Spiritualist Benevolent Society met at Mrs. T. Hinkle's Thursday evening. Mrs. Hinkle holds meetings Sunday and Friday evenings. Mrs. Zallie Luse gives private readings. Mrs. Julia Warneke, 1222 Eye street, holds meetings Monday evenings during the summer. Mr. Emil Nabbe has secured a pleasant room for his meetings in the Spanish Veterans' Hall, on Fifth street. Meetings every Sunday evening."

E. H. Manning writes from Elkhart, Ind.: "Having made a careful study of what is termed magnetic or psychic healing some years ago and met with marked success in treating of diseases pronounced incurable, this led me to the investigation of spirit return, and I have through the aid of good mediums been made acquainted with those on the spirit side of life who work with me. They are learned men. Some of them were physicians while in earth life. This has set me to thinking along new lines, and life seems brighter, and death has no chill. The spiritual man unfolds and starts upon his mission, while the old casing is laid away. What a beautiful thought it is to realize that all the knowledge of good and for good which we gain while in the mortal is an everlasting wealth which may go with us all through eternity. I have changed my address to the above place and will be glad to hear from all my old friends or others."

Secretary of the Forest Home Camp, Snowflake, Mich., writes: "Camp work is going along nicely. Many improvements are being made, especially along our lake front; streets cut through; lots laid and cleared, which are very desirable. We are beginning to see the possibilities of our camp and more than ever proud of its location. Everyone from far and near admires its beautiful scenery, healthful climate and dryness of atmosphere. No smudges to be made to keep away mosquitoes and other annoying things. Our camp is favored by our N. S. A. missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague. It is as an inspiration to have them with us, lending from their store the enthusiasm which we so much need, and the bettering of things and places, wise suggestions which they have gained in their many years of work and travel. Mrs. Cora Morrill is with us and will remain until close of camp, Aug. 20. A. A. Finney, trumpet medium, is doing great work for the camp. I feel sure all fully appreciate him."

W. F. Schumacher writes: "A spiritual dedication or baptism was held Sunday afternoon, July 30, at the Society Band of Harmony, 523 Belmont avenue, of which Sister Schwahn is the medium. Mrs. M. Schumacher, the pastor of the Church of the Students of Nature, officiated. The earthly name of the boy is Charlie Harry Abergast. While sprinkling the flowers over the child it was given the spiritual name, Balm of Gilead; definition, 'I am cured or healed.' The baby girl's name is Irene Edna Kieler; spiritual name, 'Primrose'; definition, 'Modest worth silent.' The pastor in charge taking up each child in turn offered it to the true spiritual principles of Spiritualism; then placing the child in the mother's arms for safe keeping, the pastor then said to the parents: 'This child has come to bless your wedded life as a messenger of light,' and blessed them. The large audience which attended were more than repaid to witness the ceremony. The music was furnished by Prof. Hunt; violin solo by Master Larson; excellent singing by the choir of Students of Nature, which brought sunshine and greeting to the audience through our noble worker, Mrs. McIntyre. All went home rejoicing."

Mary Purcell writes: "The Ladies' Aid of the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Spiritual Society is continuing its meetings every week during the summer months. The Grand Rapids Spiritual Society has purchased a lot in the heart of the city for a temple, and has already paid $1,750 towards it. The Ladies' Aid is putting all its efforts into work for the temple, and is aiding the society in every possible way. The society takes the form of a literary club. Interesting papers and poems are read at the meetings, together with vocal and instrumental music, recitations and inspirational talks. With Mrs. John Hosken as president the society is prospering and progressing in a literary and financial way as it never has before. The Grand Rapids Spiritual Society holds meetings every Sunday on its lot on Lagrave street, between Fulton and Island streets. Lectures are given at 2:30 and 7:30 p. m. by Virginie Barrett. The meetings are largely attended and a great deal of interest is manifested."

Mrs. Chas Moses writes from San Pedro, Cal.: "I have been a subscriber to your paper a number of years and could hardly keep house without it. I enjoy reading what other societies are doing all over the country, and thought perhaps a line from our beautiful little seaport town would not come amiss. We have a small society here, but prospects are fair to build up a much larger one in the near future. Mrs. Bryan of Los Angeles is with us for the month, and is having a grand success. Last Sunday evening our little hall was full to overflowing. She is a fluent talker and her test work is satisfactory in every detail. People here are ready and anxious for these beautiful truths and our circles are largely attended. Mrs. Bryan's time is only too short with us, but we expect to secure other good workers after she leaves us. Mrs. Adah Horman and Mr. Bowman, both of Los Angeles, are ready to come and assist us, and so we hope to keep on with the good work commenced here."

Maurgurite Mac writes: "On Thursday evening, August 31, Mrs. M. A. Burland will hold her regular monthly social at her parlors, 3019 Vernon avenue. Good mediums and psychics are always present to give readings and spirit messages, and have a social time. Mrs. Maggie Henry, the palmist, is always present to read the lines in your hands, and Mrs. Burland has something good for the guests to eat; so turn out with your friends and have a good time."

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, August 20, 1905, S. E. 58: "Education."

Gem of Thought:—

'Tis education forms the common mind,
Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined.

For information concerning The Progressive Lyceum, authorized lesson sheet of the National Spiritualists Association, address John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

On Monday evening, July 31, at the home of Revs. J. M. and M. Theresa Allen, a reception was held in honor of Rev. Laura B. Payne of Fort Worth, Texas, president of the Texas State Spiritualist Association. It was a very enjoyable occasion. Brief addresses were made by several persons. Mrs. Payne rendered some of her charming songs. Prof. Allen gave a delightful violin solo, a vocal duet by Mrs. Payne and Mrs. Allen. In due time refreshments were served (ice cream, lemonade and cake). Among the large number present were: Mrs. Payne, Dr. E. M. Hendricks and wife, G. W. Langston and wife, Prof. Higgins, Mrs. Colby (teacher), Mrs. Lapham, daughter and family, H. G. Hanneman (artist), Clarence Wright (musician), Mr. and Mrs. Black, Mr. and Mrs. Loveless, Mrs. Jennings, Mr. Coedis and son, Mr. Huxley, Surrage and family, Mrs. K. Smith, Mrs. Martin, Mrs. Norton, Mr. Sargent, Mr. Gridley.—Springfield (Mo.) Republican.

J. Osborne Lunt writes: "After reading that article, 'A Potent Remedy for the Evil,' by Nora Batchelor in the issue of July 29, I could not help thinking that it was too bad to have such grand articles like this go out of print; they are worthy of pamphlet form."

Mrs. Sylvia E. Carey writes: "The meetings of the Kenwood Spiritual Church, which holds services each Sunday afternoon at 3 and evening at 8 o'clock, at Kenwood Hall, 4308-10 Cottage Grove avenue, are constantly on the increase in attendance; notwithstanding the weather has been more or less unfavorable during the past month the attendance has been very good. We have fifty to sixty people each Sunday. On August 6, we had with us one of the most earnest workers for the cause of Spiritualism, His lecture was on various up-to-date topics. He is always ready to step into the harness, and speak a word on Spiritualism. We are always happy when we can have Dr. J. H. Randall and his good wife with us. Mr. J. S. Von Broecklin assisted our medium, Mrs. Aitken, in giving messages. Mr. Von Broecklin will be with us during the month of August. Good music and tests and messages given at each meeting by Mrs. Aitken, assisted by other mediums. Come and bring your friends and learn the truth. All are welcome."

MRS. ISA WILSON KAYNER.

Her Work in Kansas is Commended.

Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, in her excellent work both at the Winfield camp lately, and here since, has shown what can be done by a medium who has such powerful guides as her father, "the Gentle Wilson," and Oscar and some others.

She gave some of the best tests given at the camp, notwithstanding the boasts of the mediums there who seemed to have a "pull." In addition to her other fine work she gave the last night there her most wonderful fire test. After having her face and hands washed in full view of the audience to show there were no chemicals used she went about with a lamp blaze streaming in her face without burning or even smoking her face.

From Winfield she came here where she showed her ability in more than one direction. Her first Sunday here she gave a fine lecture on materialization and other phenomena, showing that every phase of mediumship mentioned in the Bible is done by the mediums of to-day. She held the close attention of the audience. She gave some very fine tests after the lecture. She has no set style of programme but adapts herself to the audience. August 6, she spoke on various topics selected by the audience and gave some thrilling words that moistened many eyes, on topics that some considered worn out. In short, her whole work here and at Winfield which the writer witnessed, shows she has talents and gifts in very many lines and phases—speaker, clairvoyant, test medium, slate-writer, fire test. She is a remarkable reader of different people whom she meets and is a harmonizer of conflicting elements. She has great power to draw opposing forces to her, having brought people to her meetings who declared they would not come.

She is just the one to send out to do propaganda work, having aroused an interest here as very few mediums have done.

VERITAS.

Wichita, Kansas.

Edgewood Camp, Wash.

Now that this camp is fairly under way, it may be in order to report the progress so far made. Camp opened in due form July 30, with a fairly good attendance and a goodly number of "permanents"—that essential feature of pleasant and profitable camp life.

The ball started on its rotary motion with an impetus sufficient to carry it over the three weeks' course, at 11 a. m., Sunday, July 30, State President R. F. Little occupying the chair, who, by the way, knows enough about such enterprises and the "eternal fitness of things," not to indulge in prolonged introductory remarks or a long roll of preliminaries. He stated that it gave him more than ordinary pleasure to introduce the first speaker named upon the roster, a veteran whose campaign began a half century ago, and promised to extend indefinitely into the future; and, although checked, and at times apparently defeated, never thought of surrender, and would be heard—the earnest and loyal ex-president of the Washington State Spiritual Association, Brother P. C. Mills.

We were favored with an appropriate and soul stirring address, and the audience showed its appreciation by hearty applause.

Brother Will C. Hodge is also with us, and is "filling the bill" in good form. We don't know his "chronology," but think he must be a lineal descendant, or at least, a product of the "Revolutionary period," for, like the "minute men" of that period, he is "always ready." He seems to know instinctively where the "firing line" is located, for there we find him. Brother Hodge is not sensational, but for sound, practical thinking, speaking and acting, the three things most needed at this stage of our work, he is all right.

Our local talent is responding with enthusiasm. Mrs. Chassee, Mrs. Lapworth and others answering promptly at every call.

Yesterday (Sunday, Aug. 6) we listened to a soul-stirring address, than which there will be few better during the camp, by Mrs. Irene Smith of Tacoma.

The audience was large; the meeting held in the open, and the inspiring sunlight, rifted in through the leafy covering; the gentle breezes with their blended perfume of pine and cedar, the cool and invigorating vibrations from Mt. Rainier, and the rippling crystal waves of Puget Sound, together with the inspiring zeal of the speaker, conspired to make the occasion long to be remembered.

Mrs. Smith is an able speaker, and while an ardent Socialist, held herself well in hand. R. F. LITTLE.

"The Jesuits." By Rev. B. F. Austin, A. M., B. D. An excellent pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

GONE TO ANOTHER LIFE.

A Prominent Spiritualist of Brandon, Vermont.

Dr. Ezra A. Smith of Brandon, Vt., passed to spirit life, July 17, 1905. The deceased was born in Pittsford, Vt., April 6, 1839. He spent his boyhood days on a farm. In early years he was not physically robust, but what he lacked in bodily vigor, was made up in strength of will. At a very early day he exhibited those traits of character that were so marked during his active life. He ever manifested an untiring energy and perseverance in the accomplishment of his every undertaking. Convinced at an early day of the fact of spirit communion, he was very much interested, and attended seances and visited mediums at every convenient opportunity. When about sixteen years of age he became developed clairvoyantly to examine patients, locate and describe disabilities and prepare the remedies, which were mostly roots and herbs from nature's great storehouse.

In those early days, any movement, theory or practice, in the treatment of disease or religious belief, not in accordance with the old plan, or that was considered in anyway connected with Spiritualism, was met with opposition and bitter ridicule on every hand. Dr. Smith was courageous and followed the path into which he had been led. He was looked upon by the church adherents and the wealthy fashionable class as a young stripling going on the wrong and dangerous road.

It is a long road that has no turns. In his professional and business relations Dr. Smith soon came in touch with a wide circle of friends and acquaintances, and became well known throughout New England and the West. To avoid personal trouble that might come from the old medical combination that is ever on the watch, he early took a course of medical studies at Hanover, N. H., and at the National Medical College, in Washington, D. C. He has always stood by the mediums and healers, and fought the medical trust in the Vermont Legislature all his life.

Before locating permanently in Vermont, Dr. Smith married Miss Fannie Davis, who was among the most able speakers on the Spiritualist platform, and very popular in New England and the Middle West. Dr. Smith met with an irreparable loss in the passing away of his estimable wife in October, 1893.

Vermont was the first state in the Union to organize a Spiritualist State Association, and Dr. Smith was its president for thirteen years previous to 1903.

He was one of the founders of the Queen City Park Association, and was its president for twenty-two years. For several years he also had large interests in Lake Pleasant camp-meeting association, and held official positions positions there. By his will he placed all his interests at the Queen City Park in the hands of two trustees for the use and benefit of Queen City Park Association and the cause of Spiritualism in Vermont.

His nearest surviving relatives are two sisters, Mrs. Augusta Adams of Minneapolis, Minn., and Miss Flora Griswold of Brandon, Vt.

His funeral was held in Brandon, Vt., July 20, under Masonic orders. Officiating at the services were Rev. Mr. Staples, Unitarian, of Burlington, Vt., and Alonzo F. Hubbard, Spiritualist, of Tyson, Vt. There could be no more appropriate place from which to write this obituary notice of Dr. E. A. Smith, than at Queen City Park, the place that has been ever dear to his heart.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Mrs. Mary A. Prentice passed away at the home of her niece, Mrs. L. A. Pelton of Waupaca, Wis., Thursday, July 20, aged 85 years. The funeral was held from the home of deceased in Sheboygan Falls, Wis. For over fifty years Mrs. Prentice has been a firm believer in the philosophy of Spiritualism.

Passed to the higher life, Mrs. Eliza Smith, July 11, from her home in Clarksfield, Ohio, in her 93rd year. She was the last of the early pioneers, having, when only 4 years old came with her father's family from Connecticut to the township where she has since resided. Her life was commensurate with the development of the country from the wilderness. She had been a Spiritualist for many years and was supported in her declining years by her faith. Hudson Tuttle spoke from the text of her life, to a large attendance of relatives and friends. * * *

Called to the Summerland, July 21, Miss Mina Bonter of Moorland, Mich., at the early age of 19 years. A sister of 17, Miss Myrtle, preceded her but one month ago. This world is richer for their contribution of beautiful character and love, and heaven will have added charms for us all because of their presence there. A large company of friends bore the mortal part of Miss Bonter to its last resting place. Funeral services were conducted by the writer. EMMA GIBBS.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

HIMALYA
(THE KOLA COMPOUND)

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific, proving that

HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA can be CURED.

Mr. W. H. Kelley, 317 46th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma by Himalya, after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Closser, 136 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good, but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya, as it cured me of Hay-Fever and Asthma, and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-Fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write today to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Reporter: Q. Is the body now being honored by the nation, that of John Paul Jones?

A. There is about as much probability of its being as it is that it is the mummy of the Pharaoh who chased the Jews out of Egypt, and the story of its finding and identification, discounts the advertisement of the "Cardiff Giant."

Some one was seized to do the sea-fighter honor, and to do this his body must be found. Search was made by burrowing under the city of Paris, for the place where he was supposed to be buried is over-built. Five coffins were found, four having name-plate of forgotten people, one had none, and hence was taken for the treasure. One hundred and thirteen years he had been buried, yet he was so well preserved that strangers would have at once recognized him. The measurements of body and face exactly corresponded to a bust made some time before his decease! What skill that artist must have had to make the bust as accurate as a cast!

So it is Jones, and a big battleship brings the coffin to this country, to be buried with great honors, and monumented.

It is all well, whoever may own the crumbling dust. It makes occasion for the display of the nation's gratitude, and just now fighting and a "strenuous life," are at a premium. The battleships may as well be chasing across the ocean as resting in port, and if Paul accompanies his supposed ashes across, he will have opportunity to compare the modern steel monster with the wooden tub in which he achieved so much fame by his audacity.

This new world ought to have some ancient sepulchers and it would be a taking scheme if some legislator would move an appropriation to bring over and properly express our regards for the bones of Adam, or Moses. A delegation sent on that mission would find these relics "well authenticated," within six months.

James B. Brown: Q. What of radium and its relations to life?

A. Perhaps nothing has ever been more adroitly exploited in the realm of science than radium. Penny-a-liners have spun out column after column drawing more or less exclusively on their imagination. Several "scientists" have gained notoriety, by dabbling experimentation, and filling eager reporters with their conclusions or want of conclusions.

"Eminent physicians" at once applied the mysterious substance to the cure of disease, and without reservation proclaimed that at last a cure for cancer and tuberculosis had been found. It is sufficient to say that the treatment has not been continued. Had men without diplomas performed these experiments, they would have been set down as quacks. There is no more reason for supposing radium to be more intimately connected with life, than for any other substance.

Electricity was taken up by the doctors and heralded as the principle of life, and universal curative agent. Everything new or mysterious "goes for good medicine."

The fact is that there is such an infinitesimal quantity of the substance in hand that its physical qualities are unknown, and descriptions are only fancies.

Wm. Bayard Hale, in the New York Times, has a lengthy article on this subject, especially regarding the relations of the substance to life, and the much advertised experiments of Prof. Loeb.

Prof. Loeb gained his notoriety by hatching the sea urchin's unfertilized eggs with the use of chemicals instead of male fertilizers. It was heralded that he had created living forms! The eggs of numerous species of insects as the bee, ant, plant-louse, may hatch without fertilization, even by chemicals.

Now another, Prof. J. Butler Burke, has by adding radium to beef broth, produced bacteria—living cells—or something he mistakes for them. May be they are crystals, may be something not within his knowledge. But he thinks strongly that he has created living beings! His experiments, like all preceding ones of this class, have not been repeated, and probably will not, if so repeated, confirm the conclusion.

The following shows how wild are the assertions of the most eminent scientists:

"It is a sober fact that radium has shaken the laws of gravitation, has set at apparent defiance the law of the conservation of energy, has displaced the atomic theory by the corpuscular theory, has rewritten chemistry, and has provided a new account of the ultimate constitution of the universe."

It may appear to be presumptuous to dispute such high authority, yet every point in the above is assertion and is purely imaginary.

It is astonishing that men having positions in colleges as professors, should willingly cater for the cheap notoriety of yellow journalism.

There has not been produced the least evidence that radium has curative powers. Its destructive energy is more apparent. Ninety-nine hundredths of all that has been written about radium has been imagination, and its authority rests entirely on the name of the writers. Without such names, most of the "experiments" and "conclusions" would be greeted with ridicule.

In fact so much is visionary and fanciful, that it is exceedingly difficult to determine what is the truth in regard to this substance; so much is false, one almost doubts if there is anything more than pretense.

"Interested": Q. Will Peary be successful in his present venture to reach the pole?

A. A similar question was asked some three years ago and the answer was negative. This department does not set up claims of prophecy, yet from what is known of the area within 500 miles of the North Pole, it would be in accord with the facts to pronounce the feat impossible.

In his last expedition Commander Peary reached a point less than 400 miles from the pole. He there found the ice-surface of huge blocks of ice with yawning fissures, extending to the horizon, and impossible to traverse. This condition is undoubtedly permanent, having existed for unknown time. Why he expects to find this barrier more practical of passage now, than when he first met it, he gives no reason, and there is none to give. It is there and no dog-team with sledge can cross.

A few years ago, the "open polar sea," was set down with great assurance by explorers and geographers. That has been found to be a myth. The pole is ice-locked and can be reached only by passing over the confusion of ice-hummocks of indescribable roughness. The reader may draw his own conclusions, if it is probable or possible that a team of dogs will be able to pass over the four hundred miles of this barrier.

Another correspondent, "Q," asks how the explorer will know when he reaches the pole? In that desolate region of frost, there will be no indication of the sought for goal. The magnetic poles are indicated by the magnetic needle. They do not correspond to the axis of rotation. The earth is a vast magnet, the southern half negative and the northern positive. The southern magnetic pole is in latitude 70 degrees south, 154 east longitude. It has never been reached. There are two northern poles, or points of density, one on the coast of Siberia, 71 degrees north, longitude 116 east, and one south of Hudson's Bay, 55 degrees north, longitude east 263 degrees. These have been reached, and are indicated by the 90 degrees dip of the magnetic needle. The magnetic equator cuts the equator at an angle of 15 degrees. But it must be remembered that these poles, and all magnetic circles dependent thereon are not stationary, but move slowly from year to year in great cycles, coming back to their original position.

The position of the pole is ascertainable in the same manner that longitude and latitude are determined, by observation of the heavenly bodies. Practically the polar star will be in the zenith to one standing at the north pole.

ANOTHER VIEW.

Showing a Slight Difference of Opinion.

From time to time those who would practice the art of healing are advised through the columns of this valuable paper and elsewhere, to give their services free of charge; and among healers there are some who believe that if they ask a fee they seriously offend their spirit associates, of whom their opinion is much like the old orthodox idea of God, who was supposed to become easily incensed over the misdeeds of His children.

Ministering angels undoubtedly have no use for silver dollars, still it is incredible that any worthy of the name should object to their friends and coworkers still in the mortal, enjoying the ordinary comforts of life which depend wholly upon the dollar.

Such ideas are out of date, and should be relegated to the garret of Modern Spiritualism. Yet they are occasionally revived by authorities in high standing, and among them one of The Progressive Thinker's ablest writers. This seems out of keeping with his usual wise counsel and also with the advertisements of his inspirational books that have been running for some time in the same paper.

To be consistent he would send forth his efforts in the manner prescribed by Tolstoy, and let the reader and the publisher reap all the benefits. It is probably not necessary to be consistent, however, since Emerson did not consider it so; nor is there harm, perhaps, in practicing one thing and preaching another.

The only objection is that it is not sound doctrine. The casual observer might say that it is not fair to the healer; the more than casual observer would say it is not fair to either healer or patient. Why? Because the man who pays his fees promptly receives the best attention. The healer, feeling that his work is appreciated, consciously or unconsciously puts forth his best efforts.

The patient who pays, regains his health without losing his self-respect; he is not lowered in his own estimation by getting something for nothing.

It is true that a healer cannot heal while he is thinking of money; nor, be it said, can a writer write, or a preacher preach, or a painter paint, under like conditions. If a worker in any profession expects results, money must be an after thought or a forethought, but it is indispensable.

The writer of a successful book, inspired by spirit forces, is rewarded for a few days' work as long as the public can be induced to buy; while the healer's pay stops when his work stops, if not before.

Of the various phases of mediumship, "doubtless," says Professor Leadbeater, "that of spirit healing is of the most practical benefit to humanity," and yet it is the most poorly paid. One reason for this being that so many physical and mental unfortunates apply for help who have previously experimented with every drug and nostrum in the pharmacopoea. They have little hope left, and less money, and come to the healer as a last resort.

Another reason is that people who have been brought up on pills and powders dislike to pay for medicine that cannot be seen or tasted. To follow the somewhat questionable policy of the medical fraternity and tax the rich sufficient to cover the lapses of the poor might regulate the difficulty.

Be that as it may, there appears to be no valid reason why healers should donate their services which require intense concentration and call for infinite patience and endurance, to those who are able to pay for it.

All gifted workers in the cause of humanity are mediums in a certain sense. They draw from the unseen and give to the world, and the world never grudges them a living.

Although "the most useful phase of mediumship" has, in the past, been more or less hampered by being associated in the public mind with charlatans and necromancers, it has never gone begging.

To confine spirit healing to deeds of philanthropy would be to greatly circumscribe its field of usefulness. And those of its friends who state that "to make a business of mediumship is to prostitute it to selfishness" and "spiritual gifts are priceless and not to be measured by money," give it the appearance of charitable work rather than that of a reputable calling.

They tend to check its progress toward the high place it deserves and is steadily approaching among the honorable and dignified professions.

THE CHURCH OF THE SPIRIT.

Remarks by Its Pastor, Emma L. Arbecum, at a Meeting of the Church of the Spirit, at Jersey City, N. J.

There may be strangers present, who do not know the object or belief of the First Church of the Spirit (our church name).

Our object is to extend to all humanity the comfort of spiritual help without regard to sect, creed or condition.

In chapter 12, I. Cor., it says, "There are diversities of gifts bestowed upon man, but only one spirit. To one is given words of wisdom, to another knowledge; to one faith, to another healing; to one the working of miracles, to another prophecy; to one discerning of spirits, to another divers tongues and interpretations thereof."

Now those who speak to you here do so under inspiration. They are moved and guided by the Spirit. Those who give you messages, do so, from a spirit power of highest truth, of themselves they could tell you nothing.

Some people think it is mind reading, but that is not true, because they tell you things that never were in your mind. It cannot be character reading or guess work, what then can this marvelous power be which describes friends and loved ones long passed away; which goes into your inmost heart and soul, laying bare its sorrows, griefs and troubles, which knows you as you are, not to the world, but to God; what can it be but spiritual power and a gift from God which is in all, over all, and knows all.

God and Spirit are the same today as they were in the beginning, and God has always manifested himself, but the Spirit, in visions, dreams, voices and materializations.

There were mediums in the bible days, just the same as now, but they were called by different names.

Saul went to the witch or woman of Endor and begged her to call up the spirit of Samuel for him, because he was in sore trouble. She would not do so at first because he had issued an edict of death against all wizards and seers, but on his promise that she should not be harmed, she gave herself up to the power, and saw gods ascending out of the earth; then an old man coming up covered with a mantle, and Saul recognized Samuel, and bowed his face to the ground. Samuel asked him "why he had disquieted him and brought him up?" Saul answered, because he was greatly distressed and feared God had departed from him, and that he would not answer him any more neither by dreams or prophecies. That the Philistines were making war against him and he wanted Samuel to tell him what to do. So Samuel spoke and told him, "The Lord would deliver Israel and him into the hands of the Philistines;" then he added, "tomorrow thou and thy sons shall be with me." Then Saul fell upon the earth in great fear. And it came to pass exactly as the spirit of Samuel had told him through the medium of Endor.

A woman in other days was said to be possessed by a familiar spirit. Today it is the same, but they are called guides or controls.

How could any mortal mind or imagination describe to you the dear face of a mother, father, sister, brother, or child passed away, or know what special thing to say to you to comfort you.

I could not do it if my life hung in the balance because I have not that gift.

Spiritualism is a most beautiful religion, because it takes away all fear of death, and it should bring eternal hope and faith to every sorrowing heart.

If there is no death, our loved ones never leave us, except as we know them in mortal life. They are near us always and try to help us.

The conditions about ourselves prevent us from seeing them or hearing them, but we can get their messages through those upon whom the gift of seeing and hearing through the spirit world has been given. I am sure in all our lives, there have been some moments when we have had glimpses of those divine truths, but we let them pass as a fancy, or an imagination, or a delusion, when by holding to them and believing we might possess the power of communication ourselves.

In what other church do they reach the individual as in ours? Fashionable clothes, riches, power, position, count for naught here, the poorest mortal is welcome here, and our message bearers try to reach the stranger among us, and those most needing help.

If there is wonder why they do not tell you more of your spirit friends or tell you what you would expect your friends to say, why is not the wonder more marvellous that they can tell you anything? If they can give you just one word of hope, or love, or comfort, it should convince you of this wonderful truth, that we are immortal and never die, that the change called death does not send us into a state so far away, that we do not break the bonds of love which bind us to those here; no, it is an eternal and endless chain, never broken.

The world should give serious heed and be profoundly impressed by the message of Admiral Togo to his Emperor, after winning the great naval battle about which the whole world is talking, this is what he said: "Not by human hands was this battle won, but it was all owing to your Majesty's many virtues and the protection of your spirit ancestors."

Is not that a grand statement or proof of the help we can receive from the "other side?"

In conclusion let us consider the "Declaration of Principles" under which our Church lives and acts:

Declaration of Principles.

1. We believe in Infinite Intelligence.

2. We believe that the phenomena of nature, physical and spiritual, are the expression of Infinite Intelligence.

3. We affirm that a correct understanding of such expressions and living in accordance therewith, constitutes the true religion.

4. We affirm that the existence and personal identity of the individual continues after the change called death.

5. We affirm that communication with the so-called dead is a fact scientifically proven by the phenomena of Spiritualism.

6. We believe that the highest morality is contained in the Golden Rule, "Whatsoever ye would that others should do unto you, do you even so unto them."

Wonewoc (Wis.) Camp.

The Wonewoc (Wis.) camp opened very auspiciously August 5, and has been steadily gaining every day since. Many visitors are on the grounds, and everyone is preparing for the most enjoyable season ever put in on this camp ground. Our talent is excellent, and the work being done is well worthy all that that be said of it.

Among the workers who have arrived are Mrs. Amanda Coffman of Grand Rapids, Mich.; Mrs. J. P. Whitwell of St. Paul, Minn.; Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Noyes of Utica, N. Y. J. S. Maxwell of Minneapolis, Minn.

Dr. B. F. Austin begins his engagement August 12, as does also Mrs. Francis Wheeler. Later on in the week our force will be added to by the presence of our old-time favorite, Brother Moses Hull and others.

Saturday's (opening day) program was taken care of by Will J. Erwood, Mrs. J. P. Whitwell and Mrs. Coffman. Sunday Mrs. Coffman lectured in the morning, and the writer in the afternoon, after which Mrs. Coffman gave us a blindfold message seance which was highly satisfactory. This was done by binding folded kid gloves over the eyes of the medium, after which cards upon which queries had been written were placed upon the table, and were not only read correctly but messages from loved ones were given in a manner to bring the tears to the eyes of the recipients and audience. The writer having the privilege of binding the eyes, knows that it required something more than ordinary eyes to read the messages; it is needless to say that the visitors of the camp were pleased; the fact that this medium has been prevailed upon to remain during the remainder of the camp tells the story.

Brother and Sister Noyes came to us well recommended, and are worthy and efficient workers, judging from what we have seen and heard of them; we are glad they are with us. Of Mrs. Whitwell, only the kindest things can be said; she is an old visitor at this camp, having been on our platform every year since the camp organized. This in itself speaks of the esteem in which she is held.

Our new auditorium is more than satisfactory; aside from being an ornament to the grounds it affords protection against the elements, and as for acoustics—they are simply perfection. Chicagoans will be wise if they come and visit us before the camp closes; we are only six hours' ride from that city. The last two Saturdays, the 19th and 26th, we are favored with excursion rates from all points within a radius of fifty miles, via the Northwestern railway. These excursion tickets will be good for several days. Take it all in all the outlook for the Wonewoc camp is more than favorable this year, and a mistake is made by all who fail to pay us a visit. As for scenic effects, we can safely challenge any camp grounds in the country to surpass us, and I doubt if any even equal this spot.

We have arranged a memorial service in honor of our arisen brothers Nathan and Reuben Fisk, and others; this was to have been held the 12th, but in response to the request of some of the relatives who wish to attend, this service will be held Saturday the 19th instead. Our camp closes the 28th; this gives all a good chance to visit us. Don't miss the opportunity.

WILL J. ERWOOD.

A CORRECTION.

We are in receipt of a copy of the Official Register, recently compiled by Sister Laura G. Fixen. It is very nicely gotten up, and will no doubt prove very useful.

On page 48 (occurring twice in the book) devoted to Missouri, we find under the heading of Springfield the following:

"Spiritual Science Church. Own their temple. Lecturer, Maggie Garrett Shaw; president, D. C. Ashman; secretary, Maggie Norton."

It should read: Lecturers, James Madison Allen and Mrs. M. Theresa Allen; president, Geo. W. Langdon; secretary, H. G. Hanneman.

The directory will probably be seen by nearly every Spiritualist in America at least. It is our duty to state that the person mentioned in the book as lecturer for our society is not and never was in any manner or degree connected with it. She is the one who has made so much trouble in the society on the north side of the city, and is now under indictment for some offense under the guise of trumpet mediumship, etc., "blue book" thrown in.

"TELL T. WILKINS HELLO!"

The above words came in a letter to Mr. Francis, from a very dear old friend, Hiram Eddy, of DeKalb, Ill., and they have inspired me to say:

Hello, back, dear Uncle Hiram! There is music in those words,
That still vibrate in my spirit like the happy songs of birds.
I can sense the inner feeling that inspired you to say—
"Tell T. Wilkins hello, for me!" It can never die away.

How I prize these happy greetings from remaining friends of earth;
They to me have mighty power to express true friendship's worth.
How I cherish little tokens that are links 'twixt heart and heart;
How I love to live within them though our forms are far apart.

How I value tender feelings that are wafted from old friends;
How I prize those silent missives that each kindred spirit sends;
How the clouds that often gather are dispelled and brushed away,
By the thoughts and tender feelings
  I am sensing every day.

Let me hello back the greetings of my soul to one and all;
Let me send the same sweet feeling that upon me seems to fall;
Let my heart throb out its rhythm to the music of the spheres,
And my spirit be responsive to all loved ones down the years.

IN THE SPIRIT REALMS

As Viewed by a Writer in the Mankato (Minn.) Free Press.

"Superstition" is the rather contemptuous term with which most people nowadays are wont to designate countless ideas of the supernatural that existed in the minds of people two and more centuries ago. The once prevalent beliefs in witches, fairies, genii, and other being of this earth that were endowed with mysterious powers far beyond human ken, are now almost universally ridiculed among civilized peoples, and the memory of them preserved only for the sake of little children, whose vivid imaginations love to revel in the unreal and the impossible. Yet even as one stone must rest upon another in the process of masonry, so much each succeeding age be close in contact with its predecessor and partake to some degree of the same character. Beliefs in things supernatural still persist. Today it is no unusual occurrence to hear people of more than ordinary intelligence and culture, narrating events that can be accounted for only on the supposition that beings beyond the knowledge and understanding of living mortals, have produced these marvelous phenomena. Spiritualists find ready believers, and though some are at times found to be mere clever schemers, whose miracles turn out to be nothing but trickery, yet others have performed feats that have led countless thousands to believe just what the spirituals desired, and have puzzled the most skeptical.

A gentleman, who has not been long in Mankato, a man of pleasing address and a delightful conversationalist, tells of an occurrence at a Spiritualist meeting that he attended in Chicago. The Spiritualist approached him and said, "I see somebody sitting beside you."

The chair was empty and the gentleman said he could see nothing.

"Yes," said the Spiritualist, "he is an elderly gentleman, and he calls you John."

"John is my brother's name, to be sure," said the other. "What does he look like?"

"He is of medium height and elderly," rejoined the Spiritualist, "and he has a gray moustache. He is clad in Masonic robes."

"You are describing my uncle in England," the other rejoined, "but his spirit cannot be here. He is alive."

"No; he is dead and here," was the answer.

Some time after this the gentleman happened to be looking over some newspapers that had come from that part of England, where this uncle lived. There was one that he had not read, though it had been received by him some time before. His eye happened to catch an article that was marked, an article telling of the death of his uncle. It was with great surprise that he read this, for he had not even known that the uncle was ill. The Spiritualist had told the absolute truth. That certainly had not been a case of mind-reading on the part of the Spiritualist, for the gentleman really believed at the time that the uncle was still alive. It may be that the Spiritualist had by some means obtained knowledge of the uncle and his death, though the nephew thought that hardly possible.

The writer knows of an experience, the wonder of which has remained unsolved to this day. A boy of about eighteen years, whom he knew in St. Paul, had frightful dreams for three successive nights about his father, whom he saw lying horribly mangled. On the fourth night the boy was awakened by the glare of a fire, and found the barn back of the house, aflame. The whole family was soon aroused. The fire department arrived and the flames were quickly extinguished. Among the debris the firemen found the body of the boy's father. It was discovered that a bullet had entered through the mouth and lodged in the brain. No weapon could be found, however.

Whether this was a murder or a suicide has been a question ever since. But what could have caused the boy's dreams? Was it because the father intended suicide? Was it telepathy? Did one mind impress its thoughts upon the other without the medium of language?

The author of this article remembers an anecdote told him by his grandmother, now deceased, with reference to the death of her aunt. A certain lady who believed in Spiritualism, a friend of this aunt, wished to go away on a visit, but did not wish to be away when the aunt died, which she feared might occur at almost any time. So the lady consulted a Spiritualist woman, who told her that she could stay on her visit as long as she wished, but soon after her return this aunt would be taken sick and die. The lady acted on this advice and remained on her visit as long as she pleased. A few hours after her return home, the aged aunt was taken suddenly ill and passed away.

HYMN OF THE HERETIC.

O thou all-wise creative power
  Which was, and is, and still must be,
A thinking atom in its hour
  Of sentient life approaches thee.
Say, hast thou made alone for praise,
  Inspired with life that man should know
Through half-dreamt dreams and priestly ways
  How he must walk, where he must go?

Omnipotence! I cannot think,
  I cannot feel, I cannot see
How the imperfect thought can link
  The creed of priest with name of thee.
Must I be damned because I stand
  Upon the thought which life has built?
Must I go forth with empty hand
  Because I will not bend to guilt?

If thou hast made me as I am,
  And grooved the path which I pursue,
How canst thou crush? How canst thou damn
  For doing what thou bad'st me do?
O thou all-wise? I cannot bend
  Before the altar man has raised,
Painted with blood of butchered friend,
  By friend religious cause has crazed.

O mighty force which feeds the tree,
  The insect, and the lowest brute;
From priestcraft I would fain be free,
  Though in thy presence I am mute.
The thoughtful find thee everywhere,
  Upon the fields we see thy face,
Within the woods, the sea, the air,
  In depths of interstellar space.

Oh! let the light of thought arise,
  To guide the soul within this shell,
Away from all the fashioned lies
  Which build a heav'n above a hell,
And make a brutal power of thee,
  A monster, building to destroy,
O power divine! thou canst not be
  Made great by crushing human joy.

Down with the priest whose every lie
  Is deeply stained with human blood,
Let church and every evil state
  Be swept away by whelming flood.
Religion found its every theme
  Upon a dismal, thoughtless view,
O power divine! lead man to dream
  In higher, nobler dreams of you.

LETTER FROM LYMAN C. HOWE.

Trip to Lake Brady—Battle With a Storm—Sin and Sickness—Christian Science—Clara Watson at Home—Veteran of Two Wars—Pleasure of Pain.

Home from Brady! As a preparation for my camp work, I overworked—two hours in the wet grass before breakfast—day after day, took a severe cold, got a grind of lumbago, then a stiff neck and lame head and a vicious quarrel between the different members of the alimentary family, and abused nerves turned into line and demanded back pay and bound my head in a vice, while the old reliable conservator, Vitality, refused to be tapped too freely for supplies in advance, and the machine lost balance and ground slowly over the pavement of destiny. But I was engaged and advertised for Lake Brady, August 6, and I must go, and I went.

The journey was enough to make a well man sick. Changing from trolley to Lake Shore at Dunkirk, I was exposed to a driving rain and wind storm which thoroughly moistened my shadow and made my skinny environments shiver. But brisk rubbing, and brave will, brought some of the spare blood from my bones to the skin and compromised by dividing the heat reserves while I rode to Cleveland. The trolley line from there to Lake Brady—via Cuyahoga Falls—was another "test" for my staying qualities. An open window that I could not shut, let a cold blast from the north pole end of a distant thunder storm, pour onto my head and neck which chilled me to the center of my religion. Then the stupidity of the conductor carried me past the changing place at the power house, and delayed me about three-quarters of an hour longer, and about 9 p. m., in the blackness of darkness, I landed at Lake Brady in the midst of a terrific thunderstorm, and no one to lead, guide or direct me to my stopping place.

The rain poured, the lightning blazed with blinding vividness, the awful thunder shook the earth, as I plunged into the darkness, satchel in hand, to find the Hoyce cottage. I asked a man to go with me and show me the way, but he did not want to get wet. I once knew a man to fall into the Canisteo river among the sawlogs, and in the water up to his chin, he called out, "Boys, help me out, quick, before I get wet." I could see no way to escape the rain but to wade through it to a place of shelter. At last I found the house where I expected to stay; the family had retired, but let me in, but informed me that there was no bed nor room for me there. A compromise was arranged and I slept.

Sunday morning I met the faithful at the grove and recognized the sunny faces of the long ago, whose greeting was a tonic and inspiration. Large beautiful bouquets adorned the platform, sweet music charmed the clouds away, and love rippled in the sphere of souls. But the lightnings had burned out the electric lamps, and the friction and pain of the past forty-eight hours had burned out the vitality of my physical machine, and I had not eaten the value of one moderate meal in two days. Can you guess the rest? The intellectual fire was not dimmed, but the vital supplies were inadequate. I spoke perhaps 30 minutes (plenty long enough for a good lecture, and much too long for a poor one) and Mrs. Nina D. Challen of Toledo followed with psychic readings or tests, giving pleasant words to many and apparently truthful representations of the friends she described and named. The music, the flowers, the tests, and the soul-to-soul greetings, the green bowers rippling in the sunshine, hymns from heaven dripping from the leaf-tongues, and the kindling of altar fires in the aisles of memory, made a genuinely good meeting for all of us.

Mr. Figuers and wife came down from Cleveland and occupied a place upon the platform.

Dell Herrick and wife put in an appearance about noon or after, fresh from Grand Ledge, Mich. They reported good attendance and good meetings there. Dr. Peebles, Rev. B. F. Austin, Mr. Edgerly, Mrs. Sheets and others made the time lively. They were enroute for Freeville, N. Y., where Mr. Herrick is billed for next Sunday. Seeing my condition the board volunteered to let me rest for the afternoon, and Mr. Herrick and Mrs. Challen filled in the time. This was not because they got all they could stand from me in the forenoon, for they were not bored even 40 minutes; but it was genuine kindness of heart and appreciation of the exhausting struggles I had just passed through, and a clear perception of my condition. Superannuated! "Played out," "a back number." "a dead duck," eh? No, siree!

The youngest man on the rostrum would play out—for a time—after enduring what I did for four days, and taking less food in two days than most of them take at one meal. I was simply sick. Young men often get sick. I was even worse when 33 years old than at this time, and I have observed that when a man is real sick he does not usually feel well, whether he be 70 years old or only 30. When I was 13 I was so sick I had to go to bed, and lie there and take nasty medicine, and I did not feel a bit like going off on a lecturing tour and having a rough and tumble night fight with a giant thunder storm; neither did I think I was superannuated; but I was just sick, as I was at Lake Brady last Sunday. I have often observed, too, that people that are real sick are not usually as strong, vigorous and active as when they are well.

A Christian Scientist might lie about it, and swear he was not sick when he could not breathe without groaning. But I prefer the plain English truth, even if it cuts the corners of my creed a little; and every man who denies that he is sick, when he is suffering so he cannot hide it in the language of his face, knows he is lying, even if he believes that the lie, repeated often enough, will become a truth.

Monday I left the camp about two hours too soon. There were no time tables to be had on the grounds, or at the gate and I had to guess at it, with the result of two hours' waiting in the depot at Kent. About 5:40 p. m., I presented my shadow at the pleasant home of Mrs. Clara Watson of Jamestown. Her name has become a household treasure to thousands of Spiritualists all over the land, in consequence of her vigorous writings and her fearless expression of her convictions whenever she takes her pen.

Her husband, a veteran of two wars, is a level-headed business man, respected and honored by all who know him. He is keenly alive to the issues of Russo-Japanese war, and probably the best posted on its history and all its details of any man in Jamestown, and, of course, his sympathies are strongly in favor of Japan. On this, as on other subjects, we were agreed.

The whole Watson family are critical and exacting in the observation of occult phenomena. Seated in their pleasant parlor, I was face to face with the splendid picture of Mrs. Watson's father, executed in presence of the whole family—six—at Lily Dale, through the agency of the Bangs Sisters. Many hundreds have examined it, and asked all sorts of questions, made many suggestions and wild guesses, but no one, nor all combined, have made the slightest impression against the facts, or modified in the smallest degree the solid testimony of the senses of the six critical witnesses (one of them an artist) who watched every step in the progress of its development from a clean white canvas to the perfected picture. All who knew the noble man—and nearly all in Jamestown did—agree that the picture is a perfect likeness. It is much admired as a work of art. Art critics can find no defect, or blemish in the perfect work. People who dispute the genuineness of this phenomenon, do not know what they are talking of, or else they do not care for the truth.

Reluctantly leaving the charmed home of rest, I bade good-bye to the Watson groupe, and made for home. On the train north I was surprised to meet the cheerful faces of Hon. Athelston Gaston and Judge Osmer of Franklinville, making their way to the City of Light, from which they will doubtless emerge clothed in celestial bloom and carrying a bouquet of stars from the circle of the Pleiades.

Reaching home about 7:30 p. m., I found Mrs. Howe with her arm in a sling, and suffering a good deal of pain. She had fallen before I left home, but kept the secret from me. We hear much of fallen women; but man never fell but once, Adam did the whole job for his race, for all time, by a single fall. To compete with him the whole race of women have been falling ever since. Now, when a woman falls with a man in her arms, he does not fall, for he is immune; he was vaccinated with the Adam virus and is safe evermore! Fortunately in Mrs. Howe's case, no bone was broken. Wednesday morning about 4 o'clock, she was taken vomiting, purging and retching, like a Christian Scientist trying to tell the truth. She is improving now, a billious attack, which added to her lame arm makes rest a necessity.

BUTTE, MONTANA.

Interest in Spiritualism Increasing From Week to Week.

The interest in our work and that given by our brother and co-worker, Mr. Henry B. Allen, is from week to week increasing here in Butte, and there is an unselfish union of souls for the attainment of divine power of service to man, like the action of the apostles preceding the outpouring of the spirit at Pentecost when in compliance with the Great Teacher's instruction, they met together in his name, "with one accord in one place." Compliance with these specified laws and conditions leads necessarily, as with them, to the formation of all spiritual groups or societies. So when in the course of human events it becomes necessary to introduce a new philosophy and a new revelation to the people of Butte and vicinity, it behooves us whose duty it is to inculcate such doctrines, to look well to the superstructure upon which the same should rest, in order to be able to present the facts in a regular and graduated order from the foundation upward, therefore we named the new association that was thus organized, The Silver Bow Esoteric Society of Butte, Montana, which implies that while the Over Soul or Father of mankind may not be revealed to man through the senses, nor the pure intellectual apprehension; yet that man may have immediate access to and revelation from Spirit through his own inmost and spiritual nature, which relates him to Spirit or the Father as a child to a parent.

The time has now come when it is necessary to teach Spiritualism as any other science is taught in our schools and colleges. The masses have been, and are yet, to a great extent, as they were in the days of Jesus, running after the marvelous and wonderful but have paid but very little attention to the philosophical side of the subject. Physical phenomena have been given with no effort on the part of any one to explain the reason or cause of such phenomena. Even educated and otherwise observant persons seem to be thick-headed or obtuse when contemplating this subject. I cannot understand why this should be so; on other subjects it is not so, for they find from investigation that the law holds good that everything comes from some thing or things that immediately preceded it and was the cause of the same, and why cannot they see that this law holds goods in the investigation of spiritual things? for the poet says:

"The very law that molds a tear,
And bids it trickle from its source,
That law preserves the earth a sphere,
And guides the planets on their course."

We believe that in teaching Spiritualism to the world, the philosophy and phenomena should be taught together, as any good teacher in science illustrates his subjects by means of maps and charts and other apparatus. When ponderous objects are moved, for instance, by spirit agency, or what appears to be by supernatural power, this should be made a topic or subject on which to explain the workings of spirit or odyllic vibrations, and the law of the polarity of substance in such a way that it will be made plain and comprehensible to those who witness the phenomena.

That is what we are endeavoring to do here in Butte and vicinity. Through Mr. Allen we get some of the most wonderful physical phenomena that have ever been given to mortal man, and that, too, under the most strict test conditions, that no one yet, in all the years that he has been before the public as a physical and musical medium, can say that they have had any suspicions of trickery or fraud.

We do not give this to advertise his mediumship or our work. It needs none. We have been before the public now for many years, and the public in general know what we are. It is to show the manner in which we work, and to show the necessity in presenting both phases of the work together, which has a tendency to keep Spiritualism unspotted and clean, clean in the sight of the world and especially to those who are seeking to investigate.

We always speak a good word for The Progressive Thinker. There are quite a number taken already in this city and probably many more, as one by one, each week are brought into the folds of Spiritualism through our combined work in this and other parts of the great progressive state of Montana.

OUR DEAD SAINTS LIVING.

Very Liberal Views Impressively Given by the "Outlook," Indicating That the Spirit Survives the Death of the Body.

Out of the enlarging observance of Easter is emerging a new sense of the reality of our relations with our beloved dead who live with their risen and ascended Lord. This is the natural sequence of Christians fixing their thoughts on the living Christ. If we commune with him, are we not thus brought near to those whom we love who live with him, though they have passed through the gates of death beyond our recognition of them through the senses. For ages Protestant churches have disapproved of prayers for the dead, largely because the Roman church elevated departed saints into the position of intercessors, and encouraged petitions to them by the living. It is a question whether the Church has not lost more than she has gained, through renunciation by so large a portion of her members of the sense of fellowship between saints in this world and saints in the world beyond the grave.

Reaction was sure to come, and for several years past tokens have appeared of its coming. It was noteworthy that of the nine preachers and theological teachers who contributed to the Easter Number of The Congregationalist in the symposium on Life in the World to Come, two spoke confidently of continued relations with the blessed dead. "The grave," said Rev. Charles A Dinsmore, "erects no barriers checking the power or the desirability of prayer. Why should we hesitate to pray for all chastened spirits, whether living here or living more intensely in higher ranges of existence?" The larger our sphere of spiritual interest the richer will be our spiritual life. The same faith which embraces the arisen Christ in our relation with the unseen world, may as reasonably include those we love who have gone to be with him. And with them may be counted also all great and holy men and women who have served mankind on earth and who continue to serve them in heaven.

Do we ask for evidence of the conscious existence of our blessed dead as we commune with them? It is given us just as evidence of the living Christ is given to us. We are willing to venture something for those to whom we would prove our love. We trust the promises of Christ without demanding evidence to our senses. They are as true for our departed ones as they are for him or for ourselves. When he says, "Because I live, ye shall live also," he means that they do live as really as he lives and as we shall live. Communion with them is assured to us if we seek them through him. Phillips Brooks said of them: "The more he lives to me, the more they live. If the city of our heart is holy with the presence of a living Christ then the dear dead will come to us and we shall know they are not dead, but living, and bless him who has been their Redeemer, and rejoice in the work they are doing for him in his perfect world and press on joyously towards our own redemption." The promises of Christ are being fulfilled in them now. It is our privilege to share by faith in their joy.

We anticipate, then, a larger recognition of the continued heavenly life of the blessed dead in the belief and activity of Protestant churches in the years immediately before us. It may not be formally expressed, but it will make itself known in experience. "Prayer for the dead," said Professor Brastow in the symposium from which we have already quoted, "may be no function committed to the Church, but it is no function of Protestantism to repress the instincts of the human heart." "We Protestants need our saints' days."

Ashley Camp, Ohio.

The attendance at the opening of the sixteenth annual camp-meeting was larger than the opening day of the previous year.

The beautifully shaded grounds and fine lawns dotted here and there with flowers and shrubbery make an ideal spot for rest and the partaking of things spiritual. At 10 a. m., President J. J. Beard gave the address of welcome in his usual good-natured way, making all feel that they were welcome indeed. His address was responded to by other speakers and mediums.

At 2 p. m., W. V. Nicum of Dayton, O., delivered the address, subject, "What Is Our Attitude Toward the Evolution of the human race?" which was well received. Mr. Nicum made an earnest plea that we are spirits here and now, and that we try to continually live in that thought, and thus do our part towards redeeming the world.

Mrs. Margaret Stewart of Piqua, O., followed with messages which were well received and most of them recognized.

Mrs. Stewart has an easy and pleasant manner of giving her messages, which gives tone to her work and appreciation to her audience.

At 7:30 p. m., Mr. Nicum again addressed the audience, followed with messages by Mrs. Stewart.

Mrs. E. A. Kibby of Cincinnati, O., is one of the workers this season. She delivered an address Tuesday evening, on Spiritualism, which was filled with much truth and enjoyed not only by Spiritualists but skeptics as well.

W. V. Nicum will lecture Sunday, Aug. 13. Spirit messages by Mrs. Margaret Stewart.

BOOK REVIEW.

Immortality, Its Naturalness, Its Possibilities and Its Proofs. By J. M. Peebles, M. D.

This pamphlet comprises the address which Dr. Peebles was to have delivered before the London Victoria Institute, and Philosophical Society of Great Britain, and which, at the last moment he was refused permission to read. It also includes an Introduction and an Explanatory Letter, in which Dr. Peebles states the occasion of his preparing the address, and the manner and reasons for its belated rejection. The whole forms an interesting and instructive brochure, which should be read by thousands more because of the indignity to which Dr. Peebles was subject by orthodox bigots. It is for sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker. Price 15 cents.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

THE SOUL: ITS NATURE, RELATIONS AND EXPRESSIONS IN HUMAN EMBODIMENTS. Third edition now on sale. Price $1.00. This is one of the best books given by the guides of Mrs Cora L. V. Richmond. They are really lessons, published primarily, as a book of reference for those who have been members of the classes receiving them. This volume is a careful compilation from reports of lessons, containing the bases of the teachings.

ROMANISM EXPOSED Is a pamphlet of 30 pages, in reply to Prof. David Swing, Priest Cashman and Dr. Withrow, and is principally in defense of Protestantism. A concise little pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

A Fascinating Romance of Two Worlds. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents. Books like "The Dream Child" spur humanity on to make more and more demands of this nature, and will open up new heights and depths of spiritual knowledge.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Will, I believe, take its place beside Bulwer's "Zanoni" and the "Seraphita" of Balzac.—Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. Although simple and unvarnished with any inflammable descriptions, enthralls the mind to the exclusion of other thoughts, until reluctantly the reader closes the last page.—Minneapolis Sunday Times.

HARMONICS OF EVOLUTION.

The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science

As taught by modern masters of law. By Florence Huntley. An exceedingly interesting and distinctly valuable contribution to the literature of evolution, unfolding its laws from the deeper and clearer spiritual aspect, and indicating the defects of the Darwinian theory. Spiritualists and Materialists alike can gain much from its perusal. Price, finely bound in cloth, $2.

Discovery of a Lost Trail

BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,

Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by this wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail"

is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

SPIRITUAL HARP A collection of Vocal Music for the Choir, Congregation and Social Circles. By J. M. Peebles and J. O. Barrett; E. H. Bailey, Musical Editor. New edition. Culled from a wide field of literature with the most critical care, free from all theological bias, throbbing with the soul of inspiration; embodying the principles and virtues of the spiritual philosophy, set to the most cheerful and popular music (nearly all original) and adapted to all occasions, it is doubtless the most attractive work of the kind ever published. CHESTERFIELD CAMP, IND.

The Work Is Going Forward Prosperously.

The past week at Camp Chesterfield has been a notable one, with the advent and departure of "our Moses" Hull who impressed upon Spiritualists the necessity of educated and properly fitted persons as advocates of our philosophy; the annual election of officers and trustees; the coming of our gifted sister, Elizabeth Harlow and the going of Sister Marion Carpenter to take up her work at Grand Ledge camp; our old folks concert; the passing to the spirit world of Bro. Alexander P. McKee, Sr.

I am glad to note that all the old officers of the camp were re-elected to their old places by a majority that was in itself a vote of confidence, and without prejudice I may say that the camp association is to be congratulated in their selection, since they are all able and experienced. Especially would I note that Mrs. Lydia Jessup was unanimously elected to the office of secretary, there being no opposition in his case.

Of our mediums, I would note the very remarkable work of Mrs. Throndsen on the platform. Last week she gave at one morning's conference over 30 tests, all of which were recognized. And Mr. Frank Ripley, whose work has caused the camp to wonder, used as we are to remarkable work by our mediums.

Our old folk's concert was a decided success. Mrs. Lucile de Loux of Chicago received a double encore for her rendering of two songs, bringing the tears to the eyes of the audience by her superb singing and acting. Mrs. DeLoux has been highly commended by the camp both for her mediumship and her singing. The camp very decidedly regrets her departure for Chicago, whither she went last Saturday to resume her work in that city after two weeks' vacation.

Our camp was saddened last Saturday morning by the death of Bro. Alexander J. McKee, who was an old member of the association, and ex-mayor of Anderson, Ind.

The funeral occurred Monday noon, under the aged oak trees. The services were conducted by the association and the Knights Templar. Services were opened by an invocation and a few remarks by Mrs. Maggie Waite of Chicago, a friend of many years' standing. Mrs. Anna Gillespie gave an address which caused all of us to weep in feeling with the bereft family. The Knights Templar then took charge of the funeral and his casket draped in our flag which he had defended for four years, was borne by his brother Sir Knights to Anderson, accompanied by the local post of the G. A. R., to which he belonged.

Miss Harlow has held her immense audiences breathless by her forcible remarks and has given much food for thought the past week, and we consider her the crowning point of our season's lecturers in many ways.

Our memorial services last Sunday for the dead were conducted by the camp in the spirit of their intent to let the arisen ones know they were not forgotten, and that they still had a place in our hearts and thoughts.

I have the past week been able to get the renewal of subscriptions from some who had listened to the arguments of the disgruntled ones against The Progressive Thinker, beside many new ones, and I am pleased to note that the popularity of The Progressive Thinker is on the increase here. Since my coming to the camp some five weeks, I have had a multitude of unsolicited commendations of The Progressive Thinker for its fearlessness and straightforwardness in all matters. Many have promised me to subscribe after they got home from the camp. H. B.

Grand Ledge Camp, Mich.

We had the pleasure of being in attendance at the Grand Ledge, Mich., camp, during the week of August 1 to 6. The lectures delivered by D. A. Herrick of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Dr. B. F. Austin of Rochester, N. Y., editor of Reason, were listened to by fair audiences and highly appreciated.

Oscar A. Edgerly, as chairman, conducted the meetings in an admirable manner. The conference meetings, too, were an enjoyable feature.

The mediums present on the grounds were Mrs. Oswald, Mrs. Hamilton Gill and Mrs. Isa Cleveland of Chicago; Mrs. Jennie Martin of Grand Rapids; Mrs. N. M. Russell and Mr. Maybee, materializing medium, of Grand Ledge, and Oliver F. Comstock of Marcellus, Mich. Dr. Stevenson, magnetic healer, palmist and character delineator, and his wife are in a large measure the life of the camp; their music and character sketches as rendered at the entertainments being of a high order.

Taking into consideration the entertaining features at this beautiful camp, it should prove a success financially as it certainly does spiritually.

Mrs. L. H. Palmer of Hillsdale, Mich., and Mrs. Strickland of Owosso, Mich., who have charge of the bazaar and hotel on the grounds, are both ladies whom it is a pleasure to meet, and who in their attentive service, have made a host of friends. What especially elicited our admiration was the wonderful mediumistic powers of Oliver F. Comstock, and whose mediumship is of such high order that the Spiritualists of Michigan have every reason to feel proud. As witnessed by the writer and many others, Mr. Comstock first indifferently handled a hot kerosene lamp chimney as though it contained no heat whatever, but which act was eclipsed by placing his hand in the flame and not even scorching the hair upon it. When, however, he leaned forward, placing his mouth over the burner, allowing the flame to lick the roof of his mouth, without the least trepidation, many exclamations of surprise were elcited from the audience. He next took a celluloid collar and drawing it slowly through the flame, igniting or not igniting it at will. Handkerchiefs, provided by those present, were treated in the same manner without in the least damaging them. He also, being clairaudient and clairvoyant, locates Indian arrows and describes them as well, before they are unearthed, and during his stay of ten days located thirteen for those who cared to dig them up. Mr. Comstock is 46 years old and has worked at farming nearly all his life.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

Sunday, August 6, was a beautiful day at Lake Brady, after the hard rain of the night before. In the absence of the president, Mr. Hunger, Mrs. Holles acted as chairman, introducing Lyman C. Howe as speaker of the day. His poor health added to his being exposed to the storm the previous evening, made it impossible for him to give more than a short address, his subject being "The Philosophy of Spiritualism." Although hardly able to stand, his ideas were given in a clear, concise and forcible manner.

He was unable to appear in the afternoon. Dell Herrick being present, kindly came to the rescue and gave a fine address. After first giving the people the greeting sent by the members of Grand Ledge camp, from which he had just come, he read the poem, "If We Only Understood," taking the same for his subject."

Mrs. Woodruff of Cleveland rendered two solos during the day, "Just For To Day," and "The Way of Peace." Mrs. Nina Challen of Toledo was the message bearer. After the close of the afternoon session she gave a trumpet seance which one man who attended said was the best he had witnessed in sixteen years' experience.

GRAND LEDGE CAMP.

A Harmonious Session of the Old-Time Kind.

This is the third week of Grand Ledge camp-meeting, which closes Sunday, August 20.

It is an enjoyable gathering of genuine Spiritualists—Spiritualists who belong to the old-time sort—who believe in the phenomena as well as in the philosophy of Spiritualism.

Many persons in camp are pioneers in the cause—aged men and women who love to recall incidents in the early years of the cause. To these persons death has no terrors. They are ready to pass through the portals, and there are not a few among the number who are looking forward to the time of death with pleasurable anticipations.

Our camp is running along smoothly, no discord, nothing to mar the harmony which has reigned supreme in this camp from the opening day.

D. A. Herrick of Grand Rapids, who is now serving an engagement in the Freeville Camp, in New York, closed his engagement on Thursday, Aug. 3. On Sunday morning, July 30, Mr. Herrick delivered one address, the venerable Dr. Peebles assisting in the afternoon services.

Mr. Herrick is a natural born orator. He keeps his hearers wide awake from the start, and he must must indeed be a sleepy-headed fellow who would be able to take a nap during one of his discourses.

Dr. B. F. Austin of Rochester, N. Y., who, within the past five years has gained an enviable reputation as a lecturer upon the Spiritualist platform, began his engagement here on Friday, August 4.

Dr. Austin is a scholarly man and his many years of experience as a Methodist minister, gives him an advantage not possessed by the average lecturer. His logic is easily within the grasp of the ordinary mind, while his language is forcible and faultless. The Doctor closes his engagement to-morrow and goes to Wisconsin.

Sunday, August 6, was a red-letter day in Grand Ledge Camp. The attendance was unusually large. Dr. Austin delivered two lectures, both to large audiences, and many were the complimentary remarks made by his hearers at the close of his lectures.

A feature of the day was the appearance upon the platform of Mrs. Anna Berger Lynch, the renowned lady cornetist, a musician declared by Sousa to be the greatest lady cornetist in the world. Miss Hazel Wertz of Anderson, Ind., played the piano accompaniments to Mrs. Lynch's cornet solos at each service. Mr. and Mrs. Wertz and daughter furnish the music; general satisfaction is manifested with their efforts.

Mrs. Marian Carpenter begins her engagement August 12, and closes August 17, giving tests from beyond at the close of each of her lectures.

Chairman Edgerly speaks twice during the present week—Thursday and Friday afternoons.

Last Sunday was a day long to be remembered in Grand Ledge.

Wm. Divine, camp manager, is much elated over Grand Ledge's prospects.

A masked ball composed of the campers, last night, was excellent; old and young participated.

Following is a list of the mediums in camp: Mrs. C. Oswald and Mrs. Hamilton Gill of Chicago; Mrs. N. M. Russell, Grand Ledge, and Mrs. Jennie Martin of Grand Rapids, all clairvoyants. Dr. Stephenson, Bay City, magnetic healer; John Mabee, Saginaw, materializing medium; Mr. Olyiver Comstock, Marcellus, the fire test medium, who gives his tests daily.

Onset Camp, Mass.

The Massachusetts State Association held its yearly meeting at Onset on Aug. 5. The platform was beautifully decorated with the colors, yellow and white, and American flags and the flags of other nations; also with beautiful flowers. A large audience of 500 people was present, and the array of talent was excellent.

President G. A. Fuller greeted the friends and welcomed them to Onset. He told of the work this association was doing and had done, and what they wished to do. He was followed by such exceptional talent as Mrs. Annie Knowlton Hinman, Miss Susie C. Clark, Mrs. Carrie F. Loring, Mrs. C. P. Pratt, Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, Mrs. Katie M. Ham, Mr. W. J. Colville and Pres. G. A. Fuller.

Mr. A. J. Maxham discoursed fine music throughout the day, assisted by Miss Alyce Holbrooke. The meeting was one of the finest ever held, conceded so by all present.

Mr. J. B. Hatch, our able collector of finances, succeeded in raising $71 which we felt was a credit to Onset.

Sunday we had two fine addresses, one by Mr. Colville and the other by Miss Susie C. Clark. Miss Clark's topic was Spirituality, and it was presented on a high spiritual plane. She admitted that while a chemist was an acknowledged authority in his laboratory, and the electrician upon electric dynamos, it did not fellow that the Spiritualist Impressive Particulars in Regard to Apparent Death.

When I was very young (as set forth by Elizabeth Evans in the Truth Seeker), I happened to read a poem which made a deep impression upon my mind. Later I heard it sung and still later I played and sang it myself. It was "The Mistletoe Bough," said to be a versification of fact—a sad event which happened long ago in England. A young bride at her wedding feast in the family castle proposed a game of "hide-and-seek," and offered to be the first to hide, challenging her bridegroom to be the first to find her. She ran out of the room and was never seen again alive. The company hunted for her everywhere, but her disappearance remained a mystery until many years afterward, when an old chest in the garret was forcibly opened and the skeleton of the bride was revealed. The chest had shut with a spring and her friends, if they examined it at all, probably supposed that it had long been locked, and by the time they reached the garret she must have been already dead, or at least unable to call for help. It is a haunting story, and all the more terrible if true.

My next stimulus to reflection upon this subject was the reading of a description of one of "the stately homes of England," Clopton Hall, a daughter of which noble family was buried with due pomp in the flower of her youth, and when, some time afterwards, the tomb was opened to receive another inmate, it was found that the girl had awakened from the trance which her mourning relatives had supposed to be death, and had had strength enough to escape from her coffin to the adjoining space, where she perished for lack of help.

The next reminder was still more vivid, as it occurred in my immediate neighborhood. The young wife of the schoolmaster died suddenly, and it was noticed with surprise that her face retained its natural color until the time of burial, the peculiarity being attributed to the nature of her disease.

But not long afterward, it being necessary to open a new road through a part of the large cemetery, several graves were removed, and among them hers, and her body was found turned over in the coffin. There was great and painful excitement in the community when this fact was made known, and I, still a child, suffered extremely. I was sent on an errand just then, and was obliged to pass near the graveyard. It was an early evening in the summer, and the air was laden with the scent of death, arising from the recently opened graves. The horror of that walk I never could forget.

A few years afterward in another town my school-teacher told us about a young girl she had known in her youth who died suddenly, and whose body retained so much color and suppleness that her family postponed the funeral several days, keeping the supposed corpse in the meantime well covered and near the fire. If I am not mistaken they waited three weeks and then were persuaded to permit the burial, although no signs of corruption had appeared. The lifelike appearance was supposed then by physicians, to be due to the sudden heart-stroke, and in those days attempts at resuscitation were not frequent, nor so thorough, as at present. So the girl was buried, and it was never known whether she was really dead or not. The uncertainty involving so horrible a possibility has always been a weight on my mind.

All along my life my attention has been called to this subject in various ways, and I have said and written what I could to induce greater care in the examination of bodies supposed to be dead. From time to time I have noticed that the fear of being buried alive is a very common source of anxiety, increased by occasional rumors of such a tragedy. One of the startling realistic pictures of the painter Wierz is of a man who has burst open his coffin in his agony of returning life and is looking out in despair at his surroundings in the silent charnel house, and as this picture is one of the set which is seen through a hole in the wall (in the Wierz gallery at Brussels) the effect is intensified by its apparent reality.

The only gleam of hope is in the fact that the place of sepulture is a charnel house or a tomb instead of a covered grave, but here, too, the chances are against deliverance.

Not many years ago, in Munich, it was whispered that in one of the deadhouses a corpse had come to life, but though I inquired of one of the principal physicians he seemed to consider the whole subject as of undeserving of notice. The precautions taken in Germany are good as far as they go, but under ordinary circumstances burial takes place on the third day after death (not three whole days), and it is a well-known fact that corruption does not always begin so soon, especially in cold weather, while a trance may continue much longer with life intact.

A short time ago an old lady in North Germany (Bremen, I believe) left by will a large sum of money to the town, on condition that no person should be buried until seven days after death; but the bequest could not be accepted on those terms as circumstances must decide in such cases, and it is manifestly injurious to the living to keep the dead after corruption has commenced.

I was told recently of a case of suspended animation fortunately discovered in time. It happened about fifty years ago. An elderly German lady, dying at home, was prepared for the grave by her loving relatives, who spent most of the time before the funeral in the same room with the body. During the last evening, as two of her nieces were sitting beside her, busied with articles of mourning dress, she suddenly opened her eyes and asked what they were doing. Restoratives were at once applied and she was carried away from all associations with death. She recovered and lived more than twenty years afterwards, but from that time she was never known to laugh. The shock of the escape from such a fate could not be overcome.

Only the other day, in London, a woman came very near being buried alive, being saved by the scruples of the physician, who mistrusted the reported cause of death. She was subject to frequent and prolonged fainting-fits, and already on two occasions had been pronounced dead, having been awakened from the trance by preparations for her burial.

Notwithstanding all previous warnings in the present instance, as soon as she became insensible and her heart had apparently stopped beating, her body was carried into a cold room, and no attempt at resuscitation was made. It was the man who came to measure her for her coffin who noticed a trembling of the eyelids and hastened to carry her back to warmth and life. She recovered, and with care and sufficient nourishment is likely to overcome the tendency to faint away.

An American physician recently estimated the probable number of persons buried alive as two in a hundred. It is a disgrace to civilization if only one person is ever allowed to suffer that horrible fate! In times of plagues and pestilences it is to be feared that victims are sometimes hurried into untimely graves; also, in time of war, it is possible that Kipling's recent story of the brave and brilliant man who came to himself on a battlefield just as enemy's soldiers were digging a grave beside the stretcher on which he was lying, may not be merely an invention of the author's morbidly cruel imagination; while in times of peace and in sheltered homes it may be that a feeble spark of life is quenched by the application of ice to the supposed dead body in order to delay corruption until after the funeral obsequies.

Everybody should know, and should act upon the knowledge that there is one infallible test of death, and, under ordinary circumstances, only one; namely, the presence of signs of corruption, black spots under the skin, general dissolution, unmistakable odor, any or all of these. And whether the body is to be buried or cremated permission for the last offices should never be granted until these signs are established or recognized. All other proofs are insufficient—the "breaking" of the eyes, the stopping of the breath, the cessation of the heart beats, the coldness of the flesh, the stiffness of the frame—all these changes may take place during a trance; but decay is sure evidence of death. And common humanity demands that every living being should be assured of the whole span of individual life.

WHAT MOTHER EDDY SAYS.

She Has a Glimmer of Truth, With Much Error.

Mary Baker G. Eddy says in her book, "Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures," fourth chapter, page 71: "When the science of mind is understood, Spiritualism will be found erroneous, having no scientific basis or origin; no proof nor power outside of human testimony. It is the offspring of the physical senses. There is no sensuality in spirit. I never could believe in Spiritualism."

On page 82: "If spiritual life has been won by the departed, they cannot return to material existence because different states of consciousness are involved, and one person cannot exist in two different states of consciousness at the same time. In sleep we do not communicate with the dreamer at our side, because both of us are either unconscious or wandering through different mazes of consciousness in dreams. In like manner it would follow even if our departed friends were near us and were in as conscious a state of existence as before the change we call death, that their state of consciousness must be different from ours. We are not in their state nor are they in the mental realm wherein we dwell.

Communion between them and ourselves would be prevented by the difference. The mental states are so unlike that intercommunion is as impossible as it would be between a mole and a human being. Different dreams and different awakenings betoken different consciousness. When wandering in Australia, do we look for help to the Esquimaux in their snow huts? Mortals evolve images of thought. These may appear to the ignorant to be apparitions, but they are mysterious only because it is unusual to see thoughts, though we can always feel their influence. Haunted houses, ghostly voices, unusual noises and apparitions brought out in dark seances, either involve feats by tricksters, or they are images and sounds evolved involuntarily by mortal mind. Here optical seeing is no less a quality of physical sense than feeling is. Then why is it more difficult to see a thought than to feel it. Education alone determines the difference in reality there is none."

So much from one who claims that "God called her to proclaim His gospel."

I have read and thought much about the articles that have appeared in the Open Court. While obsession may be a fact, yet for me it is not a pleasant thought, any more than thought forms that the Theosophists claim. We are building up for ourselves day by day during our lifetime, and through indulgence in impure and vicious thought, create such a hideous creature that when met with after death so terrifies or frightens us, we think it none other than the very evil one. I do not myself like any of these ideas. I much prefer my simple belief in Spiritualism, and that our friends who have passed on still have a loving care for us, and as Longfellow says:

"Ere the evening lamp is lighted,
And like phantoms, grim and tall,
Shadows from the fitful firelight
Dance upon the parlor wall;
Then the forms of the departed
Enter at the open door,
The beloved, the true-hearted,
Come to visit me once more."

Attention, Spiritualists!

In the Allegheny County, Pa., courts, an appeal has been made by Joe. M. Frieman, attorney for Mrs. E. J. Demorest, one of our most reliable mediums and devoted workers in the ranks of Spiritualism. The charge against her reads as follows:

"That she unlawfully did then and there pretend for gain and lucre to predict future events, by then and there consulting the movements of the heavenly bodies."

Would you call this fortune telling?

Mrs Demorest is at present with friends at Lily Dale Camp, N. Y.

Send out to our sister your kindest thoughts, that she will be made stronger in her struggle for sweet liberty, and that truth shall ever be uppermost and justice will be won.

Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp
Outdone by an Astral Body.

Remarkable and Startling Manifestations of Spiritual Power, by which a Large and Varied Assortment of Valuable Antiques Is Collected in the home of Thomas Welton Stanford, and which Marvelous Collection Is Refused by President Jordan of the Leland Stanford Jr. University, of California, as a Gift to that Institution. Astral Relics Are Declared Genuine. Mrs. Addie Ballou, Notary Public of San Francisco, and a Prominent Medium, Lecturer and Author, friend of Thomas Welton Stanford, says there can be no reasonable doubt as to the authenticity of antiquities taken from Assyrian and Egyptian tombs by the astral body of Charles Bailey. Scientists testify to the Australian Mystic's power.

COINS FROM EGYPT HANDED OVER BY SPIRIT.

Witness at Bailey Seance in Melbourne Says He Took Relics From Invisible Object, and Voice Described Them.

Whether it be that from the unexplored and mysterious depths of the invisible world, which many eminent scientists and other persons of the highest intellectuality fervently believe surrounds the visible world as the atmosphere surrounds the earth, came the rare, costly and curious objects which Thomas Welton Stanford wished to present to Stanford University only to have his gifts rejected by President David Starr Jordan, or that they came into the rich philanthropist's possession through the despicable hocus-pocus of a charlatan, the facts remain that these treasures came in such questionable shapes, in such amazing manner, that the publication of the story in "The Examiner" has stirred the ranks of the psychical researchers, and has furnished food for the scoffings of unbelievers, as no other account of occult events has done in a generation.

Question to be Solved.

Pending the issuance of a statement from Dr. Jordan explaining just why he rejected the treasures which Mrs. Stanford was so anxious to have added to the collections at Palo Alto, interest in the strange case of Thomas Welton Stanford, his occult delvings, and his protege, Charles Bailey, the medium, is centered upon discussion of the means whereby the blacksmith (or laundryman) occultist actually used to place in Stanford's possession the strange and valuable things he certainly did.

Matters of the highest significance to humanity, declare the serious investigators, are involved in such a discussion. Immortality is one of them. Does life persist beyond the dusky borderland, the shadowy frontier which death—or what is caled death—forms an all sides of life? May these possible inhabitants of that dark region return to the world of sunshine and grass and land and seas and men and women? Is it true that they may speak to the living, be seen of them, be felt by them, tell them tidings of high import and at times direct their destinies?

Visible and Invisible Life.

"On the editorial page of 'The Examiner' today there is a picture which I think of in connection with this subject," said one such local investigator yesterday. "The picture is headed, 'Life Is a Half Circle.' It showed by means of diagrams the progress of a man from the cradle to the grave, traversing the upper arc of the circle. That is visible life. There is an invisible life—which, under certain circumstances, becomes at least partially visible—which completes that circle. When the man enters the grave he begins his journey along the missing half of that circle. When he has completed his voyage through the dark he has completed a round of the circle, and begins anew to travel the visible half again, unaware—in nearly all cases—of his descent through the valley of the shadow. This is what is termed reincarnation. This medium, Charles Bailey, who secured the wonderful treasures for Mr. Stanford belongs to that select and small body of men and women who in visible life are granted glimpses into and revelations of the invisible life.

MANIFESTATIONS SUCH AS THROUGH BAILEY, MR. STANFORD AND MANY EMINENT SCIENTISTS WHOSE VERY NAMES PLACE THEM BEYOND ALL SUSPICION OF TRICKERY, OR OF BEING DUPES, SECURED OF THE REALITY OF SPIRIT LIFE, TO MY MIND ABSOLUTELY PROVE THE CASE FOR SPIRITUALISM. SUCH MANIFESTATIONS STAND AS FAR ABOVE THE VULGAR DOINGS OF THE TRICKSTERS WHO SWARM IN ALL OUR CITIES, TRADING UPON THE CREDULITY OF THE EMOTIONAL AND THE IGNORANT, AS THE PROBLEMS WORKED OUT BY A MASTER MATHEMATICIAN STANDS ABOVE THE INCORRECT SUMS SCRAWLED BY A CHILD.

President Jordan would have done well for his future reputation to have been less hasty in his rejection of Mrs. Stanford's gifts. More and more are the best minds of the world turning their attention to psychic problems, and more and more serious and important grow their researches. And the Bailey manifestations are known throughout the world as important steps in the progress of the investigation of this greatest of subjects."

Stanford's Own Account.

Thomas Welton Stanford's own account of the Bailey seances has been written by him, as follows:

"The phenomena recorded belong to what the French call 'apports;' that is to say, objects are brought into the room without any visible agency from localities which are described as being many thousand miles distant. Each of them is a solid and substantial fact—something that you can see, handle, weigh and measure. They are of such nature that no money could buy them, or imitations of them, in Australia. They are not voluntary objects which may have been perceived in a moment of hallucination, and immediately afterwards 'made themselves air,' like the witches in 'Macbeth.' Nor was it possible for any of them to have been concealed about the person of the medium when he entered the room, because the preliminary search, to which he cheerfully consented, leaves no room for such a conjecture. And as to the oral communications received through his organs of speech, it is no disparagement to his intelligence and to the limited opportunities for intellectual culture which he has hitherto enjoyed to assert the impossibility of their having originated in his own mind. He is not an expert in either geology or archaeology; he has had no experience as an elocutionist and has never appeared upon the stage or the public platform; and, this being so, what answer is the psychologist prepared to supply to the questions: From whom do these communications emanate? Not, most certainly, from the instrument employed for their transmission. It would be as reasonable to assert that the musical compositions which a succession of players performed upon a pianoforte originated in its mechanism. We furnish the man of science with a number of remarkable and well attested phenomena, and we ask him in return to supply us with some reasonable, intelligible and credible explanation of them. Here are the data, consisting of solid facts; what are the scientific conclusions to be drawn from them according to the recognized principles of inductive philosophy?"

Spirits Control Bailey.

The theory of the believers in Bailey's powers is, that he has the control of numerous disembodied spirits which, at his bidding flit through earth, air, fire or water—the elements which constitute the world as we see it. No distance is too great to be compassed within a miraculously short space of time. Time, indeed, seems hardly to exist for the astral bodies which are asserted to be governed by Bailey. They would seem to move in that mysterious region hitherto thought an abstraction and a dream of philosophers—the fourth Dimension. All that the tyro in such matters, reading of Bailey's marvels, or beholding them, can say, is summed up in a phrase from "Hamlet":

"There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

One of the disembodied spirits alleged to be a "control" of Bailey is declared to be that of a Dr. Robinson, who in the flesh was professor of Syro-Chaldaic literature in the Theological Seminary of New York. Through the agency of this spirit, it is averred, Bailey was able to produce tablets and other rare relics from the interior of the ruins of ancient Babylon. Another of the controls was a Hindu. This Hindu spirit worked marvels with a mango seed owned by Mr. Stanford. In the space of a few seconds he caused it to put forth shoots. Mrs. Leland Stanford was present at—and thoroughly believed in—many of the fantastic manifestations.

Bailey, the sensitive, was placed in a cage made of mosquito netting, in a room the doors, windows and grate of which were also covered with the netting, and sealed. And it was whilst within the cage, in a trance state, with all semblance of his own personality blotted from his face, expression, gesture, voice, that Bailey was able to bring into the room, sometimes in darkness, sometimes in sunlight, all manner of objects, sea-fish, and live birds, jewels and raw gold. Newspapers damp from the press in some far Arabian town, bread still hot from the oven in India.

Another Strange Tale.

Here is the strange tale of one such seance, at which it is said that Mrs. Leland Stanford was present, during the visit she paid to Melbourne for the express purpose of witnessing the investigations. It is related by an actual witness, who only withholds his name because his business career might be injured if his identity were disclosed:

"Usual safeguards: same sitters (as on previous occasions), one a pronounced skeptic. Door locked, key secured. Sensitive searched and enveloped in a bag which was tied tightly and sealed. Lights were extinguished and three objects immediately fell with a great deal of noise on the floor. Then there was a rattling resembling the chink of small metals, and the control handed me what he described as valuable ancient coins brought from Egypt. His exact words were: 'Dead men's money from Egypt. Oh, very old, very scarce.' There were seven coins."

During this time a Hindu is said to have been in control, but at this point the spirit of a Dr. Whitcombe, a learned man of science during his life, took control—that is, the believers believe that this was so.

"Dr Whitcombe said that the coins were ancient Egyptian and some ancient Roman specimens found in Egypt; some, the brighter ones, taken from mummy coffins by the Hindu under the guidance of Egyptians only in the flesh, and others, the verdigrised ones, from mounds in Egypt, and he said that they were of the Greek period and that Dr. Robinson (the spirit of the New York archaeologist) would tell me all about them. (This was afterwards done). He then announced that an effort would be made to materialize a hand.

"At the right side and in front of the medium, at whose left side I sat, I saw a small luminous object. It got gradually larger and more luminous; then it came in front of the sensitive, and over to the left, close to where I was sitting. The control desired me to examine it closely. I stooped over and saw distinctly a luminous hand, perfectly formed. It ended at the wrist. The hand was rather small, the fingers long and well shaped. It then glided away and vanished.

WHAT SHALL THE NEW RELIGION BE?

That Is the Question by an Earnest Inquirer After Truth.

The general decay of religious faith is a remarkable characteristic of the present time and the frantic efforts of real and pretended believers to uphold the antiquated system cannot be permanently successful, because the antagonistic force is moved by increased knowledge of the sources of the prevailing superstitions which have held the human race in bondage so long, but which are now doomed to irretrievable ruin. Many earnest people who acknowledge this fact are now asking, "What shall the new religion be? What can we put in place of the old restraining and reforming influences?" The absurd attempts to remodel old creeds, as in the Presbyterian Confession of faith, and the Protestant Episcopal Ritual, as also the ignorant burlesques of doctrine and practice displayed in "Christian Science," "Zionism," and other recent inventions in "spiritual" affairs, demonstrate the impossibility of a substitution of superstitions, now that the universal demand is for knowledge concerning whatever is doubtful or unknown; while as for influence upon character and conduct, restraint and reform have always depended upon simple morality, and that will be better understood and more easily followed when divested of forms and ceremonies and wholly unconnected with the idea of a church.

The above is by Elizabeth Evans, in the Truth Seeker. She asks "What Shall the New Religion Be?" That is easily answered. It should be based on Spirit Return. SUGGESTION.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST DOCTOR.

There's a great physician who long ago began
To clear away the troubles that come to pester man;
'Tis true, he is old-fashioned, but many a grievous ill
That puzzles other doctors would yield to this one's skill;
He makes no heavy charges, and he is always near
To serve you if you want him; his full name is Good Cheer.

His practice should be world-wide and daily it should grow;
He serves in summer weather and when the wild winds blow;
His night bell is in order, he answers every call,
He gives no bitter doses and tortures not at all,
And they have few diseases and stand in little fear
Who always are serenely attended by Good Cheer.

He does not deem the wealthy more worthy of his care
Than are the poor who seek him. Where walls and floors are bare
He ministers as freely as where the rich abide,
And all he asks in payment are hope and honest pride,
The hopes and pride that follow where duty's call is clear—
'Tis time to aid in spreading the practice of Good Cheer.

A VISION VERIFIED.

A Death Was Seen Which Was Soon Verified.

We, whose names you will find attached to this article, were sitting in a developing circle on last Tuesday evening. These circles are being conducted by Mr. Ellis at 3250 Wabash avenue, and while we were singing he stopped the same and said: "I see a funeral. I see the black draped netting over the horses. Now I see a coffin."

Some one in the circle asked, "Is it a child?"

"No," said the medium, "it is a grown person. The coffin seems large and dark and my guides say it concerns some one directly or indirectly in this circle."

The vision held long enough so that some in the circle were also able to see part of it. To our great surprise just as the circle was about over a rap came at the door. Then we were told that a messenger was waiting to see Mr. Morris Fast, one of the circle, who then went outside, and was told that a young man, Louis Tampe, had died suddenly. Being mutual friends Mr. Fast was one of the first notified. When we receive such messages from spirit life, who can then doubt the truth of spirit return?

MORRIS J. FAST AND OTHERS.

There is not any burden that some would gladlier post off to another than the charge and care of their religion. There be—who knows not that there be?—of Protestants and professors who live and die in as arrant an implicit faith as any lay Papist of Loretto.—Milton.

DESTINY OR COINCIDENCE?

The Laws Governing the Progress of Nations and Individuals.

In all the departments of life we see conditions arising in which, to the observant spiritual-minded individual, there is seen to be in operation forces that are beyond the realm of the materialistic mind, it being unable to give an intelligent satisfactory definition of the forces that have produced them, and the answer given is that it is a mere coincidence, a happen-so; when to get down to the rock bottom and examine the facts it cannot be truthfully said that there is such a thing as a mere happen-so, a lawless operation of life's forces.

Admitting the existence of those laws is needful, but to take the next step and move in harmony with them is of vastly more importance, for if we do, life is one grand success and its progressive steps are strewn more with flowers and pleasant associations than it is with thorns and brambles.

Nations and individuals are to a limited extent makers of their own destiny, but the mighty spiritual forces that are moving them along the general lines best adapted to their peculiar development must be obeyed, or confusion results; that is the operation of the great law of destiny.

Conditions bring forward the material that is necessary for the accomplishment of the needs of life. Luther was not a coincidence, mere driftwood upon the religious sea, coming in contact with papacy, causing its craft to tremble, but he was a destined instrumentality used by the spiritual powers for the consummation of needed reforms in the religious world.

That mighty scourge of Europe, Napoleon Bonaparte, was not a mere happen-so, for when we view the condition of Europe at the time of his advent, it will be seen that there were spiritual forces that used him for the accomplishment of certain purposes. His career plainly indicates it. When he became self-exalted and would not recognize the superior power that was trying to use him, then he was humbled.

The European monarchies of his time had become a stench in the nostrils of the people who were struggling for better conditions, and through the scourging of those governmental systems through his instrumentality, they were advanced one step forward. The terrible scourging that the Russian autocracy has received at the present time has been the fulfillment of the law of destiny which tells the nations of the world that "whatsoever they sow, that shall they also reap."

The spiritual philosophy tells us individuals were mediums used for the advancement of the reformatory work that the higher powers saw was necessary to be accomplished among the human races, and that view is a rational and consistent one. It certainly is better than the one that tells us that our life here is one of mere drifting, the possible chance of our arriving in port not credited to skillful piloting but to mere chance, a happen-so. Such reasoning or lack of it, more properly speaking might be accepted by the race before it began to intelligently study the laws governing their life, for when they did they would see that above and superior to the physical there were spiritual laws, and it is the destiny of mankind to develop up to a more perfect understanding of them, and life will then have less sounding of the discordant notes and more of the concordant ones.

The great law of moral and spiritual progress is not resting upon a foundation of shifting sand, but it is established upon the rock of ages, a permanency that cannot be changed or overthrown by any negation called materialistic science. The destiny of the nations of the world is to advance to higher planes of culture, to change the level of the grade to a higher one, and nothing can prevent the upward movement. Lack of comprehension of the great law of destiny, and not being in concord with it, may cause the revolutionary forces to act, when otherwise the law of peaceful evolution would have been the force that would have carried the nation forward.

Russia to-day is suffering because it obstinately refused to recognize the fact that her destiny was to leave the old medieval conditions under which it is living and accept more advanced views of life.

Those who have intelligently studied the history of the great conflict in the American Republic over the slavery question, must admit that Abraham Lincoln, that martyr to the cause of human progress, was the one individual the most suitable for the position that he occupied through the years of that struggle. It was more than a mere chance game played upon the political chessboard that enabled the cause which he represented to triumph, it was his spiritual destiny and that of the nation, and as the years roll on is being more of a recognized fact even by his political opponents.

When revolutions among nations take place, supplanting the old order under which they have been living with some system morally superior, and a life and death struggle ensues to bring about the advance, the triumph of the law of progress over the reactionary forces is not a mere coincidence, nor always a result of the most powerful armaments; but when all external signs would seem to indicate that truth would be crushed to earth it would rise again and come off triumphant because "the eternal years of God are hers." There were spiritual powers with which they were in concord and it was their destiny to be victorious.

There is a free agency given to the soul for the working out of its destiny, but there must be an intelligent comprehension of the laws of the spiritual world which is guiding that destiny, there must be a working concord with those laws, then success will crown the soul's efforts, for every step will be one of ascension, and the obstacles that impeded its journey will vanish while the inspiration to advance will increase. Progress is the great law of destiny for every human soul, but the lines on which it is worked out are different with each one, and the confusions of life are when effort is made to shape them in the same mold. There is truth in the assertion that "there is unity in diversity," and the great law of destiny demands the endless variations with life is composed.

IN THE ANTIPODES.

Mrs. Lole F. Prior's Fourth of July Celebration in Wellington, New Zealand.

To the Editor:—In response to invitations from Mrs. Prior, about sixty ladies, representing all phases of advanced thought, assembled at Inverness House to celebrate the natal day of the Great Republic, to which the lady hostess is so warmly, loyally and patriotically attached.

Mrs. Prior opened the proceedings with a short speech, incidentally referring to the Boston tea party, and rapidly passing in review the chief historical events of her country, together with a brief description of the principal objects of interest everywhere prevalent.

She then called upon that artistic and exceptionally obliging young lady musician, Miss Paul, to entertain in her inimitable and excellent way.

Mrs. Taylor then gave a recitation, with beautiful elocutionary taste and ability.

Mrs. Oyston read an acrostic composed by her husband, and dedicated to Mrs. Prior. After presenting the dedicatory verses to the hostess, she gave "Dollars and Dimes," which was enthusiastically received.

Afternoon tea was next served, when appropriate toasts were duly given.

Mrs. Oyston proposed the health of President Roosevelt; Mrs. Pratts-Mills, M. D., presented the name of King Edward, and the hostess submitted "The Colony."

The lady who so gracefully toasted King Edward graphically voiced the sentiments of all in speaking eulogistically of Mrs. Prior, and her excellent work. She has endeared herself to all, and her spiritual mission has been eminently successful. General regret is expressed at her early departure for Melbourne to fill a three months' engagement, but as she will return here for a short while, at the expiration of that time, some compensation is offered for the disappointment.

That health, prosperity and usefulness may ever attend and bless her earthly pilgrimage, is the fervent wish of her devoted friend,

Light divine from realms supernal e'er
Illume thy earthly way;
Onward through the darkened regions
bear the torch with living ray;
In the serried hosts of battle, calmly,
bravely, faithful speed,
E'en though minds yet unreceptive may not thy petition heed.
Forward bear the waving standard—symbol of the thoughtful free,
Lift the fallen, help the weary, calm the soul's tempestuous sea.
O! thou favored voice of sages, harp of music from the spheres,
Ring the clarion call to duty; ne'er be slave to dubious fears;
Ev'ry thought and intimation breathed from wiser souls than we,
Nobly heed, and bravely echo, deadly though the conflict be;
Cast aside the chains impeding, breathe
the purest, clearest air,
Ev'ry faithful child of progress must the martyr's anguish bear.
Peace, and Hope, and Joy attend thee;
well equipped with love and power,
Round thee spread the fragrant roses,
in a rich and copious shower.
In that world of compensation loud acclaims thy ear will greet,
Only be thou counted worthy when the masters thou shalt meet,
Radiant with translucent brightness may thy soul their thought repeat.

IS IT A FREAK OF NATURE?

If Not, What Process Formed This Peculiar Limestone.

A paper published at Helena, Mont., says:

"Whether it be due to freak freak of nature or to some supernatural agency opinions differ, but there is in Helena a peculiar stone that is interesting, whatever the point of view of the beholder; interesting because of the impressions that have been made upon the stone, and that apparently have been there for ages.

"The stone is in the possession of A. Laudon, who says he found it in the mountains about six miles from Toston, in Broadwater county, about ten days ago. It is a small bit of limestone, and on the side that has lain uppermost for centuries, perhaps, there are a number of faces and figures plainly impressed in the surface. Plainest of all is a face very like that portrayed by sculptors and painters as the face of the Christ. The face is shaded, so that it seems to stand out from a bright cloud, while near it can be seen the outlines of a cross. There are yet other faces on the stone, but none so plainly brought out as the one referred to.

"Mr. Laudon is an enthusiast in nature study, and says he found the stone while wandering about in the hills, pursuing his investigations."

To the Editor:—There is much doubt about the continuation of life after death, and money offered to prove it. I have the means to prove higher intelligences through their work actually done on a limestone. I have a stone, 8x6 inches, with a picture on the upper side. It contains as center figure, a man looking up into the heavens; a cross one-half inch wide over his right shoulder; a baby leg hanging from his shoulders in front of him. He is surrounded by more than one-half dozen faces, three at his feet. This stone looks as if polished or new on one side, and made yesterday; but the old limestone proves to be a product of thousands of years. Tell me who made this picture? Who made all these faces on one stone? My critic tells me, "It is a freak of nature, or some supernatural agency."

He could not contradict it. He had to acknowledge the working of a supernatural force. A freak of nature—a good excuse, and the best explanation he could give, because no man can produce a picture of this kind. What else are those supernatural agencies, if not intelligent spirits, living on these hills 5,000 feet above the level of the sea, or has the same cause that made the limestone made this picture? If we could prove this, we have the works of the Almighty Creator.

All the doubting Thomases may take their dose; either one or the other party made this stone. No human being made this picture. C. A. H. LAUDON.

Elsie Reynolds' "Materializations."

D. Edson Smith is a prominent Spiritualist of Santa Ana, Cal., and is sincerely devoted to the cause of pure and unadulterated Spiritualism. He sought the columns of the Light of Truth to simply present his views in regard to the trickery he had observed in a medium who at one time had a great reputation—Mrs. Elsie Reynolds! Of course he was turned down, as that paper is considered the authorized organ of the fraudulent element now infesting our ranks. Knowing Mr. Smith well, knowing that he is a staunch Spiritualist, a man of intelligence and undoubted integrity, and who despises dishonesty wherever manifested, we take pleasure in giving him a hearing. It is only through a knowledge of facts that Spiritualists can come to a correct conclusion in reference to the true status of our Cause, and how can they get at facts, unless they are published in the Spiritualist press. Let facts come to the front, even if they are of an unpleasant nature.

I have been attending Sister Elsie Reynolds' seances, off and on, for quite a number of years. She has held quite a number in our house; and, until quite recently, I have believed her to be a thoroughly honest, truthful woman, engaged in the most sacred calling given to any human being. And I have suffered much obloquy because of my advocacy of the genuineness of her materializing mediumship. And when on the night of June 13 last I discovered that she was deceiving me, I was greatly shocked and hurt. The enclosed copy of a letter I sent to Sister Reynolds briefly explains the manner by which I came to know that she was deceiving me.

As related in that letter, I WAS NOT LOOKING FOR FRAUD. I was looking for proof of the genuineness of her mediumship, and I fully expected to get such absolute proof of the certainty of her honesty that I could close the mouths of all her detractors.

I sent the inclosed letter to Sister Reynolds by registered mail, and the registry return receipt card, with her signature, shows that she received the letter June 17.

At the Mineral Park camp-meeting Sister Reynolds told various persons that she had never received any such letter from me; and was greatly surprised to learn through The Progressive Thinker that I was denouncing her as a deceitful woman. So that I know of no better way to get this letter before her eyes, as registered mail has failed according to her claims, except to have it published. Besides, I THINK THE CAUSE OF TRUTH DEMANDS ITS PUBLICATION, and the more so because after the seance on that night of June 13, Sister Reynolds echoed the voices of "Monroe" and "Effa" that I write an account of that seance and send it to the Light of Truth for publication. This request was heard by all the sitters in that seance. But knowing the humiliating discovery I had made, but which her chief cabinet control, "Monroe," had not made, I did not promise her definitely that I would write for publication an account of the seance; but said that I would do as I was moved by the spirit.

After weeks of thought on the subject, I feel that the cause of Spiritualism demands the publication of this letter.

Some of Sister Reynold's warm friends at the camp-meeting, on hearing my reasons for denouncing her as a deceiver, were inclined to think that she was unconscious of practicing deceit; but "the power being weak, her controls were obliged to take her bodily to the manifesting spirit."

THEN THE CONTROLS WERE DECEITFUL, AND WE HAVE NO USE FOR MEDIUMS CONTROLLED BY DECEITFUL SPIRITS. This excuse would have a little plausibility, perhaps, if it was a spirit friend of some sitter that was trying to manifest. But I took special care to turn on my light only when a cabinet control was claiming to be out for the edification of the sitters.

In all materializations there must be a visible individuality besides the medium. In this case I know there was no visible individuality besides Elsie Reynolds.

I have had a good deal of experience with materializing manifestations under absolutely test conditions, and am qualified to say that I know that when the spirit is materialized, the medium is in the cabinet entranced. There are certainly two visible forms. And I know that securing the medium in the cabinet so he, or she, cannot get out by any mortal, or physical, means, does not in the least prevent the spirit from materializing outside the cabinet.

Again the excuse is given that "offering a money consideration for a test seance will prevent manifestations." THIS I ALSO KNOW TO BE A MISTAKEN IDEA; to say nothing of the well known fact that Sister Reynolds usually sits for a monetary consideration. But any way to get at the facts in the case as to whether or not she is a medium for materializations under strictly test conditions. I am willing to donate the money to the N. S. A., to be used in aiding indigent mediums if she will prove her genuineness. But if I was in her place, or that of her guides, I would be glad, and seeking, to give a seance under absolutely test conditions in a neighborhood where my honesty had been doubted by a large number of earnest workers for Spiritualism, free of all charge, if I KNEW I WAS HONEST IN MY CLAIMS.

It is the truth I want. And while I am offering Sister Reynolds $500 to hold a test seance in my house, providing one of her cabinet controls manifests outside the cabinet; old files of the Religio-Philosophical Journal will show that some 24 years ago I offered one thousand dollars to any one saying all so-called materialization was fraudulent, if they would show me how to duplicate the manifestations occurring in the presence of H. France, of Oswego, N. Y., under the same conditions as he sat under. And I have had a standing offer for the past four years of two thousand dollars to any one who would tell me how I could duplicate, under similar conditions, the slate writing I obtained at Lily Dale, in the presence of P. L. O. A. Keeler.

I AM NOT A FRAUD HUNTER!

I AM A TRUTH SEEKER!

Again the excuse is given that in asking that the test seance be given in the presence of only four persons—Mrs. Shaffer, Mr. James, Mrs. Smith and myself—"that four persons would not constitute a sufficient battery for manifestations. But here again I know from past experiences with mediums under test conditions that such a battery is ample. A LARGE NUMBER OF PROF. WALLACE'S TEST SEANCES WERE CONDUCTED WITH ONLY HIMSELF PRESENT.

And one of these four whom I propose, Mrs. Shaffer, is absolutely certain that she has seen four spirit friends materialized at the same time, in her own house, and only she and Sister Reynolds present. Now if Mrs. Shaffer furnishes sufficient battery for four of her spirit friends to materialize; surely three more harmonious Spiritualists added to the battery would be ample for one cabinet spirit to manifest. And Mr. James, one of the four, has Sister Reynolds' perfect confidence, for since my letter to her, she has written Mr. James asking him to act as her business manager.

This is the situation. It is a most serious matter. We have given Sister Reynolds our utmost confidence, and believed she was performing the most sacred function possible for a human being, that of a medium through whom our loved ones in the angel world could manifest to us by loving words and tender embraces.

Then when I seek for absolute proof to close the mouths of her enemies, and those casting obloquy on myself for upholding her as an honest medium, I FIND A BAREFACED DECEIT IS BEING PRACTICED UPON ME. Can you wonder that I am in great earnest to know if all her manifestations have have been, or are now, deceitful?

Our holy cause demands that all deceit shall be weeded out of all public so-called spirit manifestations, and I trust that for the sake of truth, and our noble cause, you will publish the enclosed letter to Elsie Reynolds, together with the greater part, if not all, of this letter of explanation to yourself.

Yours for Truth and Justice,
D. EDSON SMITH.

The Letter to Elsie Reynolds.

Santa Ana, Cal., June 14, 1905.

Mrs. Elsie Reynolds,
417 Central Ave., Los Angeles, Cal.:

Dear Sister Reynolds:—It is with a sad heart I sit down to write to you this morning. It is always very sad to lose confidence in the integrity and honesty of any person.

Last night "Monroe" and "Effa" urged me to write an account of your late seances in our house for publication in the Light of Truth. If, after reading this letter, you still wish me to write a full account of what I saw in last night's seance for publication, I will do so.

Many years ago, when Mrs. Lensburg's daughter was the wife of your son, Mrs. Lensburg visited at our house for a week, and told us many things about you which prejudiced me more or less against you. But in after years my talks with such men as Dean Clarke led me to think that Mrs. Lensburg must have been mistaken; and that I had judged you wrongfully. So that when I first attended your seance at Mrs. Shaffer's several years ago, I was looking for the truth about your mediumship.

And that, and succeeding seances convinced me that you was an honest, genuine, materializing medium. But when the alleged exposition of the past year was published, my faith was somewhat shaken. Still I could not give up the evidence I had had of your honesty; and when you asked to hold a seance in our house a week ago, I was glad of it, for I felt, after talking with you, that you was certainly an honest and much abused woman.

But when I came to extend invitations to attend this seance to persons in whom you had the fullest confidence, as manifested by your suggesting that I invite them, some of them I found had lost all confidence in you, from the public expositions which had been made; and expressed astonishment that I would sanction your integrity by allowing you to hold a seance in our house. THEY INTIMATED THAT "A PARTAKER WAS AS BAD AS A THIEF." And I found that I was up against a serious proposition. I gave them my reasons for believing you to be honest, and I did believe you was a thoroughly honest and much persecuted woman.

After that first seance, a week ago, there was more talk with these doubters, and I decided in my own mind to fully satisfy myself at the seance which you had asked to hold in our house last night. I should not say "satisfy myself." For I was quite fully satisfied in my own mind that everything was genuine. But I determined to have positive proof to fully convince my doubting friends that you was a much abused woman, and I also fully expected to be able to throw a HEAVY BOMB INTO THE CAMP OF YOUR PUBLIC ENEMIES WHICH WOULD SCATTER THEM IN ALL DIRECTIONS.

Alas! Alas!!

The proof turned out just the opposite from my expectations. Instead of getting proof to convince my skeptical friends and the public that you was a genuine materializing medium, I got the proof THAT YOU ARE A CRUEL IMPOSTOR, PLAYING UPON THE HOLIEST FEELINGS OF THE HUMAN HEART TO FURTHER YOUR OWN SELFISH ENDS.

Before you entered the cabinet last night it was light enough so that Mrs. Smith and I saw you throw the mat at me, you saying, "the spirits were on hand early to-night." And we saw you manipulate the dummy, "Peter Bove."

According to all accredited laws of materialization, when a form like "Effa" or "Lily Roberts"—cabinet controls—comes out of the cabinet, the medium remains in the cabinet entranced. Prof. Wallace proved this fact beyond all cavil. And I proved it to my satisfaction while I was traveling with the medium H. France. So that last night when "Effa" was singing, and I flashed my electric light into the cabinet, I fully expected to see you sitting in the chair entranced. Instead, I saw you on your knees impersonating "Effa." And later, when a form purporting, according to "Monroe," to be your sister, also a cabinet control, came out and sang a beautiful song, and I again flashed my electric light into the cabinet, you was not in there, but was outside personating the spirit. There was no need of any grabbing. The fraudulency of the manifestation was too utterly apparent.

This is my positive proof that you are a fraud. And so sure am I, that I hereby offer you five hundred dollars to prove to the contrary. My proposition is this. I will place five hundred dollars in escrow in the Commercial Bank of Santa Ana. You are to come to Santa Ana, at my expense from Los Angeles, and are to sit under similar test conditions as Mr. H. France cheerfully submitted to when I was traveling with him. The sitters are to be Mrs. Shaffer, Mr. James, my wife and myself. I know of no two persons here in whom you have more confidence, or who have more confidence in you than Mrs. Shaffer and Henry James. You are to have three trials, extending over a week's time if you wish; we to board you during that time. If at any one of these three sittings your familiar cabinet spirit "Lily Roberts" comes out of the cabinet and sings in her usual manner of dress, you are to have the five hundred dollars. And in any case the results of these three sittings are to be given the widest publicity.

I shall refrain from making public what I saw last night till I shall have had time to receive an answer to this letter. I am sincerely sorry for you, Sister Reynolds, for you are my sister, although a little fallen perhaps. While the deception I am sure you have practiced has BEEN OF THE MOST HORRIBLE, UNHOLY KIND, yet I realize that we are all creatures of heredity and environment, that we are not creatures of "free will." And that I might have done similar ignoble deeds had I been in your place with all your heredity and environment. I pity you from the bottom of my heart, and am ready to lend you a HELPING HAND TO AID YOU ALL IN MY POWER TO COME UP ONTO HIGHER GROUND. But you must first bring forth fruit meet for repentance." I will no more think evil of you that I would of a person falling into a cesspool.

Sincerely and faithfully yours for truth and the enlightenment of mankind. D. EDSON SMITH.

P. S.—No one of the sitters, not even my wife, had the slightest idea that I was going to flash a light into the cabinet. You heard the remarks after the seance about seeing two lights during the sitting.

SPIRIT POWER MANIFESTED IN JAIL.

A Chair Mysteriously Moved Without Visible Means, Illustrating the Fact That Spirit Return is Common to All Humanity.

Are the cells of the county jail inhabited by spooks and haunted by ghosts, or is C. M. Johnson, the enigmatical genius who contrived such unique means to escape from his quarters, possessed of superhuman intelligence, or is Johnson or some one of the other prisoners Spiritualistic mediums capable of materializing objects as in public seances?

Sheriff J. D. Caldwell would like to know the answer to these questions and would like to know where "he is at."

The removal of a chair from in front of the small corridor in the upper floor of the jail to the rear of the cages, with no human hands to touch it, and apparently with no human ingenuity to contrive means to move it, is what is giving rise to the queries on the part of the sheriff.

When Johnson, Schwendeman and Smith were discovered close to liberty Tuesday morning the sheriff ordered them upstairs where the cages are more secure and where the locks are more numerous than they are on the first floor. They sulked and were sullen. Johnson was irritable and glowered at the officer whenever he appeared.

The cells upstairs are enclosed in a steel case. There is a corridor in front of them. In this corridor is the water closet. There are no closets in the cells. Because of this fact the sheriff allowed the three prisoners to have the liberty of the closets at certain times. It is impossible, seemingly, for one without the sheriff's keys and not being on the outside, to unlock this portion of the cages. Outside the barred and grated door that leads to the corridor a chair was left, upon which the food which was brought the prisoners could be set. The chair was far out of reach of any of the prisoners. They would need arms several feet in length to get hold of the chair.

Chair Mysteriously Moved.

When the sheriff came with supper last evening he found that the sole piece of furniture in the upper portion of the jail was missing. He asked Johnson where it was and the prisoner said he did not know. A search afterwards revealed the chair twenty feet or more from where it had been left, and at the rear instead of in front of the cage. In its removal a grated door had to be passed through, but this is without a lock and was left open. The sides of the cage are solid steel. The roof is sealed so tightly that even light cannot penetrate it. The back of the cages is tight with the exception of a short distance at the back of each cell where there are heavy and closely set iron bars.

Say Johnson Did It.

One of the prisoners when questioned by Sheriff Caldwell last evening, said that Johnson had accomplished the removal of the chair by the use of string and the application of mechanical principles relative to levers, angles, etc. No one can believe this theory of the mystery who visits the jail as it is clearly impossible to operate strings to move an object that far and in that direction.

Trick Is Repeated.

When Mr. Caldwell left the jail after supper he placed the chair where it was originally, shut the iron doors, locked them with a great clanking of iron and steel, locked the outer door and set a guard over the outer door to see that no one should enter. Three hours later, when the sheriff visited the quarters of the prisoners, he found the chair gone again, but it was discovered thirty feet or more away, in the place where it was before.

The sheriff says the trick looks like legerdemain to him. He is not certain whether it was not removed by some systematical power possessed by Johnson, but is loath to believe that it was moved by material means.

In Solitary Confinement, Straight Jacket Next.

This morning the officer took Schwendeman and Smith down stairs again, and Johnson, the wizard, is left in the center cell alone, with nothing in his small quarters but a sheet of canvas to serve as a bunk.

He is like a wild animal that is caged, and is believed to be the most desperate character ever confined in the local jail. When visitors appear he gives them the same insolent look which he gave the sheriff on the morning that he was discovered working his way towards liberty.

If Johnson does not improve his conduct and quit his "back talk" to the sheriff he will be placed in a straight jacket, and given a diet of bread and water.—Waterloo (Ia.) Courier.

"Hard Problems of Scripture."

A Reply to the Animadversions of R. A. Torrey, D. D.

By Moses Hull.

PART TWO.—"WHERE DID CAIN GET HIS WIFE?"

I really am not so much interested in the answer to the question, "Where did Cain get his wife?" as I am in the side issues this man Torrey brings into his attempt to answer it. In illustration of this man's ability to evade the real question, and to bring in other irrelevant matters I will make a rather tedious quotation from the book.

"The man who can make his inability to find out where Cain got his wife, an excuse for refusing to believe the Bible to be the word of God, when there are so many positive and overwhelming proofs that it is the word of God, can hardly be regarded as a fair-minded or reasonable man. It is hard not to believe him a mere quibbler. And the person who makes his ignorance of where Cain got his wife an excuse for not accepting Jesus Christ as his Divine Savior, when so many persons of unimpeachable veracity are testifying that Jesus Christ has proven Himself to be a Divine Savior in their own experience, can hardly be considered a person of good, hard-headed common sense. He is about as sensible as the sick person who refuses to take medicine that he knows will cure him, because there is some mystery that he has never been able to solve, and which is none of his business to understand, about the matrimonial affairs of a man who was third cousin to the man who manufactured the bottles in which the medicine is put up.

"When one makes his failure to understand where Cain got his wife an excuse for rejecting Christ, the simple fact is, he wants to continue in sin, and makes this a pretext for so doing."

Here are three distinct points thrown in to lead the questioner off the track. Let me review them.

1. It is assumed that the person who does not believe the Bible to be the word of God refuses to believe it because he cannot find out where Cain got his wife. I never saw such a person, nor did I ever hear of him until I read Mr. Torrey's book. Those who fail to accept Jesus Christ as a Divine Savior, do not do so because they cannot find out who Cain's wife was, but because to their minds, there is a total lack of evidence that Jesus was any more divine than thousands of others were who were born before and since he was. Also there is a lack of evidence that Jesus ever saved anybody in this world, or in any other.

Before I state the second effort to lead the minds of his readers from the real question allow me to examine the assumption. I deny that anybody denies that the Bible is the word of God, because he does not know who Mrs. Cain was. The fact is, belief and unbelief are not matters of choice, but matters of evidence; if the evidence is presented in such a manner as to force conviction, the one to whom that evidence is thus presented cannot "refuse" to believe it. If the evidence is not sufficient to force conviction then the one who pretends to believe it is only making a hypocrite of himself by that pretense.

I here and now declare that, no matter where Cain got his wife, or whether he ever had a wife, the Bible is not, nor nowhere claims to be the word of God, as is asserted in the quotation just made. That term, "word of God," "word of the Lord," "my word," "his word," "thy word," and other terms of equivalent value, occur about two hundred times in the Bible, but never once do either of the terms apply to the Bible. They refer to certain phenomena which by the Spiritualists of to-day are called spirit manifestations.

When the word of the Lord came to Abraham it was not a Bible; it was nothing more nor less than a message given to him from the spiritual world while in a vision. See Gen. xv:1-4. When the word of the Lord came to Balaam, it came to teach him what to say; in fact it entranced him. Num. xxii:18-20, 38; xxiii:3-5, 16; xxiv:3-5, 15. Deut. xxx:14, says, "But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it." See also I. Sam. iii:1, 7, 21; ix:27; I. Kings xii:22-24; I. Chron. xvii:3-5; Luke iii:2; Heb. iv:12; vi:5.

Now I would ask this gentleman to tell his readers who ever made a lack of information as to where Cain got his wife, an excuse for not accepting Jesus Christ as a Divine Savior?

I never saw that person, nor did I ever hear of him until I read Rev. Mr. Torrey's book. Those who fail to accept Jesus Christ as a Divine Savior, failed because, to their minds there is a total lack of evidence of the divinity of Jesus, or of his being able to save anybody.

3. In questioning that Jesus was more divine, or more of a Savior than other good people are, or have been, we do not question the "unimpeachable veracity" of those who testify that Jesus has proven himself to be a Divine Savior, in their experience. We simply object to trying to prove objective facts by subjective testimonies. People of unimpeachable veracity have testified in behalf of every enthusiast, fraud and fake that ever lived, from the first "false Christ" that ever lived, down to Joseph Smith and John Alexander Dowie. The objection in all of these cases where "unimpeachable witnesses" can testify, is as to their ability to testify. As yet such witnesses have failed to furnish an iota of proof that they know anything more on the case needing proof than do others who cannot give testimony. These people only testify to their opinions, not to facts. Not one of them ever saw Jesus. Some of them have been the subjects of hypnotic spells which came from they know not where.

No one with whom I am acquainted wants an excuse for rejecting Christ; some want evidence that such a person as Jesus ever existed; others want evidence that he was more of a Savior than Confucius or Buddha, who were Saviors before him, or many who came after him. Some even have not yet found the evidence of the fall of man, and hence of the need of a Savior. Some regard man not as a depraved, but as an immature being—a being who in the course of the eternities may outgrow some of his immaturities.

"There is more faith in honest doubt,
Believe me, than in half the creeds,"

In fact, experience teaches that those who believe in Jesus, "as a Divine Savior," are quite as liable to be sinners as those who believe that "though hand join in hand the sinner cannot go unpunished." As people learn that "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap," they will incline to break off their sins by righteousness. In proportion as they believe with Rev. Mr. Torrey, and the orthodox hymn, that "Jesus paid it all," in that proportion will they incline to go on sinning and sending the bill to Jesus.

Mr. Torrey after much more circumlocution than is expressed in the above quotation, at last comes to the real question, as follows:

"But where did Cain get his wife? In Gen. v:3, we learn that Adam in his long life begat many sons and daughters. There can be little doubt that Cain married one of these numerous daughters as his wife."

It is true that Adam begat sons and daughters but Cain "knew" his wife; was the father of son's and daughters, and was a grandfather, and even builded a city before these "sons and daughters" of Adam were born. Compare Gen. iv:16-21 with v:3, 5.

Now the question recurs for an answer, if there were but three persons left on earth when Abel was killed, where did Cain get his wife? No calling those who ask that question ignorant, no arts of sophistry will satisfy those who ask that question; it demands a straightforward answer.

If Cain was the only person on earth besides his parents, what did he mean when he said: "My punishment is greater than I can bear. Behold, thou hast driven me out this day, from the face of the earth, and from thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass that every one that findeth me shall slay me." How could he be driven out from among the people when there were no people? Who would find him and slay him? What did the Lord mean in verse 15, "Whosoever slayeth Cain vengeance shall be taken on him seven fold." The verse closes by saying, "And the Lord set a mark upon Cain lest any finding him should kill him." Verse 17 in forms us that Cain went off and builded a city and called its name Enoch, after the name of his son." Please tell us who inhabited this city?

Do not answer this question by saying that those who propound such questions have bad hearts, but give us an answer that will make us wiser. Bluff, well played, may in some cases be a good game, but in this case it will not work.

After telling us of infidels objecting very much against "a book of which they know so little," the author closes this chapter, leaving his readers about as wise about where Cain got his wife as if the chapter had not been written.

Should the lost documents be found other portions of the book may pass under review.

MINERAL PARK CAMP-MEETING.

A Splendid Success Throughout—What Really Happened.

We have noticed a number of partial reports of this camp-meeting in The Progressive Thinker, but we feel that the grand success of the occasion demands a somewhat fuller account, and as we were present throughout the entire time up to and including the last Sunday, we venture to send a brief outline of the events of the month.

Sunday June 25, dawned bright and clear, and at the initial service, Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., certainly struck a vibrant chord between the material and the spiritual which lifted his hearers upward, giving a harmonious impulse which promised rich success in what was to follow. It was universally remarked that no camp had ever had a more propitious beginning, and the prophecy of the beginning was grandly fulfilled throughout the meetings of the month.

The hearty expression of approval, given Brother Barrett on the occasion of his last regular lecture, amounting to an ovation, and the request for him to remain and give at least one more lecture, which he did, showed plainly the general feeling regarding both Brother Barrett and his plain statements of facts as they had come under his notice.

While Brother Barrett is plainly an idealist, he is a grand man, full of helpfulness to the cause, desiring only truth and not afraid to state, and stand by his convictions. On his departure there was some prospect he might be able to return to Los Angeles later in the season and remain for a short time.

John W. Ring, the man from Texas, and of Lyceum fame, was present throughout the camp giving constantly of his inspiration, which was always of a high order, and one of the prominent features contributing to the general success of the camp. All, both old and young, who attended the sessions of the lyceum under his direction, must have received great benefit. The entertainment given by the lyceum on the night of July 4, was a grand success, all the children and young people doing themselves proud in their respective parts.

Mr. John Lillie was present during the first week and acted as chairman and also as conductor of the music, to the delight of all, while Mrs. R. S. Lillie remained two weeks and with her clear cut statements of truth, keen wit and profound logic, kept things from growing stagnant in more respects than one.

Our old friend John L. Dryden, gave a number of grand lectures bearing largely on Socialist problems, which were well received

T. W. Hutchins, one of our local speakers gave three splendid addresses during the month, which gave evidence he was a man with a mission and a message.

John McLean, another local celebrity, the eccentric Scotchman, entertained us with both prose and poetry in his own inimitable style.

Mrs. Dr Ada S. Horman, of Los Angeles, gave us some of the grandest and best spiritual and practical food of the entire month.

Rev. C. Hall Cook, American member of the London Society of Psychic Research, gave two of his interesting lectures, illustrating one of them with stereopticon views. The Doctor presents foundation principles from a scientific standpoint which are convincing indeed.

Other of our local speakers were: Mrs. Mary O. Vlasek, pastor of the Society of Spiritual Progression; Dr. Geo. W. Carey, Mrs Lucy B. Powers of Pasadena; L. W. Rogers, president of the Theosophical Society of Los Angeles; J. H. M. Lapsley, Rev. Mrs. Bryan, Dr. James Watson, G. P. Sullivan, Mrs. Florence Robinson, Rev. W. C. Bowman, and Mrs. S. Augusta Armstrong, who was also our chairman after the departure of Mrs. Lillie, which position she filled with dignity and efficiency.

Thursday, July 6, was N. S. A. Day on which occasion $100 was raised for the Medium's Fund.

Friday, July 13 was children's Fraternal Home Day, G. P. Sullivan and Nellie F. Sullivan, manager and matron of the Home, and Dr. Watson, one of the main supporters of the work, presented the object of the work, mode of conducting the Home, etc., and in the evening an entertainment was given closing with a social dance, all of which was heartily enjoyed by all. The children of the Home were on the ground throughout the camp, and won their way to the hearts of many. The proceeds of the day for the Home amounted to nearly $50.

Monday, July 17, was Animal and Audubon Day, and was filled full of practical suggestions.

Tuesday, July 18, was given over to the Socialists, who came out from the city en masse, and kept things lively until the good-night lamps were turned off.

Wednesday, July 19, Woman's Day, was given into the hands of the ladies and it goes without saying that they did full credit to their opportunity, in the accomplishment of which the men gave very substantial backing.

One of the most harmonious and enjoyable days was Oriental Day, Thursday, July 20, Chief Green, chairman. A powerful healing service opened the exercises of the day, which was followed by addresses in various languages, which were interpreted by Mrs Maud Lord Drake, and a Hindoo whose name we are unable to give.

On the evening of July 13, Mrs. Suydam Green gave one of her famous fire tests, which was successful in every respect.

The instrumental music for the month was furnished by Allen Parkenson, violinist and cornetist, and Miss May —, pianist. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan sang duets, Mr. Sullivan having charge of the music after the first week. Mrs. Lottie Allen and Miss Geneva Bryson sang solos; Mr. and Mrs. Vose, Mr. Hyland and Mrs. Proper assisted in quartets, while Mrs. Adelaide K. Brooks charmed the audiences repeatedly with her inspirational solos.

To Mrs. Nettie Howell is due the credit of making this grand feast of good things possible. Her zeal, untiring energy and perseverance, coupled with her financial and executive ability, made failure impossible. The tribute of appreciation from her friends in the form of a medal, has already been mentioned in The Progressive Thinker.

The mediums on the ground and working were Mrs. R. Cowell, Mrs. C. M. Johnson, Mrs. Mary C. Vlasek, Mrs. Bryan, Mrs. Hutchinson, Mrs. Alice Balbridge, Mrs. Suydam Green, Mrs. Sanford Johnson, Mrs. Kate Hoskins, and Mrs. Karcher, while seances were given by John Henly, and the inimitable John Slater was with us one week.

The memory of this camp, with its instruction and entertainment, will long be cherished by all who attended.

LIVE TOPICS NOW FILL THE CHURCHES.

"I Defy Any One to Go Into a Church To-day and Hear a Sermon on a Hell of Fire and Brimstone."—Is Not the Tendency Among Spiritualists for Live Topics?

According the church statistics, [says the Tribune] Chicago ministers are leaders in a new movement for the substitution of "live topics" discussion for the old Sunday gospel sermon.

While there is no organized association for the development of the movement, it has grown steadily during the last ten years until now there are few churches in Chicago where simon pure evangelical sermons are ever preached. They have been superseded by discussions on subjects of public interest.

Clergymen deny that the "live topic" discussions have forced gospel sermons into the background, contending that it is preached as extensively now as it ever was. However, a review of the Sunday addresses delivered during the last six months in Chicago will show that a majority of the discourses have been on other than religious subjects.

Draws Larger Congregations.

The conviction of Bigamist Hoch for wife murder; the defeat of the Russian Baltic fleet; Mayor Dunne's plan to segregate vice; the teamster's strike and other live questions have furnished material for Sunday sermons this year. The wider the public interest in the topic discussed, the larger the congregations that hear the ministerial discourses.

While all ministers seem emphatically denied that the gospel no longer is preached, they admitted that a weekly commentary upon the news of the day proves advantageous in gathering together large audiences. Some of the clergymen said they announce weekly what apparently is a "popular question," and then, after a few moments of discussion, turn the discourse into an evangelical sermon.

This may be true in many cases, but the fact remains unchanged that the churches where "live topics" are discussed invariably have the largest congregations. Judging from the attendance, the church-going public appears to demand a certain kind of sermon, just as theatre patrons insist upon one kind of entertainment or another. If the kind of sermon is not given in one church, another house of worship where it can be had soon is found. The public, it is said, must be catered to at church as well as elsewhere.

Figures Show the Tendency

According to the announcement in the newspapers, 155 sermons on live topics were discussed during the months of May, June and July. Of this number forty-seven were delivered in Methodist churches, thirty-nine in Presbyterian, thirty-two in Congregational, twenty in Baptist, and the others in churches of various denominations. But this number includes only the advertised sermons, and as less than one-fourth of the churches announce the subjects of the weekly discourse, it is safe to assume the total of "live topic" sermons delivered was nearer to 400 than 150.

The Rockefeller gift to the Congregational ministers supplied a topic for discussion which was taken advantage of by almost every Protestant clergyman in Chicago. "Tainted" money was talked of for weeks after the Gladden incident.

On the Sunday following the spread of the teamster's strike sermons on the lessons to be drawn from the conflict between capital and labor were preached in twenty-three churches. Ten ministers spoke on "The fall of the Russian Empire" after the destruction of the Czar's Baltic fleet.

When Mayor Dunne announced his plan for the segregation of vice into restricted districts the churches rose in a body to protest against the city's chief magistrate recognizing vice and its right to exist. Memorial day furnished a fertile subject for eulogies of the deeds of the old soldiers, and the death of Secretary Hay was an occasion for tributes to the statesman.

Laity Readily Admits Change.

While the ministry denies that there has been a departure from the gospel sermons, the laity readily admits that the Sunday sermon has really become a commentary on the news of the week. A member of one of the large south side churches said yesterday that he would not remain in the congregation if the minister preached evangelical sermons.

"I don't want to hear about everlasting punishment for the bad and a heaven for the worthy," he said. "That was all right fifty years ago. I think I speak for a large majority of our church members when I say the sermon we like deals with the material things of this life and not the future. The business man of today is interested in "live topics." He has little time for study. If these subjects are discussed at church by an intelligent pastor he receives information beneficial to himself. The church then becomes an educational institution.

"Now, I know tha hundreds of ministers will disagree with me. They will say the gospel is being preached as vigorously now as it was 100 years ago. This is not so. I DEFY ANYONE TO GO INTO A CHURCH TODAY AND HEAR A SERMON ON A HELL OF FIRE AND BRIMSTONE. It is impossible to do so. No such sermons are preached. The people won't stand for them. Twenty-five years ago 'hell' was the sole topic for discussion.

Churches Dependent on People.

"The churches are dependent upon the people. A man will not go to services one Sunday morning following another to hear a minister tell how wicked the world is and how every man is to be damned. Dogmatic and theological sermons are unbearable, and almost totally have been abandoned. Distasteful as is the gospel sermon the doctrinal discourse is far more displeasing. Church-goers will not listen to it. Consequently preachers have ceased delivering this class of discourses.

"One thing is certain. The 'live topic' sermons have been productive of great, good, and wonderful results. I feel I am not giving too much credit to the churches when I say that the Sunday discussion of civic conditions is responsible for the crusades against graft in many of our large cities. No one will deny that the churches always stand for clean government, although they do refuse to take a decided stand on some of the great questions of the day."

"To a certain class of church-goers the 'live topic' sermons appeal. As the church wishes to embrace all classes discourses to please all must be delivered. I will admit that the 'live topic' sermon is advantageous in gathering together large congregations."

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

Harrison D. Barrett's Trenchant Views.

As we have said before, there is a Crisis in the Ranks of Spiritualism, and just so long as such a prominent person as Harrison D. Barrett desires to express an opinion, he should have an opportunity to do so. He makes a statement of facts, as observed by himself. Being a psychic, and President of the N. S. A., it is exceptionally important that he be granted a hearing, so that Spiritualists can know just what is going on in our ranks, and the status of things generally from his standpoint. While fraud in many respects is rampant, there never was a time in the history of our Cause when the Phenomena were more striking than at present, as evidenced by last week's Progressive Thinker.

The great commotion now noticeable on the surface of the ocean of Spiritualistic thought leads the careful observer to wonder just what it means. The fraud question has lashed up scores of white-capped waves and hurled them, howling in wrath, against the rocks along the shores of time. Differences with regard to the possibilities of the life beyond the grave have also arisen and billows, mountain high, are rolling over the mentalities of many an unwary thinker who ventured too near the broad beach of speculative wondering.

Very few Spiritualists are there who are agreed upon the measures most necessary to bring about a peaceful calm, and to inaugurate needed reforms in the interest of humanity. All declare "fraud must go," and applaud the sickly sentiment vociferously wherever a speaker grandiloquently declaims against the iniquity of chicanery. Some speakers loudly denounce fraud, then join themselves unto some of the worst of frauds in mediumship for the sake of large audiences and generous dividends from the proceeds of their meetings. Others do the same thing through the corrupt leader of some misguided band of personality worshipers, and then feel deeply aggrieved when they are asked to cut loose from such evil associates. Still others defend the frauds because they are the "under dogs" in the fight, hence are in need of pity.

O Tempora! O Mores! The honest Spiritualists see these things—all intelligent speakers, writers and lay-workers know them, yet out from among them come able defenders of the vilest of frauds and their confederates! So long as these things shall be, just so long will Spiritualism to a certain extent continue to be a stench in the nostrils of decent people. If a Spiritualist knows a worker to be a fraud or a trickster and abets him in his nefarious work, or protects him from the consequences of his evil doing, then that Spiritualist is equally reprehensible morally with the first offender. When presidents of local societies provide "tests" (?) as they do in numerous instances, for the platform mediums employed by their societies for the sake of drawing a crowd, and filching ten cents per head from each one at the door, then the aforesaid presidents are the greater criminals of the two. They are accessories before the fact, hence the chief offenders against the law.

At some of these local societies large audiences are attracted by the "wonderful (?) tests" given from the platform. Every test is a fake, pure and simple, pre-arranged between either the president and the so-called medium, or some officer or member of the society and the medium. The representative of the society justifies his part in the fraud on the ground that he is helping the society by making outsiders pay its expenses and by "converting" people to Spiritualism through the work of the scoundrel on the platform. Every ten cent piece taken at the door of such a society by such a nefarious combination is worse than highway robery of the individual. It is downright mendacity—infamy unspeakable—outrage infinite! Such a society deserves speedy death. There should be a law applicable to just such specific cases, making the president personally responsible for the money obtained under false pretenses as many times as there were persons present who paid admission.

Those speakers, too, who have gotten hold of the splendid sermons of Dr. Bellows, Robert Hall, Dr. Chalmers, H. W. Beecher, William Ellery Channing, Adin Ballou, Mrs. Richmond and others of equal rank and palmed them off as their own, or as the work of "inspiration," should not be forgotten, nor passed by in silence. Let them study as much as they please—the more the better—but let them give credit where credit is due. Someone should speak out and tell the speaker of his fraud whenever he attempts it. Those over-ambitious, self-conceited women who think they would "pose" superbly and elegantly on the rostrum need a word at this point. They go to some good writer or speaker, hire him or her to write an essay on a special subject, then commit it to memory, and give it forth as the work of inspiration or "splendid(?)" mental action. One such person is on the rostrum to-day, giving a lecture that was written by another party many years ago.

The eagerness with which thousands of well-meaning people rush to the defense of mediumistic counterfeiters is simply astounding. Winans is a case in point. Confessedly guilty at Hot Springs and some other places where he has operated, for, when cornered he always admits that he never gave one genuine spirit manifestation in his life, yet at every exposure, sickly sentimentalists, blind and willing dupes rush to this man's defense! Ye Immortal Gods! It is enough to make angels weep with shame, and archangels to groan in despair! Can there be any question of his being perfectly conscious in his every seance when he can state as openly and as often as he has done that he never gave a genuine thing in his life? Rumor also has it that he has as frequently declared that he did not believe in Spiritualism, that there was not one genuine phenomenon offered in its name, but that its followers were "suckers" with plenty of cash, and he "was after the dough!" Take these words of Winans to the parties in Indiana who want the "poor(?)" fellow comforted and sustained because of his recent severe trial through which he has passed! Also to our Minnesota jurist—himself a noble-hearted man—who can split hairs over Winans' "consciousness" at the times he performs his devilish trickery!

As for Mrs. Bliss-Green, the writer can add nothing to what has been so well said by Dr. Geo. B. Warne, vice-president of the N. S. A. To the writer she was for many years the one star of hope in the materialization firmament, and to her he sent many an inquirer, both in person and by letter. She had my confidence even when I had grown skeptical with regard to many of the manifestations bearing the name materialization. I even went so far as to recommend her and Farmer Riley to a princess of one of the royal families of Europe, who was desirous of having a reliable medium for this particular phase in her castle under a liberal salary for a term of months. The Chicago episode is a fearful response to the confidence of years, and it cuts far deeper than did the Winans imbroglio, because I have never felt that he was anything else than a trickster. Of course, his exposure hurt in a general way, but it was expected, while this case of Mrs. Green's is quite the other way. I await her defense with deep earnestness of soul.

There are those who are writing me asking me what shall be done? At present I can see but one thing to be done—declare to the world in positive terms the demonstrations of Sir William Crookes in regard to materialization, and then honestly admit that as Spiritualists we have not added an iota of evidence to his conclusions in thirty years—that we have nothing to offer the world to-day in this respect and that we advise all investigators outside of the scientists in their laboratories, to let materialization alone—that is—the materialization as practiced by the so-called physical medium of to-day. THERE IS TRUTH ENOUGH IN SPIRITUALISM FOR ALL RATIONAL MINDS WITHOUT TRYING TO BEFUDDLE THEM WITH THE UNTHINKABLE AND PREPOSTEROUS ATTEMPTS TO PROVE THE UNPROVABLE, TO SOLVE THE UNSOLVABLE, OR TO KNOW THE UNKNOWABLE. Materialization evidently rests upon a peculiar law, so peculiar that the intelligent investigator of to-day must, if honest with himself render the Scotch verdict "Not Proven," whenever he is called upon to pass judgment upon his own experiences. Let us therefore as honest men and women turn this phase over to the scientists and await developments.

If this is not done, legislation will soon be asked for by the aggrieved and grossly defrauded victims of bogus mediums. Col. John C. Bundy was not so far out of the way after all when he went before the Illinois legislature, asking for a law to protect the people from pretended materializing mediums. He was ahead of his times and was laughed at for his pains. But Col. Bundy knew there WAS A GENUINE PHENOMENON TO BE CONSERVED, PROTECTED AND DEVELOPED, and he naturally thought that the Spiritualists of all people should be the ones to draw the line between the true and the false in mediumship. He believed that the Spiritualists, as friends of the phenomena, and honest believers in them, were best qualified to pass judgment upon them, hoping that they would deal kindlier with all presentations of a psychic character than would the enemies of Spiritualism. Our failure to draw the line then or since has led the outside public to do it in many states, and the result is that it has been done with no gentle hand. No discrimination has been made between mediumship and its counterfeit, hence under existing laws, the innocent are suffering with the guilty. Witness the numerous city ordinances that exact licenses from honest mediums as well as from the conscienceless fakir and charlatan.

Col. Bundy was laughed out of court and the people who attacked him most bitterly were Spiritualists. I admit that I opposed him with might and main at the time, but I confess I am a convert to his plan now. A distinguished jurist, once on the bench of our great States, said to me a few months ago:

"IF YOU SPIRITUALISTS WILL DRAW THE LINE FOR US AS OFFICERS OF THE LAW, BETWEEN RELIGIOUS SPIRITUALISM AND COMMERCIALISM, YOUR HONEST MEDIUMS WILL HAVE NO FURTHER TROUBLE. YOU HAVE NOT DIFFERENTIATED BETWEEN HONESTY AND DISHONESTY IN MEDIUMSHIP, AND UNTIL YOU DO IT FOR YOURSELVES, THE LAW WILL NATURALLY LOOK UPON ALL MEDIUMS AS BEING OF THE SAME CLASS. THE LAW IS NOT INTENDED TO DISCRIMINATE AGAINST PEOPLE, NOR WILL IT TOLERATE RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION. IF, HOWEVER, YOU REFUSE TO CLEAN YOUR OWN HOUSES YOU MUST NOT COMPLAIN, WHEN IT IS DONE FOR YOU, IF SOME INNOCENT PERSONS SUFFER WITH THE GUILTY."

More can be said on the same line and to the same end. For my own part, I can find no fault with the learned judge's words. I fully agree with him.

I was recently questioned by two sharp and exceptionally able lawyers to give a definition of religious Spiritualism, likewise of commercialism in Spiritualism. An important case was in litigation and both parties were anxious to see what would be brought out in court. Here is my definition of mediumship as applied to religious Spiritualism: "ANY SPEAKER UPON THE PLATFORM, AND ANY PERSON WHO GIVES COMFORT, CONSOLATION, SPIRITUAL ADVICE, WORDS OF TENDERNESS AND LOVE, SPIRITUAL MESSAGES, SOUL CULTURE AND EVIDENCES OF THE PRESENCE OF EXCARNATE SPIRITS, ARE ENGAGED IN RELIGIOUS WORK AND AS MEDIUMS AND SPEAKERS ARE MINISTERS OF THE RELIGION OF SPIRITUALISM WITHIN THE MEANING OF OUR USAGES."

Commercial mediumship was declared to include all classes not enumerated in the foregoing paragraph. All so-called business mediums who use their psychical powers for commercial ends only under this classification. I believe this discrimination should be made now and made by Spiritualists. Who shall pass upon the psychic claimants? The officers of local, state and National associations, and they should see to it that only those who are members in good standing of some local or state organization are given papers of recommendation. As for the legal side of this question, the officers of the law can soon prove the statement of the psychics when they question them.

From my point of view, I see no reason why commercial enterprises and occupations should not be taxed. The lawyer, the doctor, the barber, the carpenter each pays an occupation tax—a license, if you please—he is engaged in commercial or secular pursuits only. So, also, is the palmist, the astrologer, the fortune teller, the materializing medium, the business medium, the trumpet medium, and the spirit photographer. Each should pay his or her tax. I am in favor of preachers doing likewise. Yet they are exempt under the law of the state, and we are now asked to say if we have any representatives who come under the exemption act.

Our statement will be accepted and we are courteously requested to take our honest mediums out of the disreputable class into which the law has cast them through a plain definition of terms that the law can grasp and use in its application in citizenship. In fine, it lays upon us the duty of wholesome house cleaning by means of honest statements of fact. As soon as a clean, open, honest definition of religious Spiritualism and its representatives is made, followed by one equally clear and concise with respect to commercial Spiritualism, the majority of our troubles will disappear. The wild guessing, insane twaddle, coarse and vulgar utterances of some mediums will vanish from the platform, and the private test medium will be given a dignity and standing never known or enjoyed before, for he or she will no longer be classed with criminals, thieves and prostitutes with whom the law has long associated him. All hail the day when this reform shall have been brought about! God bless our honest mediums now and always!

THE OLD COTTAGE CLOCK.

Oh, the old, old clock of the household stock
Was the brightest thing and neatest!
Its hands, though old, had a touch of gold,
And its chime rang still the sweetest.
'Twas a monitor, too, though its words were few,
Yet they lived, though nations altered,
And its voice, still strong, warned old and young
When the voice of friendship faltered!
"Tick, tick!" it said. "Quick, quick! to bed!
For ten I've given warning;
Up, up and go, or else, you know,
You'll never rise soon in the morning!"

A friendly voice was that old, old clock,
As it stood in the corner smiling,
And blessed the time, with a merry chime,
The wintry hours beguiling.
But a cross old voice was that tiresome clock
As it called at daybreak boldly,
When the dawn looked gray o'er the misty way
And the early air blew coldly.
"Tick, tick!" it said." Quick, out of bed,
For five I've given warning!
You'll never have health, you'll never have wealth,
Unless you're up soon in the morning!"

Still hourly the sound goes round and round,
With a tone that ceases never,
While tears are shed for bright days fled,
And the old friends lost forever!
Its heart beats on, though hearts are gone
That warmer beat and younger.
Its hands still move, though hands we love
Are clasped on earth no longer.
"Tick, tick!" it said. "To the churchyard bed!
The grave hath given warning!
Up, up and rise to the angel skies
And enter a heavenly morning!"

THE DAYS THAT ARE PAST.

"Poetry is Music in Words, and Music is Poetry in Sound."

We will not deplore them, the days that are past;
The gloom of misfortune is over them cast;
They are lengthened by sorrow and sullied by care;
Their griefs are too many, their joys were too rare;
Yet, now that their shadows are on us no more,
Let us welcome the prospect that brightens before!

We have cherished fair hopes, we have plotted brave schemes,
We have lived till we find them illusive as dreams;
Wealth has melted like snow that is grasped in the hand,
And the steps we have climbed have departed like sand;
Yet shall we despond while of health unbereft,
And honor, bright honor, and freedom are left?

Oh, shall we despond while the pages of time
Yet open before us their records sublime!
While, ennobled by treasures more precious than gold,
We can walk with the martyrs and heroes of old;
While humanity whispers such truths in the ear,
As it softens the heart like sweet music to near?

Oh, shall we despond while, with visions still free,
We can gaze on the sky, and the earth, and the sea;
While the sunshine can waken a burst of delight,
And the stars are a joy and a glory by night;
While each harmony running through nature can raise
In our spirits the impulse of gladness and praise?

Oh, let us no longer then vainly lament
Over scenes that are faded and days that are spent;
But, by faith unforsaken, unaided by chance,
On hope's waving banner still fixed be our glance;
And should fortune prove cruel and false to the last,
Let us look to the future and not to the past!

JOHN W. RING'S LETTER.

Seek After Spiritualization Rather Than Materialization.

To the Editor:—How pleasant it is to travel from place to place and see the earnest manner in which many Spiritualists are devoting their energy to the upbuilding of our cause. It seems to me that if our people will carefully spiritualize their everyday lives, and live the beautiful philosophy which the spirit world has given tto us, we will hear more of spiritualization and less of materialization, which is so seriously questioned. Let us lift ourselves into the vibration to which we aspire, rather than wish to bring the spirit friends to us all the time.

In San Diego, Cal., the Spiritualist Society has a very beautiful temple, elegantly equiped; and a splendid home for Spiritualists. The workers are several and each devoted. So warm was my reception and so pleasant was every moment of my stay that I hope to again sojourn to San Diego. Ladies—always doing something good and helpful—gave a "pie social" and "yours truly" is accused of eating—well, many pieces of pie. 'Twas a time long to be remembered.

The Lyceum session was full of interest and instruction. A welcome to me, as National Superintendent of Lyceum Work, was placed on the wall, the letters formed from geranium blossoms, of which there is a profusion; and the welcome which was made manifest by each and every member was as cordial as were the flowers red. I wish I might name some of the good workers, but I would then want to mention every one, for surely each does his and her part in a particular place.

On my way to Clinton I visited Crystola, Col. Here Mr. H. C. Childs, a devoted Spiritualist, has accumulated a considerable amount of land where he anticipates doing much for the promulgation of that for which Spiritualism stands. He has been styled the Modern Tolstoi. It was a privilege to deliver the first Spiritualist lecture in the place. Many people camp here each summer to enjoy the abundant wonders by Nature bestowed on this section, and about seventy-five intellectual people assembled on the veranda of Crystola Cottage and presented such subjects for consideration as brought forth what was declared to be an instructive discourse. The speaker stood on a platform built for the purpose in the open air, and for a background six large posts were set in the ground surrounded with pine limbs and set on fire, giving the appearance of huge torches. 'Twas a picture long to be remembered. Reference was made to the burning fagots as symbols of the present conditions, for even so is the fire of knowledge afforded by the spirit of investigation which fills the age, burning away the walls of superstition and bigotry.

Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, was the next objective point. Here we met lovely people and many earnest workers. Pardon the mention of no names, as we always concede the fact that each is doing the best he can in his own little place. The lyceum was receiving attention, as surely it will at every camp ere long. Plant the seeds in the fertile minds of youth and you may depend on a rich harvest. We rejoice that we have outgrown the limitations which former teachings placed about us, let us prevent the rising generations from being thus hampered. Feed the unfolding minds on the clearly defined facts which we have gained, and allow them to develop in the sunshine of human affection.

Thanks for space for these words, love to everyone who holds high the white banner of Spiritualism with a daily life of honest endeavor and helpfulness.

A MESSAGE FROM SPIRIT LIFE.

Is It Not Necessary to Watch and Pray Lest We Fall by the Wayside?

We are indeed "risen from the dead." In the spirit life there is no death, just the earthly body laid aside. "Dust to dust, ashes to ashes." Aye everyone of us were but human, and only our immortal souls are pressing on to everlasting happiness.

We come here just as we left earth plane. Just as we have prepared ourselves for a future, just so do we enter the higher sphere. Therefore is it not necessary to watch and pray lest we fall by the wayside? Evils arise when we are least aware, so we must be constantly guarded about with the armor of faith and hope and spirit forces, to be able to withstand earth's trials and troubles. They do not last long, but while there are invasions on the best intentions and purposes of human lives, and therefore have the effect for good or bad, and you must come through the fire untouched, safe and secure from all contaminations.

Life is made up of many little things that are vexing, and therefore be strong in the spirit, that conditions do not annoy or worry you.

It is not essential to be entirely controlled by spirit forces to get the best results. Ofttimes persons are not under complete control, and yet their inspirational messages, written or spoken, are very eloquent and of great value to themselves and those who may read or hear them.

Be very grateful for this beautiful gift which is given to you, for it will be of great benefit in time to come to those who need comfort in their trials and sorrows. They may not be given the power that you have, and so you may share with them these beautiful messages from the spirit land, where your loved ones are so willing and anxious to aid you, and are so competent to communicate with you in this manner.

Children of the earth land are bound down by certain conditions, but the mind and soul can soar far beyond the realm of earth into the realm of spirit life, and receive great benefit from the spirit guides who are hovering ever about you.

We are ever ready to aid when needed. Our mission is to assist those who need this consolation and to give them hope and proof of immortality. Cheerfully do the work set before you. Throw off the shadow of sorrow that enfolds you and throw about your loved ones on earth the rays of sunshine to brighten their path while on earth with you. Do not grieve for those who have passed through the valley of the shadow of death, for they are safe from all earthly cares, and will never need to pass through troubles that earth friends do. So brighten up, dear friend, and lay aside the grief and sorrow, for there is no sorrow there, nothing but joy and light and love, and your loved ones are so happy you could but rejoice with them could you but behold them. Good night, and may the unfoldment of your soul show you that all is well with your boy "just away."

"Continuity or Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

SENSIBLE TEACHINGS.

Applicable to Numerous Unhappy People.

There is in it such a vein of sound sense that may prove of practical value that we feel moved to present to our readers the following essay by Marjorie, in the Chicago Chronicle.

Probably Spiritualists have their quota of the class described, though our spiritual philosophy naturally tends to health and happiness:

Little Talks With Women.

A letter from a girl who visited an invalid recently. "I was entertained the whole day," she writes, "with a recital of all the ills the poor thing has suffered from, or imagines she has suffered from, since earliest infancy and of the scores and scores of doctors that have been baffled with her case. Never was there one word of sunshine in all her twaddle. Finally another habitual invalid happened in and upon saying 'How do you do?' to the hostess, her whole tale of woe was begun over again and would have been repeated wholly, no doubt if it had not been for the fact that when the first paused occasionally to take a breath the second broke in with the story of her illnesses. Thus they continued all afternoon, each trying to outtalk the other and never for a moment paying any attention or offering any sympathy to each other."

Surely this is a good description of a familiar type of invalids. We all know them—the complaining, whining, self-pitying creatures who enjoy being in poor health. Indeed, they are to be pitied—not so much for their actual ills and sufferings, though, as for the fact that they live in self-made dungeons of darkness and miss most of the beauty, activities, joys and blessings of life. Yet to be pitied more are the people who must live with them and care for them— those who patiently and unselfishly give up their lives serving them. But generally it would be far better for the invalids and for those who care for them if the latter were less patient and unselfish. Oftentimes these virtues become palpable faults and do much harm. Usually what invalids of this kind need most is a purpose in life, activity and work—something else than themselves to think about. And not unfrequently, too, those who wait upon the invalids end run their legs off in catering to their every wish are more in need of rest and a soft, fresh bed, than the invalid.

A case comes to mind of a woman who had been an invalid for years. In her girlhood she had been the idol of overindulgent parents and she married a man who merely continued spoiling her. She was not robust, but her health was surprisingly good considering how she had been coddled and fussed over all her life. Finally, when trifling organic disease manifested itself, she took to her bed and her husband undertook caring for her, doing the household tasks as well as his own work. He was not very strong, and the strain told on him gradually. He managed to keep up until one winter, when he contracted a severe cold. Then one day as he was about to give her her dinner (her appetite was good, mind you) he fell in a faint. After waiting several minutes for him to rise his sick wife became alarmed and arose, dressed and went for the doctor. She nursed her husband through a siege of typhoid and pneumonia and has never been sick herself since. "I came near to losing Will," she told a friend afterward, "but I am glad he was sick, for if he hadn't been I might never have learned to be a woman and to really live."

My correspondent asks: "Why is it that invalids 'bore' all their friends and enemies with their ceaseless talk about themselves and their troubles?" She might as well have asked why are such invalids? To which I should answer—because they are selfish. They are monomaniacs and their mania is self—their physical, material self and the manifold ills it is subject to. Their trouble, for they have a real trouble, is more mental than physical. Their attitude toward themselves is as abnormal as is that of the creatures in the insane asylums who imagine themselves to be queens and kings. The things of life appear to them in wholly distorted proportions. A radical change in their manner of living is needed to restore the mental equilibrium. Of course, fresh air, and being in the country is good, and they should be given some purpose to live and work for and an activity in which they can forget self. Then gradually, as they become more normal mentally their physical health will improve.

Many things induce this selfish, morbid invalidism. One of the most common causes is ennui and idleness. The society woman is a common sufferer, from nervous prostration and its allied diseases, but who ever heard of a poor hard-working washerwoman getting nervous prostration? Sometimes they die of hard work, poor things, but they never pity themselves much even then, for they don't find time. And invalidism is often caused by parents who coddle and doctor and pet their children to death. It is far better for a child to have an unkind stepparent and be mistreated and abused than to be the pet and darling of the family. And our prevailing mode of thought affects our actual health, mental and physical, more than we dream. If we have little ills and are not as robust as we might be and are constantly dwelling upon them they will become aggravated into serious troubles. On the other hand, if we keep steadily before us our ideals of good health and life cheerfully and usefully all the while doing our best to become natural and normal we will find that our health improves.

There would be fewer invalids in the world if more people realized the influence of their thoughts upon their health and if they knew that invalidism is often just morbid selfishness. And there should be no ill-tempered, selfish, complaining invalids, for such attitudes of mind simply augment the trouble. People who are ill continuously may nevertheless find much beauty, sweetness and good in life and be of much usefulness. Oh, the glory of the invalidism of Robert Louis Stevenson and Henry David Thoreau!

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Any person donating one dollar to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., will, if desired, receive one set of spiritual tracts and one copy of "Violets," a booklet of choice spiritual poems. One contributing two dollars to the fund will also receive a copy of "Leaves of Truth," a cloth-bound book of instructive spiritual matter.

Truth is Coming.

The revolution in religious thought, everywhere apparent to the critical observer, is as marked in our colleges and universities as in the churches. The older of these institutions were founded by sects, the object to educate candidates for the ministry. Their primary curriculum generally embraced a knowledge of the classics, to which was frequently added Hebrew. Beyond this little was taught except theology and ecclesiastical history, with perhaps an outline of general history. The arts and sciences were mostly ignored.

Each Protestant sect felt in duty bound to have a school of learning of its own, where its peculiar tenets were taught. Yale College, more lately enlarged to a University, was the literary home and center of Congregationalism; as Brown University was that of the Baptists. Allegheny College, at Meadville, Pa., was the special home of the Methodists; the Meadville Theological Seminary is the educational center of the Unitarians; while Lombard University, at Galesburg, Ill., serves the same purpose to the Universalists.

With the founding of State Universities, and Normal Schools for the education of teachers, the denominational character of all the schools have changed, and their curriculum has been enlarged to embrace almost the entire circle of the arts and sciences.

The graduates going out from these reconstructed schools and entering the ministry, if morally honest, with more regard for truth than creed, have invariably taught an enlarged faith, and a very different idea of Divinity from that proclaimed from the pulpit of from fifty to seventy-five years ago.

To an educated person, attendance on a revival meeting—a very common affair sixty years ago—was an entertainment which rivaled the circus of to-day with forty clowns in the ring. Rev. Billy Sunday is a mediocre imitator. He falls very far short of the Burchards, the Finneys and the Knapps of that exciting period. He would scarcely be recognized as a revivalist, when mentioned with them; for devils and damned spirits, with sulphurous flames and eternal torture, constituted the burden of their discourses.

Catholicism, with its root in Roman Paganism, without an intermediate, has been slow in partaking of the advancing spirit of this progressive age. With other denominations reforms have begun with the people; but, strange as it may seem, there is evidence, very marked, that the present Pope, Pius X, has an eye to great reforms. He has changed the policy of the past, and has directed his Italian subjects to participate in future elections. "Go to the pools and vote," is his latest bull. He has become alarmed at the progress of the Socialists. This is his inspiring motive for the present, but it is said he has great reforms in view, and this is the entering wedge.

Let us wait, and watch advancing events. The spirit of progress is all about us. It penetrates every avenue of our social life. It has entered all the churches. It is inspired and and led on by the immortals; and the near future is full of hope and encouragement.

Truth is coming up the hills of Time,
Wait a little longer.

Praying and Clubbing.

According to the press reports, Henry S. Rozema, of Muskegon, Mich., was recently convicted of wife-beating and sentenced to seventy days in Detroit. Immediately after sentence had been passed he gave notice of an appeal to the circuit court. In the case brought by his wife she said that at every meal Rozema persisted in saying enough prayers for blessing to fill an ordinary book and that his religion was obnoxious to her. When she reproved him for praying so long he is said to have beaten her with a club.

It might be difficult for the poor, suffering wife to decide which was the least enjoyable infliction, the clubbing or the long weary prayers.

A Period of Progress and Reconstruction.

There have been "STORMS" raging in the ranks of Spiritualism, stimulated by The Progressive Thinker.

Questions have been discussed that have heretofore been entirely ignored.

New fields of thought have been opened and thoroughly cultivated, and a thrill of excitement has passed through our ranks that has agitated minds on all sides.

Many Spiritualists have raised their hands in protest against the discussion of sundry subjects, as it jarred on their nerves and disturbed their sensitive natures.

The Great Psychological Crime was considered on both sides in a masterly manner, and our Cause was greatly benefited thereby.

Then came the Open Court, in which sundry subjects were carefully considered in connection with deception in our ranks, and again our Cause received an impetus which gave it a higher plane of action.

Then there was a discussion of "Obsession," as connected with Dr. Peebles' great book. The excitement occasioned thereby attained a high pitch, and a new field of thought was opened for consideration. Great and lasting good was accomplished by that discussion, as all will admit.

Then followed the Court of Inquiry, bringing to the front the artificial toggery of some of the materializing mediums, consisting of wigs, illuminated crowns, scarfs, dresses, and other paraphernalia, agitating the great mass of Spiritualists as never before, and setting them to thinking along new lines.

In all these discussions great good has been accomplished, and every Spiritualist who has read them carefully and critically has had his brain vibrations accelerated and the grey matter thereof greatly increased, while those who would not tolerate such discussions and "went it blind," have been left in the rear of the advanced thinkers.

Now comes the PERIOD OF PROGRESS AND RECONSTRUCTION. Our readers have been thoroughly posted as to passing events, in the discussion of many disagreeable subjects, and so elaborate, so thorough and comprehensive has been the discussion thereon that nothing new can be added, and we must now commence building from the foundation established, and so conducting the ranks of Spiritualism, as to ATTRACT THE LIBERAL ELEMENT, instead of driving many of our best adherents into the liberal churches where they claim they find a higher moral tone in consequence of Spiritualists failing to keep strictly along the lines of genuine phenomena.

We should attract the liberal churches to us instead of their attracting the best element in our ranks, and we believe that, in the future in consequence of the position assumed by The Progressive Thinker, those affiliating with the liberal free thought element will come back to their first love, Spiritualism, and give our Cause a new impulse.

AS IN NATURE, STORMS ARISE, AND IN CONSEQUENCE PURIFY THE ATMOSPHERE, SO IN CIVIL OR RELIGIOUS WORK OF ANY KIND, "STORMS" OF DISCUSSION WILL ARISE OCCASIONALLY, AND THEIR TENDENCY IS ALWAYS GOOD. A PERPETUAL CALM AMONG SPIRITUALISTS WOULD BREED DISEASE, DISHONESTY, AND CRIME OF ALL GRADES, AS WELL AS DEATH TO THE CAUSE.

The Progressive Thinker has prospered as no other Spiritualist paper ever did. For sixteen mortal years it has BEEN CROWNED WITH SUCCESS, and it will continue to fill an important niche in the great work of advancing the world to a higher plane.

Our Fall and Winter Campaign will be of special interest, containing articles of great value, which will enrich the mind and enlarge the understanding. It is a recognized fact no one can keep well posted in passing events in the Spiritualistic and Occult field without reading The Progressive Thinker.

Not another Spiritualist paper would publish the article from the pen of D. Edson Smith, which appears on the second page of this issue of The Progressive Thinker, giving some important disclosures in regard to Elsie Reynolds.

Nor would any other Spiritualist paper dare to publish the honest views of Mr. H. D. Barrett, which appear on the third page, giving the Spiritualists something to think about. As president of the N. S. A., his views should be given to the world. To suppress the views of him and Mr. Smith would be a crime against justice, an outrage against the spirit of tolerance and fair play, an insult to every thinking Spiritualist, as they impart something with which each one should be familiar.

And after all this contention, Spirit Return, pure and undefiled, is coming before the people more prominently than ever before. It is gaining ground everywhere. In places where least expected, the spirit voice is heard, the spirit hand is seen, the spirit rap comes loud and distinct, and the spirit form of some one near and dear, presents itself, and an important message from the realm of souls is given, and that apparently without any medium being present.

Take the case of Miss Scriven of Plainfield, N. J. She says she is not a Spiritualist, and she does not pose as a professional. For two years, she avers, she has been talking with the spirits of dead relatives. It was while receiving messages over the wires that she first became aware of voices.

"These voices," she said, "were in a high, musical key. I could not understand the phenomenon. I attributed it to nervousness and gave up my position as an operator. The voices had become so uncanny and fearsome that I dared not continue at work. I did not realize then that it was the spirits talking to me.

"I am told by the spirits," she said, "that all is happiness in heaven. I understand that there are seven states through which they must pass to reach the highest plane. Some people who pass away are prepared for higher planes than others. They tell me that all spirits may see one another but that the difference in planes enables those in a higher state to hold closer communion with God. Spirits may perfect themselves for the highest plane. Perfect harmony exists among the spirits. The voices are always pleasant to listen to."

No one need fear for Spiritualism, which in its broad sense means Spirit Return. Hundreds of such cases like Miss Scriven are occurring in various parts of the country. Spirit Return is gaining ground in public, and it is rapidly progressing "on the sly," also.

Vindication of God.

The introductory to the "Thus saith the Lord," seems to commence with Exodus 4:15, 16, when the Lord, in an interview with Moses, said to him:

"And thou shalt speak unto him [Aaron] and put words in his mouth: and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye shall do. And he shall be thy spokesman unto the people: and he shall be, even he, to thee instead of a mouth, and THOU SHALT BE TO HIM INSTEAD OF GOD."

That word "instead" is equivalent to "in place of." So here we have a commission from the Lord himself, according to holy writ, making Moses a DEPUTY GOD.

Search the "divine record" from this forth, and we find this deputy God ascribing all his acts, it mattered not how damnable, to a "Thus saith the Lord."

Others are welcome to believe the Supreme Intelligence of all worlds delegated his authority to kill, desolate cities, lay waste countries through which his barbarian horde, late slaves, wandered, if they will, but The Progressive Thinker must beg the privilege of questioning if God would select a murderer to execute his will, and personate him on all occasion.

That Moses was a murderer we have divine authority for proof.

"He looked this way and that way, and when he saw there was no man, he slew the Egyptian and him him in the sand."—Exodus 1:12.

In the 14th verse: "Moses feared, and said: Surely this thing is known."

In the 15th verse, this afterwards Deputy God, like assassins generally, "Fled from the face of Pharaoh, and dwelt in the land of Midian." Remaining a fugitive from justice in Midian, a then province in Arabia, for forty years, verse 23, then "In process of time the king of Egypt died," when he returned to Egypt, where, if we credit this divine authority, he was deputized to act in place of God.

Good reader, keep the above facts in mind when reading the five books of Moses, which the Hebrew scholar, Montefiore, says, bears no date of any event occurring until five hundred years after Moses' death.

We write these facts to vindicate God, and demonstrate he was in no way responsible for the horrible crimes he is represented as being guilty of. It is a gross libel on the character of Omnipotence to make him an accomplice in crime. Many a time Christians have been implored in these columns to eliminate these falsehoods from their holy book. Again we beg of them in the name of our common humanity, to not dishonor our common Parent by making him the most bloodthirsty assassin of any age or country, commanding the slaughter of all who breathed, saving alive only the maidens for a purpose worse than death. See Numbers 31:17, 18.

Snuffing Danger.

Cardinal Gibbons, the head of the Catholic church in America, in an interview by the New York World, expressed satisfaction with the separation of church and state here; but of the recent action in France he admitted he felt very deeply. He said:

"I am sure the separation of church and state in France, whatever may be the result in the near future, will involve the church in miserable perplexity and unhappiness. The separation of church and state in such a country as France is so much less desirable, because there is no hope the French government will treat the Catholic church with the same consideration as has the American government."

It is hopeful the French government will not be so considerate of Catholic interests as the American government has been. From the very inception of our government politicians of all parties have catered to the interests of that church, hoping to gain their suffrages. Catholics holding the balance of power between the two great parties, they are enabled to make terms in advance so as to give victory to the one which promises most favors.

The separation of church and state in America is quite incomplete. We not only legislate in the interest of the church but virtually compel the people to pay the cost of the protection of their churches without any reward therefor.

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

To Be Held in Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

The thirteenth annual convention of the National Spiritualists' Association will be held in the First Unitarian Church, Eighth street and Mary Place, Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

Among those invited and expected to participate in the exercises are Rev. Dr. Austin, Will J. Erwood, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, Oscar Edgerly, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Mesdames. H. P. Ressegue, R. S. Lillie, Laura G. Fixen, Eva McCoy, Margaret Gaule Ridinger, and a galaxy of others.

Come one and all to the greatest Spiritual convention ever held.

Special railway rates on the certificate plan can be secured over all lines. Ask your railroad agent for certificate tickets to the National Spiritualists' convention at Minneapolis; the round fare will be one and one-third of a fare. Delegates and visitors desiring to receive the benefits of this special rate must have their tickets vised by our railroad agent at convention the last day, October 20, and pay 25 cents each for such vising.

Hotel Nicollet, a first-class hotel on the European plan, will be headquarters of the convention. Special rates for good rooms, one dollar per day each person. Write and secure your rooms from Shattuck & Wood, proprietors of the Nicollet Hotel, Minneapolis, Minn.

The annual reception to delegates and visitors will be held at the First Unitarian Church, Monday, October 16, at 8 p. m.

All are cordially invited. Admission free to all meetings.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
Secretary.
HARRISON D. BARRETT,
President.

The Searchlight Turned On!

The Milking Process Held Up to Public View.

QUESTION:—"What is the end and aim of mediumship as carried on at present?"

ANSWER:—"Its aim is Dollars, and its end is Death. Mediums who are really carrying the messages of the higher realms of spirit life to man the mortal can be counted on the fingers of a single hand."

Unmasked at Last.

At last the Light of Truth has thrown off all disguise. Under the pretense of being an advocate of Spiritualism it has sought a hearing among our people, while it spread socio-political views and promulgated a King-Solomon's-Mine-sort-of-bastard altruism, doing every one out of every dollar it possibly could under roseate inducements of future prodigious returns never yet realized. Its owner, editor and medium (formerly Mrs. Stowell) have been known to combine their power of persuasion in regular succession until the victim yielded to their appeals and made the investment. In but one instance have we heard of a single investor securing return of his money, and then only after persistent effort and close approach to threatening intimidation. Promised dividends are still prospective only.

Pitiful have been the stories of some of these SUFFERERS OF MISPLACED CONFIDENCE. Keen have been their criticisms of the altruism that thus exemplifies brotherly love; present penury has been the lot of some of them. SPIRITUALISM HAS BEEN DISGRACED BY SUCH METHODS.

The milking process was promoted by flaring advertisements in the paper named until fear of the postal authorities, Uncle Sam himself, caused its discontinuance, but the work went on in quieter ways.

It is perfectly proper that paper should cast in its lot with those who practice disreputable methods of mediumship. In common with them it feels the need of doing all it can to keep and increase the number of the credulous and gullible. Nothing done in the name of mediumship by legerdemain, trickery or fraud is so rank as to call forth its disapproval. Its saints may be imagined to be arranged in this manner: Mabel Blackmore Jackman, Aunt Betsy Reynolds, Jimmy Bundle Winans, and so on to the end of the chapter. It dreams of intimidating into silence all who will not bow down to its idols.

IT FAILS TO COMPREHEND THAT HIGHER FORCES OF THE SPIRIT REALMS ARE BEHIND THE COMING REFORMATION OF SPIRITUALISM. Forgetful of the fragrance in its past management, it indulges in threats. In no other way is its utter hypocrisy in these matters made more manifest than by contrasting its editorial utterance in Columbus, Ohio, with its present fulminations. Here is an extract from its columns then:

Question. "What is the end and aim of mediumship as carried on at present? G., Columbus, O."

Editor Hull's answer: "ITS AIM IS DOLLARS AND ITS END IS DEATH.

"As a system, mediumship is giving way before the oncoming light of personal soul-culture.

"Mediums who are really carrying the messages of the higher realms of spirit life to man mortal can be COUNTED ON THE FINGERS OF A SINGLE HAND.

"Commercialism and fraud have relegated the rest of them to their true place.

"There is a place, a growing place for the private medium. There is a sacred shrine at every family hearth if only they will uncover it. There is a mediumship which reveals the MESSAGE OF GOD to every human soul, and speaks its deathless divinity; but there is no place any longer save the shambles of profligacy and the lust of gain for that mediumship which stands between the almighty dollar and the almighty truth."

What a rank insult to the many scores of genuine mediums of various phases, to charge that there are not over four who work on the most spiritual planes possible to mortals!

What a friend to mediums, is this notorious Willard J. Hull.

But note its authoritative answer to another question:

"How about persons who have been made happy in a belief in spirit return by the acts of so-called mediums who knowingly deceive them? W. H. L., Chicago."

Editor Hull answers: "Such would be a case of good coming out of evil unperceived, but no justification for the wrong-doer.

"The wrong-doer cannot clean himself with the virtue that may come out of his act. The wrong is his just the same. Persons might ignorantly profit by the use of counterfeit money, but the counterfeiter's act is wrong and he suffers the penalty."

Now how are the mighty fallen! That editor and his organ want patronage. He is playing for support by those among whom "commercialism and fraud" are rampant; in his eagerness to secure it he fawns upon that mediumship which dwells "IN THE SHAMBLES OF PROFLIGACY AND THE LUST OF GAIN." He throws away manhood and discards conscience. In his truculency to those among whom he thirsts for popularity, nothing demanded by them is too despicable for him to undertake. He cannot name a Spiritualist who does not stand for honest materialization and the genuine of every phase. There are four things in this world which deserve no quarter: Hypocrisy, pharisaism, tyranny, and a bastard altruism.

How farcical his cry for mediums to organize for protection of fraudulent doings in the name of that calling—they are and have been that for years. Has he forgotten how eagerly Shepherdess Jackman dropped her $25,000 suit for damages? What standing would Winans or Mrs. Green have had in the courts under the available evidence except as convicted in accordance with charges made? Elsie Reynolds would have been in the same boat. By all means carry such occurrences into the courts, for justice will then be fully done. Do not whine if, oh, tricksters, you find yourselves hoisted by your own petard.

But the answer to the question, "What is the end and aim of mediumship as carried on at present?" surpasses anything we ever before saw given: "ITS AIM IS DOLLARS AND ITS END IS DEATH!" This declaration by Mr. Hull that the "aim of mediumship is dollars, and its end is death," and the number of "true mediums on earth to-day can be counted on the fingers of a single hand," is absurd to the very core. God and angels pity the man who is so lost to common decency, to common sense, as to declare: "Mediums who are really carrying the messages of the higher realms of spirit life to man, can be counted on the fingers of a single hand"—ONLY FOUR IN ALL. And who are the four?

Mediums, what think you of that assertion? What a slander, what a lie! The one who uttered it should be spit upon by every medium thus insulted. But a man who will libel our mediums by making such an assertion is not even worthy to sit by the side of an ordinary cesspool. The only place suitable for him is in the midst of those who stole the name of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, and commenced issuing bogus ordination papers.

Only Fifty Years Ago.

In looking over a file of papers printed in 1855, in its issue of April 28, we found this news papagraph:

"☞ The following resolution was recently adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Illinois—

"Resolved, That a fine of $500. be hereafter imposed on any lady who shall lecture in public, in any part of the state, without first putting on gentleman's apparel."

That is a fossil of only fifty years ago. It was a reflection of Paul's teaching into the legislation of the 19th century, doubtless introduced into the general assembly by some cleric of that period. Now the rostrum, the pulpit, and the bar, are alike open to "ladies," and they neither pay a fine nor disguise their sex to gain a hearing. A person who would introduce such a resolution in any legislative body in the United States at this time would be classed as an antediluvian, and would be justly hissed into silence.

BEAUTIFUL INDIAN LEGEND.

Why the Great Spirit Transformed Fallen Leaves Into Birds.

An Indian story that has been handed down and is still believed by many Indian tribes is one about the transformation of leaves into birds. Long years ago, when the world was young, the Great Spirit went about the earth making it beautiful. Wherever his feet touched the ground lovely trees and flowers sprang up. All summer the trees wore their short green dresses. The leaves were very happy and they sank their sweet songs to the breeze as it passed them. One day the wind told them the time would soon come when they would have to fall from the trees and die. This made the leaves feel very bad, but they tried to be bright and do the best they could so as not to make the mother trees unhappy. But at last the time came and they let go of the twigs and branches and fluttered to the ground. They lay perfectly quiet, not able to move except as the wind would lift them.

The Great Spirit saw them and thought they were so lovely that he did not want to see them die, but live and be beautiful forever, so he gave each bright leaf a pair of wings and power to fly. Then he called them "birds." From the red and brown leaves of the oak came the robins, and yellow birds from the yellow willow leaves, and from bright maple leaves he made the red birds; the brown leaves became wrens, sparrows and other brown birds. This is why the birds love the trees and always go to them to build their nests and look for food and shade.—Kansas City Journal.

CONSOLATION OF SPIRIT RETURN.

His Spirit Wife Comes to Him With a Loving Smile, and Materializes in His Room.

To the Editor:—I once more enclose a postoffice order to pay for my paper. For several years past I thought it would be my last time sending for the blessed Progressive Thinker. I have taken it from about its first issue. I was born in the year 1820 (September), and will soon have the privilege of being born again. My dear wife, with whom I lived fifty-six years left me to live with the angels in the new country beyond the great divide. I am glad to say that she still remembers me. I have heard her voice several times since, and there is scarcely a night but I see her shadow upon the walls of my room. SOME SIX WEEKS AGO SHE MATERIALIZED IN MY ROOM, AND SHE HAS THE SAME LOVING SMILE AS WHEN IN THE FORM, BUT LOOKED MUCH YOUNGER.

I am now living with one of my daughters among the great mountains of the great northwest, and if I should fail to send the amount of subscription at any time, you may know that I have gone home to my possession in the "promised land." WM. D. AKERS.

There's a Light in the Window

A Medium Throws a Few Rays of Light Upon the Canvas and a suggestive picture appears—A renovating method proposed which seems feasible—The Idea is a good one, and well worthy of serious consideration by all genuine mediums and true Spiritualists throughout all the land.

If Genuine Mediums Were as Firmly Banded Together as Are Their Counterfeiters, Spiritualism Would Take Such a Boom as Has Never Been Known Since Its First Appearance Among the People of the Earth.

Let the genuine mediums form protective and detective associations (secret if they choose), and The Progressive Thinker, if no other spiritualistic paper, will champion their cause.

THE ONLY WAY TO STOP COUNTERFEITING IS TO CATCH THE COUNTERFEITERS AND APPLY THE LAW MADE AND PROVIDED FOR THEIR CRIME. If this will not do it, then that law is rendered inoperative, and should be amended.

The counterfeit is becoming so prevalent in our ranks, or under our cloak, and in some instances protected and upheld by the spiritual press, that the word Spiritualism seems to carry with it a shudder—as something impure, unclean and uncanny—to many highly sensitive and very spiritual people. It is partly because, as the world of investigators thoroughly expose one who has for years been the "sugar plum" of the spiritual diet a goodly percent of Spiritualists, and a portion of the press, perfectly conscious of the absolute proofs of humbuggery, rush to the defense, or offer an excuse for their crime.

IT IS TIME THESE THINGS WERE CHANGED; and the journal that hangs to the fraud end of Spiritualism will in time follow it to a death that will be complete annihilation; of that be assured.

TRUTH WILL PREVAIL AND THE FALSE MUST FAIL.

Every medium knows there are counterfeiters of spiritual manifestations, and their work rightly classed, should come under the head of legerdemain, and not mediumship at all; and when a medium stoops to the same tricks he or she is unworthy the name medium.

LET ALL GENUINE MEDIUMS BAND TOGETHER TO WIPE THE HUMBUGGERY, in the name of Spiritualism FROM THE FACE OF THE EARTH, and the cause will receive an impetus that will astound the most sanguine. In banding together LET THE WATCHWORD BE TRUTH!

It is futile, it is but a waste of time, to attempt to purify mediumship before Spiritualism or the world, with a gang of impostors constantly stepping to the front.

The Progressive Thinker, within the observation of the writer, has never been known to "take over" an exposed counterfeiter, or apologize to the world for their existence. Fair play is all right, even with an enemy, but to offer an excuse for crime or criminals is to become an abettor to the crime. Other journals, if they choose, can open their columns indiscriminately to the "legerdemainiacs," who have been fully and thoroughly exposed, but The Progressive Thinker seems to value its space too highly, AND VALUES THE NAME OF MEDIUMSHIP TOO SACREDLY TO IN ANY WAY ESPOUSE OR AID THE CAUSE OF THE BANDED GANG OF FRAUDS. This is the natural conclusion after years of perusal of its valuable pages.

That paper is free from any "conspiracy to drive out" any special phase of manifestation, or the writer hereof is woefully misled in his judgment, and will champion only the cause of Truth and Genuine Mediumship, and appears to ask no favors along that line, holding that to be on the side of THE DIVINE PRINCIPLE OF IMMORTALITY, JUSTICE AND RIGHT, IS THE FIRST AND HIGHEST DUTY OF A SPIRITUALISTIC PAPER.

Would that we had more such! If we succeed it will be upon this basis. If we fail that principle must go with us, for it is ours to love, honor and espouse, while consciousness remains.

BY ALL MEANS, GENUINE MEDIUMS SHOULD BE BANDED TOGETHER, and The Progressive Thinker will be their organ. Of that be assured.

A Cause pretending to be that of Love and Progression must not abound in deception; must not abide in a house of fraud and chicanery; must not tolerate rascality and misrepresentation. It must stand proudly before the world PROCLAIMING BY ITS ACTS—"I AM THAT WHICH I REPRESENT MYSELF TO BE!" or it is no better and greater than any other religion or philosophy on the earth.

Spiritualism is a philosophy; a religion to those who need it as such; but above all other religions and philosophies stands the sacred fact of "The Intercommunion Between the Two Worlds," emblazoned in letters of gold upon its banners, and if we as Spiritualists, are sincere and honest, we most keenly feel the disgrace that is rapidly sweeping over the Cause by the many conclusive exposures of some of the persons so long held in high esteem for their genuineness as mediums, their integrity and general uprightness. It is a sad and solemn condition to the aching souls who love the truth they know lies within the confines of the declared and undeclared principles of organized and unorganized Spiritualism And just how a paper, purporting to be a Spiritualistic representative of such a cause, can take up the defense of the counterfeiters of their sacred oracle, is beyond comprehension and belief.

A MEDIUM.

Mr. J. J. Morse Makes a Statement.

To the Editor:—Will you be so good as to permit me to say to my friends throughout the United States that on Tuesday, August 8, I resigned my position as editor of the Banner of Light; my reason for doing so being that my salary was overdue to the extent of over $400 and in spite of requests for cash or settlement I was unable to obtain satisfaction of any sort.

All correspondence for me personally must hereafter be directed as at end of this card. I am compelled to make this statement in justice to myself, as I learn upon reliable authority, that the Banner manager has told people he does "not owe Mr. Morse any money, our accounts are quite square," which is deliberately incorrect.

Fraternally yours,
J. J. MORSE.

To Cook County Spiritualists.

You are cordially invited to attend a basket picnic given under the auspices of the Illinois Sunflower Club, on the grounds of the Minnetonka Cottage, Lake Bluff, Labor Day, Monday, September 4.

Miss Elizabeth Harlow, with the best speakers and mediums will be present.

Bring your family, your friends and your lunch and spend an ideal day. The beach is but five minutes' walk from the cottage.

Lake Bluff is 30 miles from Chicago and can be reached via the Evanston electric line connecting with the Waukegan electric—fare 60 cents for the round trip; time two and one-half hours—cars every 20 minutes, or via the C. & N. W. R. R. The majority will leave from the Wells street depot at 10:30 a. m., arriving in one hour.

Special round trip tickets can be obtained from Mrs. Isa Cross, president, or other officers of the Sunflower Club, from Miss Anna Weimar, Room 717 Marshall Field Annex, or at Miss Harlow's lecture in Handel Hall, on Saturday evening, September 2, from Chicago Spiritual Alliance.

Be sure and get your railroad tickets in season as the regular fare is $1.55.

Mortals and immortals will all be with us. Come and feast with us.

A Case of Applied Logic.

Medical Talk is a sprightly and very instructive monthly published at Columbus, Ohio. In a recent issue appeared an article inveighing against the wearing of whiskers, especially by physicians, for the reason, as claimed, that the whiskers are nesting places for naughty microbes that cause disease, and that thereby diseases are carried from patients to individuals.

We would not wonder if there were a degree of truth in the charge.

But so are the doctor's hair and his clothes infested by the pesky microbes, and, to apply the logic of the Medical Talk, the doctors should shave their heads and go their rounds visiting patients sans hair, sans socks, sans coat, shirt and breeches.

This would carry them back to a state of nature, with a vengeance, but it would be the logical outcome of the anti-whiskers argument.

"Voltaire's Romances." Translated from the French. With numerous illustrations. These lighter works of the brilliant Frenchman, an invincible enemy of the Catholic church, are worthy of wide reading. Wit, philosophy and romance are combined, with the skill of a master mind. Price $1.50.

"The New Life." By Leroy Berrier. Eminently suggestive along the lines of "new thought." Excellent in tone and tendencies. Price, cloth, $1.

Notes From Camp Chesterfield.

During the past week we have had two very able lectures by Miss Harlow; one subject last Friday was The Dignity of Unpopularity. Saying: "There are always two forces are work, positive and negative, and one must be a leader, catching the light of God and teaching and living it to those whose lives were in the darkness, might be an unpopular truth.

She cited Dr. Lyman Abbott, who admits that spirits do return and do communicate with mortals, but does not think it wise to teach it because of the unpopularity. She also admonished her audience that no monument was ever raised to the memory of a coward, and that in history it has been the men that stand for unpopular truths that monuments were unveiled for. And also there never was a truth spoken by man but that we find mingled therewith some error.

And now, after over five weeks on this camp, I have found some Spiritualists have not risen above the fear of unpopularity in truths concerning our cause. For instance it is very unpopular with some mediums and Spiritualists to teach them the way to clear our ranks of the pretenders and the charlatans, it is decidedly unpopular for one to tell the truth about this matter so very vital to our cause.

I have met some Spiritualists who, because some medium's guide condemned the exposure of a fake as hurting our beautiful truth, ready to condemn every one concerned in it. This deplorable attitude on the part of the lay Spiritualist is evidence that truth is unpopular; it hurts one's conceit or compels one to admit he has been "gulled," and finally it is the opinion of the other fellows, and not the truth that hurts. Conceit and not a desire to further the advent of light is what governs most of the many hundreds I have listened to.

I have sat in seances and afterward heard some persons who sat in those ghost shows tell the most astounding stories of what they saw, each one trying to outvie the other in relating the remarkable (?) things they witnessed. One who was there with eyes opened would be reminded of the fish stories that are told when some old disciple of Isaac Walton begins to tell of the large fish he caught or how he fought with a muskelonge for hours before he landed it.

Dr. Spinney's lecture on The Science of Spiritualism, was a masterpiece. He dwelt upon the existence of a sixth sense in the human mind, showing by many examples and by physiological examination that the human brain was equipped with the physical apparatus to take cognizance of all vibrations and understand them.

Our minstrel show was a decided success, your correspondent coming in for "gag" by one of the "niggers."

We are expecting a great time at the dance to be given to the ladies in return for the favor of last week when the ladies escorted and paid for the entertainment of the men.

All mediums do well here. Everyone tries to see all he can before he goes away. There are certainly more trumpet mediums in Indiana than in any other state in the Union.

IDEAS OF IDOLS.

As Beautifully and Impressively Expressed by Meredith B. Little, a Prominent Spiritualist of Glen's Falls, N. Y.

Now, let us pursue our investigation of our possibly mistaken ideas of idol worship a little further. As a Christian nation, we, at least, assume to believe in a God or supreme deity possessing the attributes of intelligence, love, kindness and sympathy, together with their negatives, anger, jealousy and hate. We of the Occident, when we desire to convey an idea of these attributes, follow the custom of our ancestors before us and express them in language.

The Brahmin of India also has his idea of one supreme deity—krishna, whom he recognizes as the God of love. He also has an idea of other attributes of this higher deity which has always been the custom of his people to present by symbols, or lower deities representing the creative forces in nature, another representing the destroying forces, also others, representing through symbols, attributes similar to those claimed by us for our deity. But governed by our prejudices we make no allowance for the fact that for more than two thousand years it has been the custom of the Orientals to express their ideas, not in language, but in symbols often in form representing the human. And this system conveys to the minds of an ignorant people, for whose benefit they are produced, a deeper and clearer meaning of the ideas, desired to be conveyed to the thought of the unintelligent but sincere masses of the people, accustomed for centuries to this mode of expression rather than through language.

Therefore, may it not be possible that these lesser Gods are only intended to convey to the mind of the Oriental devotee the attributes of Krishna—the same as we express our own ideas of the attributes of our deity in language? In both cases are we not attempting to accomplish the same ultimate end, although through different avenues which we have inherited through a long succession of ancestors, covering a long period of antiquity.

Let us for the time being lay aside the prejudices of our early training, and imagine ourselves inside of a great Catholic cathedral during service. We soon feel the tranquilizing effect of our surroundings; the soothing effect of the soft light of the beautiful, but subdued colors streaming in from the great colored windows, and how the cares of the every-day life appear to leave us, our troubles and our anxieties are forgotten as we become absorbed in the soothing effects of the beautiful music, for we now are

"Where through the long drawn aisle and fretted vault
The pealing anthem swells the note of praise."

Near us, and opposite a beautiful image of the Holy Virgin, the Mother of Jesus, is seated a poor laboring woman, the deep lines in her face and her bended form indicates that through her life she has been a daughter of toil, a servant to the hard and cruel master—necessity. Left in younger years a widow with a family of small children, she has for many years stood between the little ones and want. She has been faithful to her trust, and has reared those left in her charge up to a condition of intelligence and respectability. Closely observe the changing expressions of her countenance as she gazes into the sweet, pure and sympathetic face of the Holy Mother. True, the form upon which her eyes are so persistently fixed is only painted stucco. Possibly she is seeing what you do not see, sensing what you do not sense, for you observe that the sad and care-worn expression of her face is fading away and is being replaced by an animated expression of hope, confidence and cheerfulness. She is not adoring the plaster and the paint, but the ideal that lies behind it, the ideal that was in the mind of the artist who moulded the form now before her, the form expresses to her the ideal of a perfect mother, who has herself suffered and is now in sympathy with the poor devotee, and this thought arouses in her mind an aspiration to herself become more perfect like the beautiful one which the image conveys to her mind. To this poor ignorant woman it is a heavenly vision of great possibilities. Now, if you could, would you allow your prejudice against her religious faith to rob her of the encouraging and ennobling sentiment which it arouses in her nature? If you did you would be guilty of a crime against nature, for you would be crushing the God principle developing in the mind of one, who through her wearisome toil and suffering has demonstrated her faithfulness to her mortal trust and has now the right to claim, in the broader sense, as her sister, the ideal one whom she adores.

Do you realize that sculptured human forms when produced by a highly skilled artist with noble ideals often express the grandest principles and awaken a line of most elevating and ennobling thought, beyond the power of language. If an ordinary citizen can stand before the bronze statue of Lincoln giving liberty to and bursting the fetters of the slave, in one of the public parks in Washington, or the colossal statue of Henry Ward Beecher in Brooklyn, with two bronze figures at the base, one of them representing a little colored girl laying a bunch of wild flowers at the feet of the statue, the other a little newsboy placing a wreath beside the flowers of the girl, or upon the wonderfully animate bronze group in Boston Common representing Colonel Shaw mounted and leading his dark faced regiment of soldiers with curling hair and thick lips on to battle, and not sense an arousing of his patriotic nature, together with a love for justice, liberty and right, or an admiration for that expression of deep sympathy and tenderness molded in bronze with which the great Beecher was animated in his contact with little children, who were striving amid the environments of poverty to gain a living. I say, that if one can gaze upon these animated symbols and remain unaffected by any of the spontaneously uprising emotions we have enumerated, such a one is hardly above the condition of the brute, and is not and cannot be in tune with the Infinite no matter how strong his religious pretentions.

Among the Christian people of the world there are three distinct and clearly defined types of religious faith, all designated under the common title of Christianity. They may properly be termed as Spiritual Christianity, Commercial Christianity and Political Christianity. In the first, the spiritual, we recognize the only true Christianity. It is the quality taught and practiced in his brief mortal life by the Great Teacher of Galilee, and it is a religion of self-sacrifice, and when free from dogmatic bigotry, tends to develop and unfold the true or inner man and to elevate one above the little selfish ambitions of the physical life and to arouse him to acts of love, kindness, charity and good will to those about him, irrespective of their individual beliefs, even when antagonistic to his own. It develops in his mind the knowledge that he is only one of God's children and that all humanity are his

What Is the True Object and Aim of Human Life on This Planet?

A Discourse through Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, at Corry, Pa., Sunday, July 9, 1905.

The Soul is Immortal Now, or it never will be. It was immortal always, or it never can be. It is an axiom in science that "that which had a beginning must have an ending." So if soul is evolved from substance anywhere along the line of its expression here on earth, there will come a time when it will loosen its hold upon substance and will be disintegrated.

Of course you are aware that no one but the Infinite can know the final purpose of any manifestation of life; but the nature in man that is like unto the Infinite may know, because it is the human life that finds expression here, that is accompanied by environment and that endeavors to struggle through human existence for the purpose of whatever lies beyond.

People say that, "one finds oneself here without one's consent." People say that, "one is not responsible for the human conditions or human failings, and that they are a part of that which man must blindly fulfill." And, people say that, "therefore human life is a problem; that all is hidden and mysterious before birth and beyond death."

But if this is all, then the universe itself is a farce, and life is but a splendid comedy. If this view of life is true, the numerous worlds that you can see on any cloudless night are but a mockery of divine intelligence. If this is true, then there is nothing to the human intellect that is valuable, and all your aspirations, hopes, promises and fulfillments are as naught.

But if human life as a whole is a part of the stupendous purpose of the universe, and human intelligence as a personality or individuality is included in that plan, then the human existence has a definite purpose in the great aeons of eternity; and human life, instead of beginning at birth and ending at death, is but a part of the great successions of steps in eternity.

The best and highest philosophers, the greatest and most perfect seers and prophets of all time, even that latest development of human intelligence, called the Psychic Research Society, conclude that human life is not all expressed on this planet, that the purpose of life on any one planet, if it be of intelligence, is to fit that intelligence for the next step, and that these steps go on ad infinitum.

Now, of course, this earth is one of the smallest of the planets of your solar system, and it is perfect folly to suppose that it is the only inhabited planet. What are the other worlds for? And all those myriads and myriads of stars, any one of which could easily blot out this earth, for what purpose are they fashioned? There must be a living chain binding them all together, of which each planet is but one link in the chain, and the earth one of the smallest links. But whatever takes place in the solar system or in the universe beyond, at present the palpitating throbs and movement of each human existence are studied; science, the formulation of philosophy, the inception of inspiration and religion, all point to a something that was before and to a something that shall follow this earthly state.

Locke and all philosophers, the great scientist, Dr. Alfred Russell Wallace, have come to the conclusion through the study of science that relates to the earth itself, that if human life is to end this consciousness with what is called death, then nature is evidently baffled of her purpose.

Without considering inspiration or religion, or higher, spiritual subjects, men of science to-day declare, that the next step of life must inevitably be of consciousness beyond the change called death, or else all indications of nature are simply failures.

But man is not dependent upon so-called science for this knowledge of a future life. Science is but a formulation of facts that relate to the physical relations of life. Philosophy is a vast thesis that is the result of those accumulated facts and man's intuitions and revealed religions hold all united on two or three common bases: Infinite Intelligence, called God, Jehovah, Allah, Brahm, Ormuzd, or the Great Good, whatever you choose to call that Infinite Intelligence, and the world only expresses the idea of the Infinite Intelligence, manifested in the universe by law and order. Finite intelligence like unto that that perceives the law and order in the universe, and the unity of all life, and the fraternity of all souls, and the unity of mankind. This is the substance of every religion and philosophy. Then the wisest of human minds, the most perfect of inspired prophets, the greatest of teachers, the revelations from the realm unseen, the deductions from scientific research, all prove a basis of law, a basis of intelligence and aggregation of substance for a specific purpose, which shows that whenever the human soul is brought in contact with the earth, it must be for a purpose, either to the earth or to the soul that comes, or both.

Now there are two ways of considering life: The scientific man has been accustomed to suppose that the consciousness is evolved through substance by various processes of the differentiation of matter from the primal atom or from the molecular formation up to protoplasm and from protoplasm through the various stages of evolution up to man; that human consciousness is the result of evolution, of the unfolding of the original intelligence that pervades the atom, and that possibly there may be another state of evolution that will be beyond the change called death and in a higher form of life. That is the scientific proof of immortality: (reasoning by analogy) that nature does not stultify herself by suggesting possibilities that are not to be fulfilled.

Therefore Locke, Fiske and all modern scientists and philosophers of any great renown have arrived at the conclusion that the next great step of evolution must be a future life, to fulfill the promises of intelligence in this life. We regard this as a very roundabout way of arriving at it; but it is a part of the experience of human life to arrive at direct truths by roundabout methods in order to prove the direct method.

The direct method is found the aspiration for a future life; the consciousness from within of another and higher existence and the eternity of the soul; not as related to matter, but in and of itself; that the divine intelligence shapes the universe or is manifest in the universe and is superior to the universe itself, that whatever there is in man that desires immortality is superior to the body, which does not know anything about immortality and cannot suggest it. In other words, one is the spiritual or religious side, the other is the materialistic side. They both meet somewhere on the higher plane of life, but we accept them both, giving the preference to the religious side.

The soul is immortal now, or it never will be. It was immortal always or it never can be. It is an axiom in science that, "that which had a beginning must have an ending." So if soul is evolved from substance anywhere along the line of its expression here on earth there will come a time when it will loosen its hold upon substance and will be disintegrated.

Substance is transmutable; all forms excepting the primal atom (whatever that may be) are soluble and can be disintegrated. No one knows what the ultimate atom is. But consciousness abiding here for a time must be for a purpose, and if these intelligent existences are for any purpose at all they are here for states of expression.

The great idea is—which, of course, you are at liberty to accept or reject, but it is perfectly logical—that if the soul had a beginning here, if the consciousness or intelligence of the human being had its commencement here, it will have its ending in connection with the earth and go no further. If the soul is superior to the earth-life, as you feel it to be, then the contact with human life is for experience, for expression, until you have learned the lesson that the earth has to give.

There is a beautiful thought in the vast realm of our philosophy which this opens up: That every planet has a specific lesson to teach; and that because of the sorrows of Jesus, because the great reformers and teachers are put to death, and because human beings mourn over the changes of life that are called death, this planet may be designated as the planet to teach the lesson of sorrow, to teach the shadow side, as a background for the light, and that in the midst of all the worlds and systems when the soul arrives at the state of having a wish for expression here, or that being the next step there is contact with the earth to learn the lesson of sorrow. When the Great Teacher went down into the shadows of the earth, and when after the crucifixion, it is said, he went to preach to the spirits in prison, it was thought and is thought that he possessed the knowledge of all these great human conditions so he could minister to those in sorrow. If human life is for the purpose of teaching the shadow side of existence, and sin and suffering and pain and all kinds of sorrow here, and for that purpose people enter into human expression, and for the sake of conquering the shadows, then there is great meaning to this life, to learn the lesson of conquest over the shadow.

Voluntarily, oftentimes, people go down into the caves and caverns of the earth to learn the mysteries that are there. They undergo great privations and perhaps pass through great perils for the purpose of solving the mysteries of the stalactites and stalagmites in the caves; they penetrate into the regions surrounding the north pole, taking their human lives into their own hands for the sake of discovering what is beyond the frozen sea, and what kind of life may be there in the "open polar sea"; they fail to come back, and others go freighted with the great desire for knowledge. May it not be that that mythological character, "Lucifer, the son of the morning," who penetrated and sank beneath the shadows of earth illustrates the desire of the soul. That even the kingdom of heaven would not retain the soul that did not understand all of this knowledge, any more than the sweet affections of the fireside, the home and mother can retain the young life that must go out and win its way through the world; so the soul from the heaven of souls, that state of absolute love and truth passes into the relative conditions of earth with its imperfections incident to matter for the purpose of conquest over it.

It is on the same principle that the boy sheltered in the mother's home and love, in the wisdom of the father, nevertheless, feels the great urgency of life, he must go out and conquer for himself. The father says: "Why, my son, I have had all this experience, can you not take my word for it, that there is nothing valuable out there, that it is all shadow and disappointment, and that there are only a few things that are real, and those that are you find in our home?"

And the boy shakes his head and says: "Father, I want to know for myself."

The young girl must leave the protecting care of the mother and the kind ministration of the father, and go out into the great experience of wife-hood, of motherhood, although the mother says: "My child, I would rather keep you with me." Perhaps the great Infinite Mother love and the great Infinite Father wisdom understand better than human parents do this soul that needs to know all things for itself.

So when the baby smiles into its mother's eyes with the look of paradise, she almost thinks she hears the rustle of the angel's wings that has brought her child thither. Then she feels that she knows that that sweet baby has landed from the gardens of heaven. Though full of love and affection, she still knows that it is wrapped up in the earthly form and that that form has its imperfections, that the life here will be full of temptation, struggles and trials, even at the best she knows all this, yet the love of the father and the mother has invited that life.

Is it not beautiful to think that instead of passion or the growth of material existence, that human love is an invitation for souls to take up their abiding place here for a while.

And when the babe shall unfold there is, not only the love of the mother and the father, there are not only the physical characteristics, conditions and heredity, there will not only be the environment, but that which the baby brings; its own individuality, which is entitled to consideration and respect, which is entitled to have its own place in the world.

Whenever the human soul shall be considered as an entity, and that you have not its ultimate keeping in your hands, the babe will be received with more reverence and awe than at the present time. You will consider that you have an immortal guest in your household, and when through years of trials and temptations that babe lands in the penitentiary, or in any shadowy place, you have still to consider that you have an immortal guest here, and that may-be you have not provided the very best conditions for its expression, that you will have to alter human laws and states of human selfishness that will make those better conditions possible.

The knowledge that the soul is an eternal entity and is only here for a while is not new. What does the hymn say, the old hymn that you have heard since your childhood, that your mother used to sing: "I'm a pilgrim, and I'm a stranger, I can tarry but a night." In this night of human life for the work that you have to do. And you often long for that morning of that morrow which will take away the struggle. You cannot hasten it, you cannot set it aside, you cannot ignore the purpose that you, individually, are here for.

It is great encouragement to know that every life is as valuable as any other life. That however humble and lowly, inadequate and seemingly futile the struggles of daily existence, they are each a part of the divine plan for the next step. And every one, like the child in school, is seeking to find and make ready for that next step. Now in the primary grades there is more need to have amusement; you have to teach children without their knowing it. In the next grade they are more awakened and ambitious, and desire to excel, understanding more the value of the thing they are learning. In the next and the next the pupils are centered upon the object that is to be won. In the highest grade you often have to restrain them lest they injure their bodies or over-tax their brains, so eager are they for the results.

So it is in human life; in the infantile stages people have to be amused, have to be doctored, get into various quarrels, and do not understand the need of learning, then the kindergarten has to interest them. After the higher step is taken, when the next great experience comes and they learn that "life is real, life is earnest, and the grave is not its goal," that it is ever "dust to dust," that each human life must pass from mortal sight, and while people come and go, are here but a little while, and seem to be unmindful that life has any lesson. Still when the great awakening tide of love comes, when marriage comes, when the husband and wife find there are great other interests, the serious propositions of life begin, they each perceive a new world opening before their eyes, there is a different meaning to everything, they work together instead of separately, a little center is established, they form another home which is the beginning of great endeavor and purpose. When the child arrives, when added responsibility comes and with it the beautiful and chastening power of parentage, and the restraining influence that is usually exerted when another life is to be considered, and the baptism of the mother love and the father love are received, you find you cannot, even in internal companionship with the angels, afford to part with this experience, of knowing each other here, of rearing a child of human life of coming in contact with mutual suffering, that it may be alleviated, of learning the lesson of human struggle, of human war, and finally of perfect conquest and peace.

With the great struggle that is going on in the Orient, the spectacle of nations hurled against nations, you will learn that despotism has its nemesis, that mere physical power will not prevail. So that nation that was supposed to be heathen springs up, fully equipped in the arts of the twentieth century, to teach tyranny a lesson. You are learning all this day by day and hour by hour. The earth is being rushed forward to present other lessons for her children, and all the human states that require these different object-lessons are represented on the great stage of human life, and all its heroes of thousands of battles represent the epitome of the earth. Yet you are nearer to Plato than you ever were before; you are nearer to Buddha Gautama than you ever were before; you are nearer to Olivet than you ever were before, though there seems to be great seas of blood to cross.

These souls sojourning here for a while, marking their pathways through time and sense must learn this lesson before the airships will lift their sails; before the spaces reveal their secrets; before the voices of the stars will be understood. Already across the interstellar spaces the vibrations that bring intelligence are reaching the earth. Oh! at this hour the Martians are wondering why the people of earth do not arise from their slumbering and see the signals that are intended for them, "do not discover what we are doing here."

Oh! this great light of eternity that shines in and through the darkened chambers of earth and illuminates the human pathway, makes known why one is here. One is here for victory, for conquest over the elements, over the earth, over the air, to send ships to sea, to build houses and railways, to engage in all enterprise. But in the end, one is here to gain self-control by the conquest of selfishness. When that triumph is won the same ministering pinions, the same fluttering of angel's wings is heard that is heard when the soul comes in contact with the earth.

When the "angels of God shouted for joy" because of creation, it was that souls would have the opportunity of trying their strength of learning their lesson, then, upon the great height of victory, to understand what Jesus meant when he said, "I have overcome the world."

RELIGIOUS REVIVALS.

Their Spiritual Import Expressively Analyzed.

In a late Progressive Thinker I noticed an account of a Free Methodist meeting, and the spiritual manifestations of control reminded me of similar conditions which existed in Free Methodist societies in New York state when I was quite young.

A little girl may listen and think, and older people may give object lessons without knowing how deep or wonderful is the lesson given. So I studied spiritual manifestations in Free Methodist revivals for several years, beginning when I was ten.

It was about that time when I first heard the spirit voices speaking to me, and because of the teaching of the Free Methodists I was not frightened, but thought it God's voice directing me. Later I was made to understand that The Father, the Spirit of all Life spoke to me through the consciousness of my spirit father, who, through laws of spirit life, stood guard over his child. I did not know then of spirits, of mediumship, therefore waited years to understand the full revelation.

Many days and nights were spent by the little community in "seeking God." Revival meetings were held three times daily, and people prayed earnestly for salvation, for a baptism of the Holy Ghost. A sort of insanity called religious feeling existed. People wept and prayed, talked, laughed, cried, screamed, walked the floor in a dazed condition and talked to invisible beings.

With my mediumistic nature, and soul sight, I studied, watched to learn what it all amounted to. I felt the presence of invisible intelligent beings. I thought them, as they said, God and the Devil, and their workers. For I was conscious of a host of spirits being there, influencing the various mortals. Different ones would become so under control that they would dance and shout, and often fall to the floor unconscious, and lay for hours in a trance.

This was considered the greatest spiritual power. "Getting the power," they called it, and more than one when they returned to consciousness told of seeing loved ones who had passed to the other side, crossed the river; so they believed they, too, had passed out of the physical body and been with those in heaven. Some told of the beauties of heaven, also of the horrors of hell, which they were also permitted to see while in this trance state.

With a soul consciousness I did not then understand, a half developed clairvoyance, I knew these people had not been out of their bodies, but by some process of extending sight, underneath this outward physical body which refused to see, or was held from seeing what was surrounding them, they saw a spiritual world. I felt what I know now to be a truth, that persons surrounded each religious enthusiast. Both characters represented in a personal God, and a personal Devil, were expressed in these various personal beings. Ignorant of a beautiful relation which can exist between those on both mortal and spiritual plane, they were held for the time in a kind of obsession.

But these revivals are a soul growth to many on the immortal plane. They come in touch with these lives and mentally get the experience of those in the mortal plane. The mental impulse to do better, to lead purer lives, to be more like Christ, and so many are helped out of a morbid despair which holds millions who are passed over, and are groping in darkness, because they have never learned the higher life, and believe that as the tree falleth, it must lie, therefore they are outside of any condition of spiritual growth.

Hundreds of darkened spirits hover around these church revivals, and are blessed by doing so. If the mortal is injured, made insane by the obsessing influence of one hungry to gain salvation, and ignorant of the law of relation, the two become one, for the spirit is often as ignorant as the mortal and knows no more of the true condition of their life than the mortal, the relation confuses both, and it takes the magnetic powers of other higher souls to separate and balance the two minds.

There are spirits who aid these undeveloped souls, and they keep sending back to us this message, spoken through many platform mediums:

"Help the mortal lives to be better; make such conditions of progression on your plane, in your midst, that no imperfect life, physically or mentally, or morally will express itself in growth, then there will be no more obsession. We will take care of the spirit world, if you take care of the mortal world."

I have learned through my teachers that the salvation of both worlds has to be through the bettering of those having a mortal experience, and seeking to live higher and leading those, not only still in mortal life, to a more righteous living, but those who have laid the fleshly robe aside and walk in our atmosphere to help and be helped.

MRS. MAY A. PRICE.

Washington, D. C.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

Owing to August 13 being Cleveland Day at Maple Dell Camp, the delegation from that city was much smaller than usual.

Mrs. Hoiles, acting as chairman, introduced Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, of Toledo, Ohio, as speaker. She prefaced her lecture by reading "The Creed To Be." by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and "The Master," by Horatio Bonar. Asking for subjects from the audience, she received these: Personal Influence, evolution, and Truthfulness. Her address was full of pointed truths and earnest suggestions for the betterment of each personal life, showing the necessity of truthful and elevating thoughts as well as actions, as thoughts go out on the psychic waves, affecting others who are able to catch them, no matter where they may be.

Before the afternoon lecture Mrs Schauss read the poem "The Point of View." The topics given were "The Unseen Forces," "I Am," and "The Duality of Mind and Matter." Mrs. Schauss is a forcible and logical speaker, giving what she sees as the truth regardless of public opinion. After the lecture she gave a number of readings from articles placed on the stand, while her back was turned to the audience. Most of the readings were fully recognized.

On last Thursday the ladies Aid Society served a chicken dinner, netting something over thirty dollars towards improving the camp grounds.

IDEAS OF IDOLS.

brethren. When a man has reached this exalted condition, while yet in physical embodiment, and can look any mortal person square in the face, he may rest assured that there are no Gods in this world or any other whom he need fear to face. This is the true spiritual Christianity which appeals to all true, earnest men and women and against which we have nothing to say. It is, however, not the Christianity of the majority but is unfortunately found only in a limited minority everywhere.

Eye Glasses Not Necessary.

Eye Sight can be Strengthened, and all forms of Diseased Eyes Cured without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in the great majority of cases, has been proven beyond a doubt, by the testimony of thousands of people who have been cured by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." Actina also cures sore and granulated lids, Glaucoma, Iritis, etc., also removes Cataracts and Pterygiums without cutting or drugging. Over seventy thousand of the Actinas having been sold, therefore it is not an experiment but an absolute fact. The following letters are but samples of those that are received daily:

Mrs. M. E. Champney, 242 West 135th St. New York City, writes: The "Actina" cured me of Iritis after the doctors said there was no cure outside an operation. I have been entirely well for over four months, can see to read and sew as well as before. I can honestly recommend "Actina" for all afflictions of the eye.

Emily Kapp, 1939 Galena Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, writes: The "Actina" I purchased from you a year ago saved my brother's eyesight. My brother was near-sighted, wore number five and six glasses, and now he can go to school and do all his work and study without glasses.

E. R. Holdbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "Actina" has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office.

Actina is not a drug or lotion, but a small pocket battery, which can be used by old and young with perfect safety, as it is impossible to do any harm with Actina. Every member of a family can use the one Actina for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, or Throat or Head. Actina will last for years, and is always ready for use. Actina is sent on trial postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342N., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely FREE a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General, and you can rest assured that your eyes can be cured, no matter how many doctors have failed.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

To Camp Correspondents:—Notices of camp-meetings should reach this office not later than Friday afternoon to secure insertion in the next issue of The Progressive Thinker.

P. A. Seguin writes from 1500 Fifth Street South, Minneapolis, Minn.: "I see in your last issue that Oct. 17, 18, 19 and 20, the Spiritualists are to have a convention at Minneapolis. As our Home is a large one, and besides the usual amount of girls we have, we can give beds and board at our Home for $1.25 per day. It would give the Spiritualists a chance to help us in our good work. Street cars only two blocks from the Home. We can accommodate twelve or fourteen of them. We have large parlor and a large reception room; we are in good quarters, not far from Eighth street cars, and connecting with the Nicollet House."

Henrietta L. Lichtig, secretary, writes: "The Sunflower Club, the ladies' auxiliary to the Ill. State Spiritualist Association, has accepted the invitation of Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, vice-president of the I. S. S. A., to again hold a basket picnic on the grounds of the Minnetonka Club, at Lake Bluff, Ill., on Labor Day, September 4. Come everybody and bring your baskets well filled. Coffee will be sold on the grounds. Fare, 75 cents round trip. Trains leave the Wells street depot of the Chicago & Northwestern road at 8:25 and 10:30 a. m. The 10:30 train stops at Ravenswood. Parties that cannot leave at those hours will find trains going almost every hour afterwards. Tickets can be purchased at The Progressive Thinker office of Mrs. J. R. Francis; at 560 East 55th street of Mrs. Isa Cross; Otto street, of Mrs. Belle Curtis; 6822 Wentworth avenue, of Mrs. Henrietta L. Lichtig. There will also be parties wearing Sunflower badges at the 8:25 and 10:30 trains to sell tickets to those wishing them. Don't forget, September 4. Come and bring your friends and have the best time of your life."

Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner writes from Delphos, Kansas: "Just a few lines in regard to the Delphos Camp. It is a beautiful grove of over ten acres, and owned by the Spiritualists and paid for. The Union Pacific railroad line goes by the grove, and the next two Sundays stop in front of the entrance to let passengers off. Friday and Saturday it was raining, but the attendance was good. Sunday was really the opening. Rev. Mr. Bledsoe and wife were present. In the afternoon Mrs. B. delivered a fine lecture. In the evening Mr. Bledsoe, and the thoughts uttered pleased everyone. I followed with tests at both meetings. Of the camp, there can not too much be said of it and the management. All is like clockwork. The dining hall is kept by Mrs. Hale. The meals are good, and table well set. All are in praise of her line of work. Next Sunday a large crowd is expected."

The Indianapolis Sentinel says: "Two hundred women ran things yesterday, August 9, and men meekly obeyed in the camp of the Indiana Spiritualists' Association. It was woman's day, and they asserted their rights by running up banners of bright yellow and then pinned yellow badges and sunflowers on their dresses and on the coats of the men. 'We mean by all this yellow,' said Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, pastor of the Spiritualist congregation at San Francisco, 'that we are for women's rights in all affairs and that this yellow is the suffrage color. The sunflower is the national flower of women's suffrage movement and we love it. Memorial exercises were held in honor of Mrs Colby Luther, the patron saint of the Indiana Association, who deeded to it all her camp property shortly before her death in Muncie several years ago. Last night the women continued to lead by giving a 'woman's paradise' party, including a dance. Yellow neckties, yellow fans and yellow caps were given to all the men who were escorted by women."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

James R. Little writes from Oakland, Cal., sending us the article that appears on the first and fourth pages of The Progressive Thinker, "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp Outdone by an Astral Body," and taken from the San Francisco Examiner: "We enclose clippings. Please read them carefully and see if they are not worthy of reproduction in the columns of The Progressive Thinker, so that our many brethren who are subscribers to your grand Progressive Thinker, may see the great injury done to the cause of Spiritualism through "Procrastination," and the psychological influence of one bigoted, egotistical human being. We feel that if pressure enough could be brought to bear in this one instance to force this man Jordan to either resign or be kicked out of the position he so evidently disgraces, that the spiritual and scientific world would be great gainers thereby.

We know now that beyond this life, is another fair and bright,
Where the bright sun shines eternally, and that the gloom of night
Rests only on the spirit, who, while on earth did dwell.
In corresponding darkness, trying not to break the spell.
Time counts for naught in the life beyond, eternity is the goal,
And the sunshine of progression, drives the darkness from the soul,
To progress means work eternal, and merit leads the van,
For plain and clear as the noonday sun, are the acts of every man.

W. Askins writes: "The frauds deserve all you say and do to them. They should get a five years' rest in the states prison."

Fred. C. Sohrer writes: "Mr. C. Kirchner, president of the Rising Sun Mission, with his wife and Mrs. Etta White Foote, President of the Ladies Auxiliary, are sojourning at Maple Rest, Benton Harbor, for their vacation and health. Our president and his amiable wife and Sister Foote have worked very hard for the interest of the Mission and needed a rest. We expect them to return in full health and ready for the fall campaign. Brother Kirchner and Sister Foote have negotiated for the purchase of an elegant site of ground for a camp meeting for the Mission next year. A better place for health and recreation could not have been secured."

A pleasant surprise party was given by the members and friends of the Spiritualist church of this city at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kendall Shephard in honor of Wayne W. Wheeler, who has been a stimulus to the church ever since its inception by his faithful service as organist and as a small token of their appreciation and as a proof of the esteem in which he is held by them, he was presented with a neat little sum of money. An informal musical and literary program was carried out after which the guests indulged in sociability and dancing. Light refreshments were served and the surprise was pronounced a success by all in attendance.—LaCrosse (Wis.) Leader-Press.

Wayne W. Wheeler writes from La Crosse, Wis.: "Mrs. Catherine McFarlin has just closed a four month's engagement for the Spiritualist Church at La Crosse, Wis. During her stay here she has won many friends who are very enthusiastic in her praise. Mrs. McFarlin is a lady of charming personality, and has few equals in presenting both the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism. The closing Sunday six members were united with the church. The service was very beautiful and impressive. Mrs. McFarlin's address is Plainview, Minn."

Mrs Kirchner writes: "The evening services of the Rising Sun Mission, held August 13, were well attended. Dr. J. H. Randall gave one of his characteristic lectures, which was appreciated by all present. Following the lecture, Sister Kingsbury and Sister Riesicker sang a beautiful solo, after which Sister Kingsbury, whose guide has reached his majority, 21 years in spirit life, gave a very beautiful poem, also a short talk. It was well taken by all present. Spirit messages were given by Sister Thompson, Brother Thompson and Sister Weaver, all of which were recognied. We cordially invite friends and strangers to attend our services, held at the home of the president, 22 Jackson place, Between Jackson boul. and Van Buren street, west of Hoyne ave., on Sunday evenings. Our speaker for Sunday, August 27, will be Dr. Rowell, ex-Methodist minister A very fine time was had and enjoyed by a large crowd, at the social and lawn party given by Sister Trafton, for the benefit of the Mission Temple fund, at her home, on Saturday evening, August 12. Colored musicians were engaged for the occasion, who rendered fine vocal and instrumental music. A vocal solo by Mrs. E. Brooks, also by Mrs. Reesicker, were loudly applauded. Games were indulged in, and spirit messages were abundant. Ice cream and cake were served to satisfy the inner man. As the hour of midnight drew nigh we all departed for our homes satisfied that members of the Rising Sun Mission always enjoy the hospitality of its members. Our next social and lawn party will be held Saturday, August 26, at Sister Fravel's, 2649 W. Huron st., Austin. All welcome."

D. G. Hill writes: "The regular Sunday evening services of the Golden Rule Spiritual Society on August 13, was an evening of enjoyment to the participants. The speaker, Mrs. Nellie Kusserow, was at her best, and in her talk spoke the plain facts along the line of her subject, and received the close attention of her audience. She was followed in short talk by the very capable speaker, Ex-Judge W. L. Snell, who always has a warm welcome from the Golden Rule Society people. We regret to learn that he contemplates a removal from this city in the later part of September, but trust the people in his new home may as thoroughly appreciate him as his acquaintances of Chicago do. The message bearers brought the same approval as the speakers, and all together the meeting was a very enjoyable occasion. These meetings are held each Sunday evening at O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina street, between Washington and Park avenue. Open door. All welcome."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Dr. G. B. Warne lectured at the Grand Ledge Camp, Mich., August 19 and 20.

The Clinton Daily Herald speaks as follows of J. W. Ring, a young man who is rapidly rising in prominence in the ranks of Spiritualism, and who will yet make a deep impression on the world for good: "The initial discourse by the talented young speaker, John W. Ring, was given before a good audience yesterday afternoon and was a foretaste of the good things to be expected from him during his stay on the camp grounds. Mr. Ring comes all the way from Texas to fill an engagement with the M. V. S. A. In his own state he is prominently identified with the Spiritualistic movement. He will lecture again this morning and Sunday at 2 p. m."

E. W. Sprague and wife the N. S. A. missionaries will serve the Spiritualist Society of Watertown, N. Y., during the month of September next. Parties wishing their services for mid-week meetings, anywhere within reach of Watertown, may address them at 618 Newland avenue, Jamestown, N. Y., until September 1; after that date address Watertown, N. Y., care General Delivery.

New York, Aug. 16.—The Rev. Emil A. Meury, pastor of the Second Reformed Church, of Jersey City, has been chosen to serve at the hanging of Edward F. Tapeley, a negro, Friday. He will serve, although he is opposed to capital punishment. As an argument against capital punishment Mr. Meury intends to cite his experience with Paul Genz, who was hanged for killing Clara Arnim. Mr. Meury arranged with Genz to make a signal with his hand a minute after he was pronounced dead. "Genz said to me: 'I will prove to you that I am conscious one minute after my neck is broken,'" the minister continued. "'After one minute has elapsed I will twitch my hand twice, then once, and again twice. None of the skeptics may say these movements are involuntary twitchings.' When the trap was sprung and Genz swung in the air his body stiffened. Three-quarters of a minute passed and then I saw Genz's pinioned hands made the signal as arranged. First they twitched twice, then once, and again twice. Six men whom I had previously told of the promised signal were as much horrified as I."—Chicago American.

At the regular meeting of the Sunflower Club, held at the home of Mrs. E. J. Bloom, 892 Turner avenue, the resignation of Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom, corresponding secretary, was accepted, Mrs. Bloom resigning on account of health. Mrs. Henrietta L. Lichtig was elected to fill the office. Mrs. Lichtig resigning the office of South Side trustee, Mrs. Quinn was elected to fill that office. The Club expects to have made arrangements for permanent quarters in the downtown district before their next meeting, notice of which will be given in due time.

L. A. Labadie writes from Petoskey, Mich., that Mr. Finney, the trumpet medium, has been there, and given excellent satisfaction. The trumpet and guitar were going at once and a dozen independent voices were heard talking, the manifestations going on while the medium's hands were held.

Rev. R. Heber Newton says: "I know a woman of fine culture and high character who will not trade her gift for commercial purposes, but who has that most remarkable power known as psychometry—the power of holding a sealed letter in her hand and giving a diagnosis of the physical condition of the writer and a picture of his character; of taking a bit of stone from an ancient villa of Cicero, for example, the nature of which is entirely unknown to her, and calling up a vision of the villa as it existed in Cicero's time and of its owner. She is incapable of fraud, and her case is but one of others which I know."

O. M. AMBLER WRITES FROM STRATFORD, N. Y.: "I WOULD AS SOON THINK OF GOING WITHOUT MY HAT AND COAT AS WITHOUT THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. I CONSIDER IT MORE REPREHENSIBLE, IF POSSIBLE, TO STARVE THE MIND THAN THE BODY. THE PAPER SEEMS TO FILL A LONG-FELT WANT, EDUCATING THE PEOPLE AWAY FROM THE BIGOTRY AND FALSE TEACHINGS OF OLD THEOLOGY, AND PLACING THEM ON THE ROAD OF PROGRESSION ABOVE THE MISTS, FOGS, SUPERSTITIONS AND HELLS OF THE CHRISTIAN HIERARCHY. I AM TRYING TO LEARN ALL I CAN OF THE LAWS GOVERNING THE SPIRIT IN AND OUT OF THE BODY, AND YOU AND THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER HAVE HELPED ME WONDERFULLY ALONG THE ROAD. I ALSO AM HELPED BY UNSEEN FRIENDS."

Eva L. Stewart writes: "July 30, the Hyde Park Occult Society was entertained by a talk by Hon. Chas. Hughes, which was enjoyed by all present. Mrs. Kline being present, instead of giving messages, made some very fine and appropriate remarks in regard to her and others' mediumship which was well liked. August 6, the Apache Indian, Dr. Carlos Montezuma, gave a fine lecture upon the life and habits of his race, giving some very interesting things we were ignorant of in the life of the Indian. He is a highly educated man, and has a good delivery and pleased the audience so much that we all want him again. Next time his subject will be 'The Trance of the Indians.' The same night we were entertained by a song, 'The Rosary,' by Miss Marguerite Sherman of St. Louis, who is visitting Mrs. O. B. Wilson. August 13, we had Mrs. McArthur to speak for us, and we enjoyed the fine, uplifting talk she gave us. She lectures under control, and all who have heard her enjoyed her talk very much. Miss Marguerite Sherman favored us with a piano recital which was well rendered. Mrs. Powderly and Mrs. Lichtig gave messages which were all recognized. Aug. 20, Mediums' night, is always enjoyed by those present, as we devote the whole evening to messages. On the 30th of this month we give a social dance. Everybody knows what a good time they have at our dances and we will try and make it pleasant for all who may come. Admission to hall 15 cents. Ice cream and cake 10 cents. No check-room charges. Norton's orchestra will render the music. Come and have a good time."

On Thursday evening, August 31, Mrs. M. A. Burland will hold her regular monthly social at her parlors at 3019 Vernon avenue. All are invited to attend and are sure of a good time. Good psychics always present to give readings and messages from loved ones. Mrs. Maggie Henry, the palmist, is always present to read the lines in your hands. Refreshments served.

Maggie Henry writes: "At the Universal Occult Society on Sunday evening, August 13, our speaker F. M. Stoller, lectured on the origin and signification of names as well as the spiritual meaning and clairvoyant visions he received with the names. We had a good audience and the meeting was very interesting as well as instructive. We have meetings every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock. All are welcome and are sure to receive a word of comfort or a spirit message from some loved one who has gone to the life beyond."

J. Madison Allen, prominent as a lecturer and medium, writes: "I expect to take the general lecture field for the fall and winter and would be glad to make immediate engagements with societies and committees located anywhere. Will engage with camps for the season of 1906. Nearly a half-century of successful service as an inspirational and conscious trance speaker, psychometrist and message medium should insure me to a ready hearing at all points. Have recently been tied up with local duties, but am now ready for a good long outing. Address me at Springfield, Mo."

Dr. J. C. Phillips, the excellent psychometrist and healer, has been an attendant at the Clinton camp for many years, and has sent in a large number of subscribers to The Progressive Thinker from that favorite place of resort.

Mr. Hassman writes: "To Spiritualists, investigators and truthseekers. I make the annual announcement that on Sunday evening, September 3, the North Star Spiritual Union will open its spiritual meetings at the hall 1546, Milwaukee avenue, at 8 o'clock sharp. The president, William Hassmann, will welcome all with a hearty handshake, for he is known as a good worker in the Spiritual field. The opening address and lecture will be delivered every Sunday by Rev. Dr. P. M. Esser, a highly endorsed speaker and healer of the spiritual philosophy. Spiritual treatments will be given at every meeting free, also flowers blessed and given away for the sick. Tests and spirit communications will be demonstrated by Mrs. Johanna Rennau, a medium of known ability. The society is incorporated under the laws of Illinois, recorded in Cook county, and wishes all to come and be members. The Progressive Thinker, the only Spiritual organ in this country, can be had at every meeting, and subscribed for. We indorse this paper as a helping hand in our blessed work."

New Era Camp, Oregon.

To the Editor:—I thought I would make mention of a few incidents either forgotten or overlooked by other of the friends who have written concerning the camp at New Era. I wish to say first that as a result of the efforts of the executive committee and mediums and speakers, twenty dollars were raised for the Mediums' Fund.

I feel impelled to affirm that I have never before enjoyed the singing and music as I did at New Era camp—the old-fashioned tunes played by Mrs. Love and Mrs. Campbell to new words composed by President Love.

The lectures delivered by Harrison D. Barrett, Rev. G. C. Love, Dr. R. Coon, Dr. Espanto and his wife and the writer of this article I think will sow seed, and it is our prayer, bring forth much fruit. I desire to mention the fact of there being with us on the first Monday of camp Mrs. Bosley of Seattle, Wash., also Mrs. Lapworth of same place.

President Love is certainly the right man in the right place, as he is always on time which is one of the main requisites of the life of a chairman of a society or camp-meeting. He said that it had been several years since they paid out as much money for talent as they did this season, and then added that the camp would close this year with more money in the treasury than when the meetings began.

The messages given by Mrs. Ladd-Finnican and Mrs. Eva McCoy were of a high order and were well received. The camp association decided to issue a qualificate ordination to Dr. R. Coon and I was chosen to perform the ceremony. Brother Barrett delivered the charge, and it was conceded by everyone who heard it that it was the most eloquent and logical charge that they had ever heard given to a candidate for ordination. I do wish we had it in printed form.

I also conducted a floral christening service. The little girl's name was Gleam Sarah Dunton, and her home is in Liberal, Oregon.

I had but three days in which to attend the Lewis and Clark Exposition. As a commemorative affair it is a pronounced success.

After camp closed I delivered three lectures at Beaverton and four at McMinnville. These places are also in the state of Oregon. While in the latter place I was entertained in the home of Mrs. L. J. Fuller who was very ably assisted by Mrs. Wallace. I am now in Anaconda, Montana. Will go from here to Butte, and then if I have time will pay Yellowstone National Park a visit. I will also lecture in Billings, and it is quite probable that the Montana State Spiritualist Association will send me to Red Lodge where it is expected that a society can be organized. I will go from Montana to the N. S. A. convention and from there to Chicago for the last two Sundays of October. I have the fall and winter months open for engagements. I can say with pardonable pride that this my first trip to the Pacific coast is fraught with success from every standpoint. I have almost regained my former health which had nearly forsaken me as a result of overwork. I stand ever for a Spiritualism which argues "stick to the text," for in so doing we have nothing to lose and everything to gain.

HARRY J. MOORE.

Haslett Pack Camp.

Thinking our many readers of The Progressive Thinker would like to know of our camp that opened August 5. Dr. G. B. Warne of Chicago, was our speaker the first Saturday and Sunday. His words were good and inspiring. The attendance was fine for a beginning.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie, with well known reputation, came the following Sunday and was greeted with a good audience; she is with us this week. Mrs. Carpenter is our next speaker.

We are doing as well as can be expected considering the many camps. The association owns the grounds and we are looking forward hoping more interest will be manifested.

We have a trolley car every hour, running from Lansing to the grounds.

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, August 27, 1905, S. E. 58: "Conscience."

Gem of Thought:—

My conscience is my better self,
Touched by the power divine;
I'll try to keep it always pure,
That holiest light may shine.

Sunapee Lake Camp, N. H.

August 8, the weather is very hot here. I don't think we ever saw it any hotter. We are having a good meeting, the hotel and the cottages are full, never had larger meetings through the week than since the camp opened. At 10:30 a. m., conference; at 2:30 p. m., lecture and tests by Mr. Wellman C. Whitney. He gave one of his best lectures. It was well spoken of by every one who heard him.

August 9, at 2:30 p. m., lecture by Mr. W. C. Whitney. Had a very good audience for such hot weather. He handled his subject well, and his tests were all recognized. This was his last day in this camp this year. We wish him success as he goes from Sunapee Lake camp.

August 10, at 2:30 p. m., a lecture by Edgar W. Emerson. He spoke to quite a good audience for such a hot day.

August 11, at 2:30 p. m., lecture by Mr. Emerson.

August 12, Pamonia Grange Field Day. It looked like rain in the morning, but it turned out to be a good day. About seven hundred people out. At 7:45 p. m., seance in the hall, by Mr. Emerson. Had a good seance, the best we have had this season.

August 13, at 10:45 a. m., a lecture by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding. She read a poem entitled The Sunset Gateway. Her lecture was good. At 1:15 p. m., seance in the hall, by Mr. Emerson. At 2:15 p. m., lecture by Mr. Emerson, which was one of his best. This closed his labors at Sunapee Lake Camp for this season. Success to him.

Unity Camp, Saugus Centre, Mass.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates have concluded a very successful engagement at Unity Camp, Saugus Centre, Mass. Large audiences have been present at each meeting and efficient service for the cause was done by these capable workers. The services at this camp are more largely attended than at any previous season, showing that the cause of Spiritualism is not declining in this part of the country.

President Alex Caird, M. D., has arranged a series of concerts in connection with the regular services, which draw in many to listen to the singing and readings that would not otherwise attend, but who remain to the lecture service, and have their attention so drawn to the subject presented, that they become regular attendants.

Miss Florence May Thurston, Mr. James Singer and many other noted soloists, Miss Mona Belle Welch, Prof A. E. Meader and other well-known dramatic readers have contributed to the success of these concerts. Mrs. Alice Worcester Weeks, one of the most popular soprano soloists in New England, will be present September 3; Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond will be with us August 27; Mrs. Dr. Caird and Mrs. Hattie Lewis, Sept. 3; Mrs. Kate M. Ham, September 10; Mrs. S. C. Cunningham, September 17; Mrs. Mamie Helyett and Mrs. Maude Litch, September 24.

Strong efforts are being made to raise sufficient funds to erect a new auditorium for use next season. Certificates of five dollars each have been issued, payable at the rate of three hundred dollars per year, and we hope all friends of the cause who feel that they can do so, will take one or more of these certificates. We do not ask you to give us, merely to loan the money on good security. Full particulars will be sent upon application to

LOVE'S OFFERING.

I send this semblance with sincere affection,
To claim a place within thy memory;
And as a mirror, read from this reflection—
The kindly thoughts my fond heart holds for thee.

I would not come to mar thy joyous hours,
Nor claim one thought not freely given to me;
I would bring joy, and strew thy path with flowers,
Had I the power to shape thy destiny.

But should there come a time, thy soul aweary,
And stars above, for thee, refuse to shine;
Some rain upon thy heart brings memories dreary,
And vanished some fond hope that once was thine.

Ah, then, I pray thee, in those silent hours,
May this mute mentor bring sweet dreams to thee
Of fair elysiums where bloom of fadeless flowers,
Then in thy dreamings! kindly think of me.

YET A LITTLE WHILE.

By to-morrow this day will be part of the past,
By to-morrow the ache you are thinking must last
As long as winds blow and while rivulets run,
As long as the world may be warmed by the sun—
By to-morrow the ache that is deep in your heart
May be gladly forgot, or recalled as the smart
Of a wound that was trifling, and, looking ahead,
You may gaze on fair prospects all fairly aglow
With the loveliest flowers that ever may blow,
Though to-day the gray future seems barren and dead.

The past, lying there with its joys and its woes,
With its wine bottle drained and its poor, withered rose,
With its pledges all broken, its hopes that were vain,
Its moments of gladness, its aeons of pain—
The past has no terrors, it cannot return,
'Tis only gray ashes that never may burn,
And you with your chains that are riveted fast,
Where the staples of circumstance bulge from the wall,
Be glad—oh, be glad—for, though heaven should fall,
By to-morrow this day will be part of the past.

ANGELIC WORK.

Poor Children to Have an Outing.

It is proposed to entertain fifty poor children from Chicago in Clinton for one week, this summer, and a committee of citizens has the work of raising sufficient funds to board the children for that length of time. Rev. D. C. Henshaw, representing the Chicago Bureau of Charities, was in Clinton a day or two ago, and the preliminary arrangements for the proposed Clinton outing of the "fresh air" children have been made.

The outing was made comparatively easy of arrangement, through the kindness of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualists Association. The summer camp-meeting of the Spiritualists comes to a close on August 27, and the association has tendered to the Chicago institution free use of their handsome park, Mount Pleasant, to the children after that date. It is proposed to bring the children to Clinton the week beginning Monday, August 28, if the committee is successful in raising the sum of money required to feed half a hundred hungry young mouths for seven or eight days—not a large sum to be sure, but one which must be taken into consideration nevertheless.

The Spiritualist Association gives the free use of the grounds, cottages, cooking utensils and accommodations of every sort, and the offer is a most generous one. All that remains will be to provide suitable food for the children. A competent person will be sent to Clinton in charge of the children, and a few mothers will also be included in the party. The children selected to be be brought to Clinton will be among the most destitute and needy in Chicago. Clinton people who have visited what is called the slums of the great city have an idea of the conditions which prevail in some districts, notwithstanding the great work of charity which is carried on by municipal and private institutions and by the hundreds of philanthropists who are numbered among the population of the lake side city. These conditions prevail in every great city, and must continue to prevail to some extent, despite the great work carried on to relieve them. The "fresh air" movement which has been in vogue of recent years, is a God-send to some of the poor of Chicago.—Clinton Daily Herald.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Dr. Benjamin Franklin Clark of Belvidere, New Jersey, passed to the higher life, July 13. His transition was peaceful, and his last words breathed of hope and joy in the thought of soon being free from his weak body. He was 80 years old, and for two years his sight and hearing had failed so he could not do the work for Spiritualism which his soul yearned to accomplish. His funeral occurred on the 15th, and was conducted in harmony with his expressed view in regard to such rites, with no service at the house or grave, but a brief prayer. He loved truth and suffered for it. He was fully convinced that "There is no death; what seems so is transition." B. B.

Passed to spirit life, Aug. 2 from the home of her step-son, Albert Symington of LaCrosse, Wis., Mrs. Merriam Prescott, at the age of 73.

Mrs. Prescott was formerly from Los Angeles, Cal., and had been a staunch Spiritualist for over twenty years, and it was her last request to have her funeral conducted from her step-son's house, by the writer.

Right after her death, her own son, a resident of LaCrosse, demanded her body, which he took to the morgue until the day of the funeral, which he had held at his home by the Episcopal clergy.

The Spiritualists of LaCrosse church, however, held memorial services on Sunday, August 6, in loving remembrance and in carrying out her last wishes as near as they were able under the circumstances. The writer conducted the memorial services.

CATHARINE McFARLIN.

Passed to spirit life, Aug 8, 1905, Mr. Samuel D. Clarke, aged 85 years. He was a Spiritualist for over fifty years. He was a native of Vermont. He was a well-known, respected citizen, with many friends. He was a builder and contractor, and held many prominent civil positions. He leaves three daughters and one son. He lived a true life.

J. H. WHITE.

Port Huron, Mich.

Passed to spirit life from her late home in Williamsburg, Ind., July 26, Emma, wife of Harvey Davis. A husband, one son and two daughters remain to mourn the loss of a most devoted and loving wife and mother. Funeral was very largely attended as she was well known and loved for her sterling qualities and beautiful character. Services were conducted at the Quaker Church by the writer.

ANNA GILLESPIE.

At Bennett's Corners, Ohio, Mr. Frank W. Wyman passed to spirit life, August 3, 1905, aged 48 years. He was 5, 1881, and made his future home with her parents, where he lived at the time here parents, where he lived at the time of his transition. He leaves a devoted wife, son and daughter, one brother, one sister and a host of friends to mourn his departure from this material life.

It was the largest funeral held at Bennett's Corners, and judging from the many floral tributes and good words spoken, the writer must say he was an exemplary man, a devoted husband, loving father, kind brother and true neighbor. The writer officiated, and the choir was of great assistance, consisting of Mr. H. Bedford, Mr. M. Fennimore and Miss Clara and Rena Bedford, who rendered beautiful and appropriate music at the house, and also at the grave.

MRS. CARRIE FIRTH CURRAN.

George H. Nunemacher, who was born in Mercer, Pa., Feb. 24, 1822, passed to spirit life, August 8, 1905. He was married May 22, 1845, to Henrietta Berlin, and three daughters survive him: Mrs. E. M. Gray of Clarion; Mrs. Sarah E. Luce of Black Ash, and Mrs. Levi L. Wykoff of Cambridge Springs. Services in his memory were conducted at his late home, Thursday, Rev. O. C. Sherman officiating.

Andrew O. Froistad was drowned in Priest Lake, Idaho, Aug. 6, at 19 years of age. He was a staunch Spiritualist and a noble young man, worthy of the sincere friendship of all who knew him. He left a father, mother, three sisters and five brothers to rejoice that he was free and would give them a "home welcome" on the other side. The funeral was conducted by the writer.

HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA CAN BE CURED.

THE KOLA PLANT.

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific. Mr. W. H. Kelly, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma, by Himalya after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 24th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Closser, 156 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanborville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never had an opportunity to recommend Himalya as it cured me of Hay-fever and Asthma and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

S. P. LeRoy: Q. Was Mrs. Livermore a Spiritualist?

A. She was deeply interested in the phenomena, and did not refuse to appear on the spiritual rostrum although she did not identify herself with the cause.

J. F. Snow: Q. In the articles in The Progressive Thinker spiritual beings are represented to have everything just as we do here. If so, why not tobacco, whisky, etc? Why, then, when they crave the use of these, do they have to obsess mediums?

A. It is impossible to describe the spirit world except by the words which relate to the things of this life. There are no words for the spiritual. Hence all descriptions must be comparative, and as such misleading. Those who anticipate surroundings which are duplicates of the present will surely be mistaken.

No trance visionist, or spirit, has ever been able to more than excite the imagination by their descriptions. These desires are of the physical body and retained for a time by the spirit, as a reflex or stain. They can be gratified only by returning to the environments of earth life.

Chas. C. Abel: Q. A creek flows around a bend four miles, returning to a half mile of the starting point. The creek falls in that distance 32 feet. The enclosed hill is 100 feet higher than the upper point. If a syphon pipe were laid over this hill, and a turbine wheel receive the water 12 feet above the lower level, or 20 feet below the upper, what would be the pressure?

A. The pressure would theoretically be the same as it would be were a waterway excavated directly through the hill with 20 feet fall. The pressure of 80 feet of water in the ascending pipe would be balanced by 80 feet in the descending, leaving the pressure of 20 feet at the point where the wheel is located, or 32 feet in all. Practically this result would not be reached, as the friction on the inside of the tube would form an important factor in the calculation. The larger the conducting pipe the less this ratio. In all such problems, the fundamental law should be recognized, that power, or force, cannot be created. There is always more or less loss. In all cases where a fluid is transferred by a syphon, the force of discharge is determined by the difference of level between the point of entrance and exit.

Elias Shophell: Q. Did Thomas Paine or Thomas Jefferson write the Declaration of Independence?

A. The committee appointed by the Colonial Congress to draft a Declaration of Independence was composed of Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman and Robert R. Livingston. It was drawn up by Jefferson, chairman of the committee, which is proved by the handwriting. Only some slight changes were made at the suggestion of the other members. It is usual to regard such era-making documents as springing abruptly into being, and their authors receive praise for their apparently wonderful prescience. Jefferson nor any other man can be justly said to have been the author of the Declaration. The great principles it advocated had been discussed by Paine and filled the air. The Mecklenberg Convention which met in North Carolina the preceding May, had adopted resolutions embodying the same great principles. How much influence Paine may have exerted over Jefferson cannot be known. His writings were widely circulated, and Jefferson as well as all members of his committee read them with interest. Consequently the ideas of Paine were embodied in the Declaration. According to Motley, the declaration of the Dutch Republic was the source of many of the strongest generalizations. So close is the likeness, it must have been consulted by the writer or writers of the Declaration of Independence of this country.

John Crembeline: In May last, Henry Fulton, a neighbor, had his arm shattered and amputation near the shoulder became necessary. This was done at 10 o'clock in the morning, and in the afternoon the doctor visited the patient, who complained of his fingers and also his elbow being cramped, which annoyed and pained him. Without saying a word to anyone the doctor went to the cemetery where the arm was buried, took it up and found the fingers cramped as Mr. Fulton had stated. He commenced to place them in a straight position. After completing this he carefully re-covered the arm and went back to Mr. Fulton. The latter greeted him with: "I am now easy since my fingers were straightened." It seems he knew the moment the doctor performed the operation, for he said at the identical moment: "Now the doctor is straightening my little finger, now he has the next," etc. How did this man know that his fingers were cramped? What is the connection between the body and a portion thus detached?

A. Volumes of similar facts might be gathered and the only explanation which fully covers the ground is, that the severed limb holds its connection with the body through the spirit form. In other words the spirit substance has not fully withdrawn from the severed member, and remains conscious of everything which may happen to it.

There is a somewhat similar sensation experienced which is the result of irritation of the ends of the severed nerves, which the mind refers to the extremities of the nerves there once attached. Thus irritation there is referred to the toes or foot. This theory has been made to cover the entire field, but really explains only a part of the facts, failing in those like the one here introduced. The patient might have known that the doctor was straightening his fingers by clairvoyance or telepathy, but telepathy does not account for the cramped position producing pain.

Emily Mosher: Q. My mother passed from earth in 1860. She was a Spiritualist, and revered by her children, who were left desolate by her loss. She was only 50 years old, and her mind unimpaired. My father died in 1888. Now he comes to us often and communicates, while our mother has rarely done so. Why is this?

If what is must be, why should we strive to change and reform?

A. The first question is repeatedly asked, and has been answered in this department.

Briefly there are difficulties in the way of some spirits communicating, which they cannot, or choose not to attempt. Only at favorable moments do they come. Other spirits find it easy to communicate, and take great pleasure in doing so. If friends expect communication they must furnish conditions. You would not complain that there were no telephone communications sent to your house if you had neglected to install an instrument.

We may understand some of the essentials, and reasons why we do not have messages from spirit friends, but there are many causes we cannot appreciate.

If there is a spirit we desire to hold converse with, an earnest, concentrated and continuous prayer, or desire, will go far away to them and draw them to us.

That everything is predetermined by law makes it almost axiomatic that "whatever is must be," and further, our resistance to it, our efforts to change for the better also must be. That effort is a part of the plan. We are factors in the scheme to direct and control.

This theory does not relieve man of the least responsibility, or free him from making his utmost efforts.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations, of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. A very remarkable book. Large, octavo, 500 pages. Price, $1.75.

"Mediumship and Its Development, and How to Mesmerize to Assist Development." By W. H. Bach. Especially useful to learners who seek to know and utilize the laws of mediumship and development, and avoid errors. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

What Shall Be Done?

Stirring Words From Indiana.

The Proper Method of Dealing With Deception.

Since the subject of fraudulent manifestations in mediumship has been under discussion through the columns of The Progressive Thinker, I have been a close and careful reader of all that has been said by the various correspondents from all parts of the country. I want to thank J. Madison Allen and Will C. Hodge for what they have written and commend their articles to the readers of The Progressive Thinker. They will each bear a second careful reading.

Judging from the geographical distribution of your contributors, scattered as they are from Maine to Texas and from Boston to San Francisco, I am led to conclude that about the same condition of affairs exists everywhere, viz., that fraud and trickery, duplicity and unadulterated scoundrelism have about usurped the prerogative of mediumship and are reaping a harvest of fat things, while true and honest mediumship and pure spirituality have been driven from the public field of labor and forced to engage in private work alone, or seek other avenues of labor to obtain a livelihood or a bare living competence.

Many good and true things have been said by the various correspondents, and many useful suggestions have been made, but I have watched and waited and wondered: Who is it that is going to be brave enough to suggest an efficient remedy for this crying evil? But my watching and waiting has been in vain; not one has been offered. All have deplored the condition, but all seem to wait for some one else to say what shall be done to free our fair philosophy from this incubus of hideousness. The case is up to the Spiritualists to act, and in the words of another I would ask, "What are they going to do about it?" Too long already have we stood idly by with folded arms and seen this foul canker constantly growing and increasing in strength until today it dictates the actions of many of our camps and almost controls the destiny of societies, state and national organizations. Again I ask, what are we going to do about it?

Suppose that in the treatment of the counterfeiters of our national currency Uncle Sam should adopt the methods that many of our Spiritualist brethren have employed in the past in this matter of fraudulent manifestations; suppose that when his secret detectives should run to cover and capture a maker or passer of spurious coins, Uncle Sam should take him quietly to one side and say to him, "Now, I will just give you until to-morrow morning to gather your traps together and get out of town." Or, perhaps better still, he would say to him, "Go thy way and sin no more." What would you think of Uncle Sam?

Why, every one of you would be howling for a lunacy commission to try his case at once, and would be satisfied with nothing short of a non compos mentis decision, and how long would it be until every scoundrel in the country would be in the counterfeiting business, until every one who had a dollar in his pocket would not be sure whether he had a genuine dollar or a spurious one. This method and it alone is responsible for the present condition of affairs.

What benefit to the cause or detriment to counterfeit mediumship has resulted from the recent exposures of Mr. Winans or Mrs. Bliss-Green. Mr. Boving and his friends take Mr. Winans in the very act of fraud, capture all his paraphernalia, etc., and advertise the facts in minutiae through The Progressive Thinker, sustaining all their allegations by affidavits, then quietly turn him loose on the public. In a few days he turns up at Kokomo, Ind., is again heralded as a genuine medium worthy of our trust and confidence, and this, too, by no less a personage than Mr. Wood, who is one of the prominent officials of our State Spiritual Association, and who also requests that all Spiritualists write letters of sympathy, condolence and encouragement to good Brother Winans.

Also although Mrs. Bliss-Green was but a short time ago thoroughly exposed by a number of Spiritualists tried and true, yet we are told she is at this very time one of the popular mediums upon the Chesterfield camp grounds, enjoying an abundant and lucrative patronage.

Those Spiritualists who think we should adopt the method of the Nazarene and say to these frauds, "Go thy way and sin no more," forget that his gentle admonition was withheld until there were none to accuse. So it is not a parallel case with these where the accusers are standing and making affidavits to their affirmations of guilt. In these cases we should rather adopt that other saying of Jesus: "Howbeit there shall offenses come, but woe unto them through whom the offenses cometh."

Many honest and true Spiritualists seem to think we should let these scoundrels go free even when caught in the very act of deceiving, lest we might be considered an enemy to mediums; but I tell you if we let them go on we are doing true mediumship an irreparable injury by permitting them to sap the life blood by robbing of patronage through their flaming advertisements and wonderful promises and predictions to their patrons and which never come true.

Besides this, my dear deluded Spiritualist friend, of this class of mountebanks traveling over the country as physical mediums there is not one in ten of them that has the least scintilla of mediumship, and those who have traces of mediumship should be made to remember the fable of old Tray who received a terrible beating for being caught in bad company. No, they are not even Spiritualists. More than one of them has said to the writer: "Are you d— fool enough to believe such a thing as a spirit ever came back? There is no such a thing as a spirit—but the world is full of fools and cranks, there is an easy living in it, and by G—d I am going to have it."

No, Mr. Editor, Uncle Sam adopts a method just the opposite of this one the Spiritualists have been following. He has his argus-eyed minions of the law in every nook and corner, and if any one attempts to impose a counterfeit upon the public he is followed to the ends of the earth, is prosecuted, and I might say persecuted, until he is thoroughly convinced that anything and everything is better and easier than to engage in counterfeiting. It is only this persistent nemesis-like prosecution that enables Uncle Sam to keep the number down to the minimum.

Mr. Editor, I firmly believe that Uncle Sam's method is the only method that will ever free the cause of Spiritualism from this incubus that has covered it all over with degradation and shame; the only method that will ever drive these pretentious scoundrels from our ranks and induce those misguided ones that are mediumistic, to confine their manifestations to the limit of their mediumistic powers. The only method that will ever enable us to point with pride to our honest mediums and be able to truthfully say, These are heavenly gateways through which angels come to make their presence known to me. These are the message bearers of our departed loved ones. May the angels of love and purity, the spirits of just men perfected, and good and true men and women on earth unite in one solid phalanx and work in unison and harmony until this much-to-be desired condition shall have been fully consummated.

I know that thousands of honest, though as I believe misguided Spiritualists, will censure me for standing where I do upon the subject, but I firmly believe time and observation will prove to them that I am in the right.

By prosecuting these pretenders under the law for obtaining money under false pretenses many of them could be sent to do service in our states' prisons and surely there will be no angels weeping over the persecution of the innocents but rather the goddess of justice will be made to rejoice that innocence and purity shall be upheld and protected and that none guilty shall escape. SPIRIT MESSAGES.

Through the Mediumship of Mrs. Nellie Davis, Kewanee, Ill.

Ruth Jones.

My Dear Friends,—I am sure it will do me good to mingle with the kindly intelligences of your little circle room, and I wish there were other places where the anxious spirits could go and reach their friends. I don't think they will be surprised to hear from me, for I know they are waiting for a letter from Mother.

I can't say as some do, I was ready and willing to go, for I felt I had much to live for. I left my husband and two sons, and I know they still needed my care, but the angels said come, and I went, and I want them to know I am contented and happy, and I would not return and take up the old life again if I could. I am well satisfied with my spirit home. How pleased I am at the opportunity it has opened to me, to go on with the plans and the activities that of necessity must move my being as a conscious, living woman. I feel I have many attractions on the spiritual as well as the mortal side, and that I belong, perhaps, to two worlds. I do not feel that I have lost anything of great mount by passing to the other life, and so I have longed to come back, hoping to give my greetings to all loved ones, assuring them of my care and watchfulness, and telling them that all is well with me. I was not disappointed. I found all the dear ones waiting for me. I first went with mother to her home. But my first desire was to return and tell all not to grieve for me, but they said I must wait until I got strong enough, for I told them I would come back and I wanted to keep my promise.

Well, I don't want to hold control too long, but I hope this will be received in the same spirit in which it is sent, and I would be so glad if they would give me an opportunity in private, for I have much to say to them. I passed away about 10 years ago.

Kingsville, O.

Lydia M. Comp.

I have two sisters living in Boston, and I have been very anxious to reach them, not only because I wish them to know that I love them and hope to be of some service in a spiritual way to their lives, but because there is another dear one with me in the spirit world that belongs to one of them and is anxious to send a message of comfort to her mamma. I want to tell her that Lydia and Thomas and her Lena are very happy together. We all have had our suffering here, and have had our experience too. After passing from earth, now we are all in sunshine and provided with a lovely home. I will not say we are in need of rest, because there is no idleness with us. Although we are not tired, we do rest while performing our duty from day to day, but it is all so light and pleasant and no sense of exhaustion comes to our souls. I know that Mary, when she receives my message, will feel a thrill of spiritual influence that will assure her of its truth, and also that we are near.

Jennie, my sister's daughter, is a beautiful psychic, and will soon be able to give communications to others who are in need of comfort and instructions from the spirit world, and if the two families will only sit together in harmony and sincerity once or twice a week, for a little while, they will receive tokens of spirit presence that will not fail to convince each one that there is an intelligence and power with them not of the physical life.

There have been some shadows in the lives of my dear ones during the last two years, for material conditions have been somewhat hard to bear; things have not been what they desired, but the shadows are passing away, and the clear light of prosperity will soon come. I know you will be surprised to hear from me, so far from home, and I have been out of the body almost 45 years, but they said I might come and I have been unable to reach my friends before. I thank you all so much

Minnie White.

I have been in the spirit world a number of years. I was a little girl when I passed away, scarcely sixteen, and as I look back to that time with its faded memory, I realize how unexperienced I was, what little I knew about life, and yet it seemed so broad and beautiful to me then, and when I had to go from the mortal life I knew nothing of the spiritual home, nor of the dear souls that are there, always ready to give any help they can to make life pleasant to those who have to leave the earthly things.

I was sick a long time before I passed away, but I did not think of death. I thought I must get well. I had my plans all made, and spoke to mamma and papa what I should do when I was cured, and the very plans I made while I was sick have been fulfilled in my spiritual home. I always said I wanted to be a teacher. I said I would have little children in my school that I could train. I would have music and other studies that would be helpful to them in my spirit home. I have little ones that I am training, and we have music and flowers, and beautiful things to cultivate their love of them, and all that is useful and sweet. Some of my folks have joined me in spirit. I had a baby sister come to spirit life 15 years ago, and I have kept her with me ever since. My brother Ralph passed away 12 years ago, and met his death by being run over by the cars, and poor mamma has never become reconciled to it yet. She says so many times, if she hadn't made him go to a neighbor's house with some mail, he would have been alive still. Now, I speak of those things so they will know that it is from Minnie. As they are not believers, and I want to say to Martha—she is my sister—that I was with her when she showed my little fancy pieces to Jessie the other day. Now I know this will not be interesting to most people, but I wanted to tell them something so they could recognize it.

I thank the guides so much for helping me. It has made me so happy.

I must go now. I hope this will reach the eyes of some of my friends.

Verification of Spirit Message.

Mrs Nellie Davis,—Kewanee, Ill.:—As I saw your notice in The Progresive Thinker, to inform you if any one recognized messages of their spirit friends. I have an aunt in spirit life by the name of Mary French, and she passed out in Cambridge, Vt., only the date of death is not just right. I can not give the exact date, but I know it is less than ten years ago, for I attended the funeral. I do not take The Progressive Thinker, but think I will before long. This message seems like my aunt, but I could tell better if I could hear other names of her family. Respectfully yours,

MRS. L. S. JACKSON.

Underhill, Vt.

Dear Madam:—A friend of mine called my attention to a letter in the Chicago spiritual paper from B. F. Gard. Now, I am not a believer, but will say this: I know this party very well, and it sounds just like him. If you can convince me I wish you would try to do so by sending me a letter. I won't send my name. If you are a medium you won't need that. You ought to be able to tell. Respectfully,

A SEEKER.

Volmia, Mich.

Dear Mrs. Davis:—A friend of mine sent me a copy of a Spiritualist paper, in which I find a message from my husband.

If the name hadn't been there, I should have known it was from him. I remember well the evening I made the remark that he spoke of, and I feel it my duty to tell you about it.

The son he mentioned is by my first husband, and he has been wanting me to sell my place so he could have some money to go into business with.

I also understand what he means by the ones he thought were deceiving me, but I will not mention what it is.

Now, Mrs. Davis, no one on earth doubted Spiritualism as I did, but I will say I am thoroughly convinced of its truth, for you nor no one else had any way of knowing what was worrying me so much. I will know what to do now, and I will forever feel grateful to you and the spirit world.

Please let him come again. I send my love to you, and from now on live a new life. I am 74 years old and have always been a Methodist; now I am a Spiritualist. Yours with love,

MRS. HARRIET HOWARD.

P. S.—My husband made a mistake—he said he died 21 years ago; it should have been 22 years.

Chicago, Ill.

Mrs. Nellie Davis, Kewanee, Ill:—I see in The Progressive Thinker, that you have a message from Dr. Hovey, late of Springfield, Mo. I write to say that I knew the Doctor slightly, but was better acqquainted with his son, a dentist at the place when I left there, about ten years ago, but I think he is still there, practicing his profession. The old Doctor was a noted Spiritualist at that time, and for this reason, was regarded as a crank, but for this reason only; otherwise he was regarded as an upright and intelligent man. I note that you say that you are a medium. I have been taking an interest in Spiritualism for the last two or three months, but as I read both sides of the question, I am beginning to lean to the telepathic or subjective mind theory. If at any time you can send me anything that would be convincing I would be glad to hear from you. Most respectfully, LEWIS F. BELL.

623 Messanic st., St. Joseph, Mo.

To the Editor:

I wish to make some remarks about the message purporting to come from Dr. E. Hovey, who passed to the "unseen" from Springfield, Mo., several years ago, which was reported in Aug. 5 of The Progressive Thinker, by Mrs. Nellie Davis, of Kewanee, Ill.

I knew Dr. Hovey in '86, '87, '88, and up to the time of his release from the earthly burden.

The language sounds to me very much like our friend. There is one remark that is suggestive to every person who is a true lover of the great truth, and that is the early struggles of himself and others in trying to demonstrate immortality were great, the extent of the labor and sacrifice being only known to God and the angels. His expressions are more philosophical than would appear from a hasty reading; and a number of them are also beautiful. He says he wishes to help and sustain every medium and keep each SPOTLESS AND ABOVE REPROACH. He says in the concluding part of his message, all of which I deem full of beauty and cheer, to tell his friends that "Old Doc." was not disappointed, as many thought he would be.

He was beyond the business activities of life when I first knew him, and was like unto a traveler on the bank of a river, hailing the ferryman with a signal lantern. The last time I saw him in the flesh was in a spiritual hall in his city. It was in the Autumn, and there was no fire in the stove; and he was coddling in the corner where the sun's rays were kindly falling and his features were almost blue with chill. He was 80 years of age.

The message had a deep influence upon me. I studied it; tried to read it to a spiritual friend, but was so affected that I could not proceed without many interruptions which seemed unnecessary, and without reason. After I passed through this I began laughing, and the more I tried to read the more I had to laugh. Finally, something said to me "Old Doc." is with you, and some others, notably the Indian girl who always provokes in this manner.

Dr. Hovey was one of the brightest men I ever met. He was scholarly, correct in his mental conceptions and pure in his ideas of humanity and its needs.

I feel like saying to Mrs. Davis, the medium, Go on and give us more and more, if you can attract such denizens from their supernal abodes and enable them to speak to an ignorant and crime stricken world such as ours! Go on! Go on!

Cheering incidents are coming from many points as to what is the drift and trend of the lovely unfoldments in our Zion. Diamonds, new and sparkling, with 18 carats or more fineness are being upturned, which thrill the darkness and frighten away the silence of the ages.

Dr. Hovey, in behalf of your many friends for which I waited to answer your sweet and cheering message from athwart the waves, I greet you with a rising sigh of hope, that is more than hope! S. J. DAILY, M. D.

ONSET CAMP, MASS.

Notes of Events at This Popular Camp.

Sunday, August 13, there was another large gathering of people at this camp. All trains and electric cars came crowded all day Saturday and Sunday. It being the middle of the season there were the largest audiences the past week. Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond has been the speaker and held her classes.

Wednesday was Equal Rights Day and Saturday was Lyceum Day, and both these days there were large audiences. Lyceum was under the management of Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, and was a great success. Many speakers and mediums assisted the children by taking part in the exercises.

Sunday morning a large audience was in attendance to listen to the lecture given through the controls of Mrs. Richmond. Mr. Maxham opened the meeting with a song, after which Mrs. Richmond gave a soulful invocation. After another song by Mr. Maxham, Mrs. Richmond took for her subject, "Life on Other Planets," and "The Twentieth Century's Fulfillments," and gave one of the best lectures given by her this season, and only a verbatim report would do justice to the speaker, and space will not allow that.

Chairman Fuller announced that Mrs. Richmond would be engaged for next season and many seasons to come.

In the afternoon the platform was occupied by Mr. J. J. Morse of London, England. This being the beginning of Mr. Morse's last engagement prior to his return to England, there was of course one of the largest audiences of the season. It seems strange that we should have two farewell engagements at this camp this season, last Sunday being Mr. Colville's farewell, as he announced he was to leave this country, and to-day being the last Sunday engagement of Mr. Morse, as he is to return to England. Mr. Morse's last engagement will take place on Thursday next. The large audience showed that Mr. Morse has many friends in America. We are sorry to lose his valuable services upon our platform in this country, but he is sure of a great reception in England. What is our loss is their gain.

The afternoon meeting was held in the temple on account of a short shower. It was the largest audience of the season and Mr. Morse received an ovation as he was introduced. Mr. Maxham opened the meeting with a song, after which Mr. Morse read a poem entitled "Which Are You?" by Ella Wheeler Wilcox. After another song, Mr. Morse took for his subject, "The Rescue of Humanity" and gave an address that was educational and interesting. It was an address that should receive a report in full, as to take abstracts from it would not do justice to the speaker. Mr. Morse held his audience in close attention all through his address and at the close held a reception, and it was clearly seen he had made many new friends. No grander meeting will be held in these United States than those held today with such speakers as Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond and Mr. J. J. Morse. At the close of Mr. Morse's lecture, Mrs. Swift held a seance, and was as successful as the speakers that had preceded her. Mrs. Swift also held a large seance in the Arcade in the evening, and again was very successful.

The Bridgewater Band gave three fine concerts during the day. It was really a grand day.

Monday, August 14, was conference day. Mr. Maxham sang one of his beautiful songs after which Mr. Grieve of Boston, spoke of some of the benefits received through Spiritualism, and answered in a small way, the question often asked, "What good is Spiritualism even if it is true?" He spoke of Spiritualism in its earliest day, that is, thousands of years ago.

Mrs. Curtis read a poem; Mrs. Davis rendered a beautiful song; Dr. Huot gave messages.

Tuesday, Miss Florence Morse delivered an address, her subject being, "Spiritualism the Builder." Mr. Maxham sang several selections during the meeting, and Miss Morse closed the service by giving messages.

Wednesday was G. A. R. day at Onset, and although the weather was very bad, we had a large audience to pay honor to the "Boys in Blue." General Sheridan Post of Wareham, came to Onset in a body, and the W. R. C. from that place also. The meeting opened with "Marching Through Georgia," after which the lyceum children under the direction of C. Fannie Allyn, marched to the platform, where they gave the Allyn flag salute, after which they recited a lesson on "Patriotism."

Dr. G. A. Fuller then welcomed the comrades to Onset, and extended to them the greeting of the association. He spoke of the loyalty and faithfulness of the men in '62 to '65, and said he always felt honored when he could in any way be where they were assembled.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond spoke to them of their loyalty and recited a poem which she had spoken at Camp Douglass, and at Washington, D. C., when Gen Grant (at Washington) was reviewing the returning troops. This was received with great enthusiasm.

Comrade LaGoss, writer and journalist, spoke of the war and its horrors; of the loyalty and honor of the "boys" and recited several amusing incidents to keep the picture from being too horrible. Comrade Young of Onset, recited an original poem.

Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn spoke as only she can speak to the G. A. R. Her whole heart and soul is in this work for the comrades. They all love her, and are never tired of hearing her. She closed her remarks with a poem.

Mr. Maxham sang two rousing war songs and Miss Alice Holbrook sang a fine selection. The meeting closed with the singing of "America," after which the organizations were served a collation.

Thursday, Mr. J. J. Morse of England, gave his farewell address in America, taking for his subject, "Death a Catastrophe, or a Consummation?" When the meeting closed, the friends clustered around Mr. Morse and grasped his hand, wishing him success in life, and Mr. Morse goes away with the knowledge he has many friends in Onset.

On Sunday, Aug. 20, Mrs. M. T. Longley, secretary of the N. S. A., and Mr. Thos Cross will be the speakers, and Miss Florence Morse the medium, and it ought to be another grand meeting.

As the time draws near the close of this meeting, have you subscribed for this paper? If not you ought to do it at once before it is too late. You can do so at the book store.

C. L. HATCH.

So live that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan which moves
To that mysterious realm where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death
Thou go not, like the quarry slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon; but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one that wraps the drapery of his couch
About him and lies down to pleasant dreams.

LILY DALE, N. Y.

Notes of the City of Light Assembly

Sunday, August 13, Peace Day dawned calm, beautiful and bright after several days of continuous rain, and not only was the weather auspicious, but the immense audience both morning and afternoon was inspiring to the speakers and all who took part in the day's exercises. A symposium of the best thought was held in the auditorium in the morning. The auditorium was decorated with festoons of white bunting, augmented by the flags of all nations; the beautiful flowers and foliage made a very pleasing picture. Short addresses were made by W. J. Colville, Wilson Fritch and Mrs. Ripley of Canada, interspersed with song, and orchestral music by the famous Northwestern Band of Meadville, Pa.

Mr. Colville, in his characteristic and inimitable style electrified his audience with his earnest, enthusiastic speech. A mere report of his lectures will never do W. J. Colville justice—one must see and hear the man to thoroughly appreciate his power. There is but one W. J. Colville on earth, and Chairman Lillie made no mistake in introducing him as "W. J. Colville of the World!" He said in part:

"I never like to hear the expression, 'we will agree to disagree'—that is paradoxical and absurd; we may agree to differ, but we can never agree to disagree.

"Difference is concord, difference is harmony, difference is symphony; disagreement is war, and war is hell! The cause of Russia's probable and final defeat is because of the tyranny of the czar; the cruelty, the inhuman treatment shown Russia's millions has depleted her population physically, mentally and morally; in no way are they able to cope with those little brown men who are versed not only in the tactics of war but have the common bond of brotherhood existing which nerves them to defend home and country with their life's blood. The Russian soldier has no country—he is only the minion of the czar and serves because he must.

"Every soul has a place somewhere on earth and there can be no peace without justice, no peace without honor, there will be no peace so long as the people worship the God of battles. It is beautiful to see here the flag of every nation, but take the white banner of humanity and hang it above all of them; I am a traitor the moment I place the Stars and Stripes above the white flag of humanity. Then, and only then when every man sees his brother in every other man, with malice toward none, but charity for all, will there be 'Peace on earth, good will toward all.'"

Wilson Fritch in his Peace Day address, said: "The fundamental principle of all logical reasoning is, things that are equal to the same thing are equal to each other. If this be true, persons and nations that harmonize with truth, harmonize with each other. Perfect harmony is perfect peace. If everything in the universe harmonized with truth, the universe would be a symphony. Nations will realize peace as their governments express justice. The propensity to exploit others has been the cause of war.

"The word king means a man who can do things. The natural king is he who by the greatness of his personality leads. But his descendants were recognized kings not because of fitness but because of descent, and men believed that these kings were hedged in by divinity and ruled by divine right.

"Cromwell taught the world the divine right of humanity. The founders of the Republic expressed more fully the divine right of humanity. All men are created equal as to rights. Government is from the people, by the people, for the people. There are inalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. These rights can not be taken away from the humblest man by monarch, or by the majority of the citizens of a republic.

"This is the higher law which governments must serve. Nations are for man, not man for nations. When men see that they can prosper only when their prosperity promotes the prosperity of others, all wars civil and industrial will cease. It is idle to point the finger of scorn at certain business men who have succeeded marvelously in the warfare of business. It is not the man but the system that is at fault. Business must pass from warfare to co-operation. There is no excuse for war among civilized nations. A $7,000,000 battleship is only a hickory club horribly enlarged. Men bow down to the idolatry of a false patriotism.

"We must reverence humanity more than any institution, family, church, school or nation. The United States has made the beginning of international organization in the forty-five states governing themselves yet under a supreme national government.

"Disputes between our states are settled by the Supreme Court. Let there be a United States of Europe, a United States of North and South America, a United States of Asia, and a United States of the whole world.

"The Hague points the way to the federation of the world, the parliament of man."

Letters of regret to President Abbie Louise Pettengill from President Roosevelt, Gov. Herrick of Ohio, and the governor of the state of New York were read by Chairman Lillie. Each communication expressed appreciation for the courtesy extended by President Pettengill's invitation to be present at the City of Light on "Peace Day" of the assembly, also regret because of inability to attend.

The psychic power of Georgia Gladys Cooley as message bearer that day was specially marked, and many hearts were brightened by this earnest worker. Mrs. Cooley has endeared herself to the hearts of all with whom she has come in touch during her stay at Lily Dale, and we will regret to have her leave this week.

Margaret Gaule Reidinger, of New York, the well-known favorite, will occupy the platform as test medium from August 18 to the end of the session.

Susan B. Anthony and Rev. Anna Shaw will be the attraction for Woman's Day, August 16. A mask ball will be given on the evening of that day, in the auditorium, under the auspices of the Willing Workers.

MATILDA ORR HAYS.

Vicksburg Camp, Mich.

Every day brings new faces at Vicksburg camp, and happiness and good will are on every hand. We regretted the time when we were obliged to part with Dr. Austin, but our loss will be gain to the camp to which he has gone.

Friday and Saturday following his departure we had the pleasure of listening to two lectures from the very able guides of the chairman of our camp, Mr. Thomas Grimshaw of St. Louis, Mo. Each lecture was a gem, and so sparkled with the grand truths of our beautiful philosophy that one could but wonder why all the world did not perceive the light, and turn towards its wondrous life-giving rays. We felt that we stood face to face with the angel world, and drank from an overflowing fountain, as this guide poured forth the utterances which led us all to a higher conception of life, and of man's responsibility.

Mr. and Mrs. Sprague arrived Saturday evening, and Sunday found large audiences to greet them. Mr. Sprague certainly has religion; his enthusiasm is without bounds; it sometimes gets into his feet; it leaps forth from his lips in exclamations of happiness and joy; it echoes and re-echoes throughout the hall, and cannot fail to find lodging in the hearts of the people.

National Association day was observed on Thursday, August 10, Mrs. Sprague and our chairman giving interesting talks in the morning, which was followed by Mr. Sprague in the afternoon with a more detailed account of the labors of the N. S. A., together with the questions of the day before them. Mrs. Sprague was feeling quite poorly the first few days of their stay with us, but the balmy restful air of Vicksburg camp, magnetic treatments, the warm sympathy of her many friends and the angel keepers, have all united in restoring her physical equilibrium, and she is doing a fine work, bringing messages of comfort and joy to those whose friends are treading that mystical strand. Long may Brother and Sister Sprague travel across this broad land, liberating souls from creedal bondage, and leave sunshine, joy, peace in human hearts. They leave us Tuesday to attend our state meeting at Lansing, and thence on to other labors.

This Saturday afternoon we have had the privilege of again listening to one of the masterly addresses from the guides of our worthy chairman, Thomas Grimshaw, who led us out upon a vast plain of reasoning, showing us that we were not children of chance; that heredity and circumstance was not the all power controlling our lives, but that we were of God; he robed us in garments of divinity; told us we were one with the Infinite; that we were masters—builders of life's great destiny; that we were living entities, individualized parts of the great stupendous spirit of the universe, and as such are heirs to all the graces, the powers, the virtues of the Infinite. We look forward in anticipation of listening and drinking from this fountain of inspiration to-morrow, Sunday afternoon, as our Brother Grimshaw will be the speaker at that time. In the morning, Dr. Edson A. Titus, Battle Creek, Mich., will be our speaker. Dr. Titus is in love with "this dear old world," and we expect from his lips and his fertile mind some words that will lead us onward in the scale of being. While feeble in step, yet youth has its residence in his heart. We expect to be richer after the meetings to-morrow; to have gone a little farther out upon the heights; to have absorbed a little more of the sweets of the world, of the Infinite, of God.

The sweet songs of Mrs. Russell continue to creep into the inner recesses of our hearts, bringing forth the better part.

We expect our good friends, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates the following week.

LETTER FROM MRS. L. J. JAQUET.

Are Spiritualists Drifting Into Socialism?

I am still stopping at the Scovell home, waiting, as Micawber would say, for "something to turn up;" but I am waiting between readings and visitors for my good little sister Virginia Bryan to return to the fold; and many more are also waiting for her with eager eyes and anxious hearts. Letters are coming from all points of the compass, calling us to their posts of duty. I received a very encouraging letter from Mrs. Bryan yesterday, saying her daughter was convalescing, but while her father was up, he was very weak and could scarcely talk.

Myself and Sister Scovell held a meeting in the new Sapp Opera House the 8th, and had a large and very appreciative audience. Sister Scovel is a veteran in the cause and makes things hum for some of the goody-good ones; and yet they all like her.

And now hold your breath, all who know me, when I tell you that the minister of the Christian church has invited me to take part in the Wednesday night Bible debate. I am afraid this good brother does not know my views on the Bible, or he would never have invited me; but be that as it may, he is very liberal and I am sure would be more so were it not for fear of losing his job; he is a very fine man, with a fine wife and beautiful little boy. Instead of participating in Bible lore I think I will listen to an address to be given in the opera house by Walter Thomas Mills, the great socialist orator. I think that will fit me better, than the second chapter of Corinthians, and 8th verse; don't you, friends?

Oh! by the way, I was asked only yesterday why so many Spiritualists were drifting into Socialism? Now will some one please answer this? Some one of our great scientists, perhaps, can tell. I cannot, neither do I know that our ranks are turning to any extent, falling in with the Socialists; and if it be true, it would not be such a bad thing, would it, co-workers and friends? I do not think it would hurt us very much; nay, not half so much as some of the fake workers are hurting us.

The Spiritualist work, as far as societies are concerned, is rather slow here, but in Joplin, eight miles away, they have what is known as the Psychic Club, and also one society which is held by a Mrs. Fields Sheridan, and both, I am informed, are doing well.

The ladies of the Psychic Club I have met and been entertained by them, and they are doing a great deal of good, that of uplifting humanity and aiding the sick and needy. Mrs. Stiles of Joplin, is their president, and a very worthy woman. We, Mrs. Scovell and myself, meet with the Psychic Club this afternoon in the home of Sister and Brother Gaston of Joplin.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

THE SOUL: ITS NATURE, RELATIONS AND EXPRESSIONS IN HUMAN EMBODIMENTS. Third edition now on sale. Price $1.00. This is one of the best books given by the guides of Mrs Cora L. V. Richmond. They are really lessons, published primarily, as a book of reference for those who have been members of the classes receiving them. This volume is a careful compilation from reports of lessons, containing the bases of the teachings.

ROMANISM EXPOSED Is a pamphlet of 30 pages, in reply to Prof. David Swing, Priest Cashman and Dr. Withrow, and is principally in defense of Protestantism. A concise little pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

HELIOGENTRIC ASTROLOGY,

Or Essentials of Astronomy and Solar Mentality, with Tables of Ephemeris to 1910. By Yarmo Vedra. With 64 illustrations, 35 of which are original drawings by Holmes W. Merton, author of "Descriptive Mentality." A new system of personally determining the primary fund of Mental and Physical forces and their results in mental aptitudes that dominate the nature of the individual as based upon date of birth. Price, cloth, $1.50.

"THE DREAM CHILD,"

A Fascinating Romance of Two Worlds. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents. Books like "The Dream Child" spur humanity on to make more and more demands of this nature, and will open up new heights and depths of spiritual knowledge.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Will, I believe, take its place beside Bulwer's "Zanoni" and the "Seraphita" of Balzac.—Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. Although simple and unvarnished with any inflammable descriptions, enthralls the mind to the exclusion of other thoughts, until reluctantly the reader closes the last page.—Minneapolis Sunday Times.

HARMONIES OF EVOLUTION.

The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science

As taught by modern masters of law. By Florence Huntley. An exceedingly interesting and distinctly valuable contribution to the literature of evolution, unfolding its laws from the deeper and clearer spiritual aspect, and indicating the defects of the Darwinian theory. Spiritualists and Materialists alike can gain much from its perusal. Price, finely bound in cloth, $2.

Discovery of a Lost Trail

BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,

Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 320 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by the wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail"

is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

SPIRITUAL HARP A collection of Vocal Music for the Choir, Congregation and Social Circles. By J. M. Peebles and J. O. Barrett; E. H. Bailey, Musical Editor. New edition. Culled from a wide field of literature with the most critical care, free from all theological bias, throbbing with the soul of inspiration, embodying the principles and virtues of the spiritual philosophy, set to the most cheerful and popular music (nearly all original) and adapted to all occasions, it is doubtless the most attractive work of the kind ever published. Its beautiful songs, duets and quartets, with piano, organ or melodeon accompaniment, adapted both to public meetings and the social circles. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 14 cents.

THE GOLDEN ECHOES;

A New Book of Inspirational Words and Music.

For the use of meetings, lyceums and home, by S. W. Tucker. These beautiful songs have already comforted many broken hearts, and it is hoped that they may be heard in every land. Price 15c; $1.50 per dozen. For sale at this office.

CLINTON CAMP, IOWA.

Notes of the Camp-meeting at Mt. Pleasant Park.

Since our last writing we have had with us as speaker, the veteran worker Moses Hull, who came in the interests of the Morris Pratt Institute, and to lecture on August 10 for the M. V. S. A.

August 9 was Morris Pratt Institute Day, and a special program, arranged by Mrs. Mattie E. Hull, was given.

If devotion to the work, persistence, energy and ability can win success for the Institute, it will surely live to become an enduring monument to those who are laboring incessantly to bring about this most desirable result.

Mrs. Hull has been here since the first week of camp, as leader of the progressive lyceum, and with several assistants she is doing splendid work with the children. An entertainment is to be given by the lyceum on Saturday evening of this week which promises to be very interesting.

On Friday of last week John W. Ring gave his first lecture to a most appreciative audience. He lectured for the last time on Sunday afternoon to one of the largest audiences of the season. We predict great things for this gifted young man, and shall hope that he may come to us again next year.

On Sunday morning, Prof. W. F. Peck delivered a fine lecture on the subject, "Is the Universe Governed by Law or Caprice?" When our president speaks we are always sure of a treat, and we are looking forward with pleasant anticipation to next Sunday when he will continue the subject, dealing with the evidences of Law in the Moral World.

Monday, August 14, the Woman's Union held a fair in the pavilion which proved a great success financially and socially. The Union netted between $70 and $80 as the result of their work. The "Mellen's Food Baby," and the other sweet little mustached toddler in most becoming caps furnished not a little amusement for the large company. Dr. Cormony and Vice-president Willing are humorists of no mean order.

Wednesday was Woman's Day—an event to which we look forward each year as the chief social feature of the camp season. Through the efforts of the Woman's Union this day has become noted as one filled to the brim with enjoyment of various kinds. Following is the program: Morning—Music; poem and remarks, President Rose A. King; solo, Miss Lillian Swanson; address, Prof. W. F. Peck; duet, Prof. and Mrs. Zumbach; address, Mrs. Laura G. Fixen; reading, Mrs. E. J. Owen; music. Afternoon—Music; poem and address, Miss Elizabeth Harlow; solo, Miss Grace Hawtin; poem, Mrs. Mattie E. Hull; music. Message service at 4 p. m., Mrs. J. A. Murtha. The "Ladies Ball" closed a day of greatest pleasure and profit.

Mrs. Laura G. Fixen has just finished her engagement with us, much to our regret. Her work here was greatly appreciated. With high ideals and broad sympathies, Mrs. Fixen's motherly heart goes out to all the world in love and helpfulness. Would there were more like her in the Spiritualistic field.

Miss Eliabeth Harlow is already with us and has begun her work of regenerating the minds of men and women. She will remain until the close of camp.

Next week W. J. Colville will be here, as will be also Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley. With this galaxy of brilliant light the last week of our camp will be most interestingly bright and enjoyable.

Mrs. Alice C. Barry, pastor of the local society of this city, is doing excellent work as a message bearer. She takes the place on our program of Miss Ella C. Preston, whose engagement was cancelled.

Mrs. J. A. Murtha departed yesterday for her Canadian home, bearing with her the kindest thoughts of all who heard her convincing messages.

Dr. Fred L. Mehrtens has closed his platform labors here, but still remains with his wife, to enjoy the good things to come, and to treat patients.

The days pass delightfully, and we feel no camp could be more enjoyable.

REBECCA WORTH.

Chesterfield Camp—Letter From Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie.

The attendance at camp on Sunday, Aug. 13, was fine, notwithstanding the threatening weather in the morning and the heavy storm of the afternoon. At 10:30 a. m., Miss Elizabeth Harlow gave her farewell lecture to a thoroughly appreciative audience. She is a rarely gifted speaker, and on this occasion was at her best. Her departure from camp was regretted by all.

At 2 in the afternoon, Dr. A. B. Spinney of Michigan, made his initial appearance before a Chesterfield audience which completely filled the great auditorium. He gave a splendid address which was replete with points well sustained. He will remain at the camp one week.

At 4 p. m. Mrs. Maggie Waite gave an unusually fine seance of over one hour, every test fully recognized.

The music throughout the day was especially good. Miss Marlowe, the director of music, is especially adapted to the work, and received many favorable comments. In fact the whole tricalderm or phrase. Price $1.

week has been an especially pleasant one.

Luther Memorial Day was a great success. In the evening a "Paradise Party" given by the ladies demonstrated beyond a doubt their ability in social matters.

The minstrel entertainment Saturday night was the greatest social success of the season, financially and otherwise. Was carried out without a flaw. While attending these entertainments it seems incredible that the entire preparation and arrangements are made in three or four days. It would certainly do credit to weeks of rehearsal.

The camp ground is certainly beautiful, and there is much promised for the comfort of guests another year. Accommodations have been limited and insufficient as the regular attendance of campers is much larger than any previous year. Good feeling and harmony prevails, mediums are all busy. No unfavorable comments thus far have disturbed the peace of the camp.

The writer expects to leave the camp for San Diego, Aug. 26, taking with her only pleasant memories of Chesterfield, holding close to her heart the thought of the children of the lyceum who have added so much to the interest of the camp.

ANNA GILLESPIE.

Ashley Camp, Ohio.

Sunday, August 13, was an auspicious day at the Ashley Camp Meeting, with J. J. Beard, who is always courteous and genial, in the chair, with W. V. Nicum of Dayton, Ohio, and Mrs. Margaret Stewart of Piqua, Ohio, and Mrs. A. C. Kibby of Cincinnati, as message bearers, the Sunday services were begun.

The morning of August 13, dawned on one of the most beautiful parks in the State of Ohio, the recent rains having washed the dust from the trees, shrubs and flowers, revealing to the beholder Nature, arrayed in her loveliest garb.

Wooley Park is owned and controlled by the Spiritualists Association, which conducts these meetings. There are still two or three cottages for rent on the grounds, at a reasonable price, good board, good clean beds, and a genial people are to be found at Ashley camp-meeting.

At 7:30 Mr. Nicum spoke to a much larger audience than the morning service drew out. The audience was mainly made up of the rising generation, who paid close attention to the speaker, seeming to drink in every word and sentence spoken by him. Mrs. Stewart followed the speaker with messages.

August 13 is a memorable day for Woolley camp, where the denizens of the spirit world and mortals struck hands in an effort to solve the problem, If a man die shall he live again? To many in the audience the mist was cleared away and we believe there were many in that audience who for the first time realized the truth of the philosophy presented by the speaker.

W. V. Nicum is a young speaker of great promise. His genial manner, his eloquence and logic have won for him the love and admiration of all who heard him at Woolley Park. The association hopes to secure his services for next year.

Mr. and Mrs. Sprague will be with us this week.

Tuesday night Woolley Park was visited by a steady downpour of rain, leaving the grounds a little damp and chilly for a few hours, but soon the sun came out to bless and brighten this beautiful camp.

Wednesday evening dance was well attended. The youths and maidens tripped the fantastic until midnight, when all dispersed, wending their way to their several homes, leaving the campers to enjoy the sweet embrace of the angel of sleep.

Woolley Park is the possessor of an artificial lake which is stocked with fish, and those of the campers who wish to indulge in the sport of hook and line, are often rewarded by big hauls of the finny tribe.

Mrs. Kibby of Cincinnati, who delights in the sport of fishing, angled along the lake shore six or seven hours, and for her labor was rewarded by a catch of seventy of the finny tribe.

There is on this camp a fine well of sparkling water to slake the thirst of campers and visitors alike; also a mineral well, the water of which is said to be beneficial to sufferers from rheumatism, stomach and kid

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32. CHICAGO, ILL., SEPT 2, 1905. NO. 823

AN OPEN LETTER

Addressed to a Methodist Friend.

My Dear Friend:—Though this letter may possibly stagger your faith, I nevertheless intend it for your good, with the wish that you be free and fearless to think and reason. The mere fact that you are endowed by the Creator with the faculty of reason ought to be sufficient proof that you should use it and abide in the decisions, untrammeled by the clogs of any ism. The world is progressive, and cannot always wear its swaddling clothes, because the Creative divine energy is in it, actively unfolding life and its infinite possibilities; and so our minds should be free, active, and unhindered with fetters, and thus progressive. The stagnant pool is offensive, while the free, dancing waters delight us in supportive service:—

"All is action, all is motion,
In this mighty world of ours;
Like the current of the ocean,
Man is urged by unseen powers.

"Steadily, but strongly moving,
Life is onward evermore;
"Still the present is improving
On the age that went before."

You ask, what do I believe? "Seek and ye shall find, ask and ye shall receive." Yes, I believe everything that my reason and intelligence passes upon and accepts. Nothing more, and why should I? It is evidently for this purpose that reason is ours. In man only is reason perfected. I believe in reason, and my reason tells me that God must be great, good, and just, and in supreme control of the boundless Universe. I believe that God is an infinite, Omnipresent, Creative, Intelligent Energy, manifest in the evolution of all life and being. I believe in the philosophy of evolution because it addresses my reason and intelligence and enables me to better understand Creation, how man came upon this planet, how conceived, evolved, and delivered. In support of this belief I am indebted to Darwin, Haeckel, Romanes, Lamarck, Hudson, and others, and these are the greatest acknowledged world authorities.

Now, the theory of evolution is accepted by all the university professors of this country and of Europe; and while I cannot expound its doctrine or philosophy fully in a short letter, I will try to briefly define its foundation and discovered laws or forces.

It is sometimes spoken of as Darwinianism; but it has come to be this and more; for Darwin traces the descent of man only from the monera, while the more complete and later theory recognizes the Divine Mind or Intelligent Creative Energy back of all life and impelling progressive development from the lowest to the highest order of being, the history of which constitutes or gives "The Divine Pedigree of Man" and makes him a child of the Infinite. This is a very summary statement and I will try to simplify and make it clearer.

Just as embryology or ontogeny is the history of the evolution of the individual from the germ cell to a complete unfoldment of the human form, occupying a period of nine months, so philogeny is the history of the evolution of man from the primordial germ or moneron, occupying millions of years, the law of heredity governing the process alike in each case, the embryonic history of the child in the mother's womb being a recapitulation of all the gradient steps recorded in philogeny or history of the ascent of man from the monera.

In the simple primordial cell there existed the potentialities and possibilities of the race, the same as the potentialities of the individual exist in the embryonic germ cell. Just as the massive oak exists in the humble acorn, so man existed in the cradle or womb of Mother Earth, and was developed by the Infinite Love and creative energy we call God. Thus man and all creatures were created, and are still being born upon our planet and doubtless upon countless millions of other worlds that revolve in space with apparently similar accompanying conditions as does our own.

If you will think a little you will perceive that every attribute, faculty, and characteristic of your being is yours by inheritance. The child inherits the form, physique, disposition and powers from its parents and the parents from their parents, and so on back to the remotest ancestor, environment and condition only modifying results; and the controlling force that determines this is called the law of heredity. It is this force that accounts for the recapitulation of philogeny in ontogeny. The law of heredity is universal, beginning with the monera and culminating in man. It relates us to all creatures and to God. We are thus the children of God by inheritance, and so must inherit the attributes of the Infinite Eternal Father; and as the Father possesses eternal life so must we. But God is the Father of the moneron as well as of man. The difference is this: Man is the ultimate of conception, the moneron is not; nor is any gradient creature.

Man only is an ultimate and possesses in full the Divine heritage. It is believed by many that animals are immortal; and also that the child from the moment of conception is immortal. I don't know; but I think not, because man alone seems to be the ultimate aim and end of Creation. And, too, it appears that he alone hopes for and expects a continued existence and occasionally communicates with the departed and receives assurance of a life beyond. Either this or else he is deluded in a most unaccountable manner, which is hardly conceivable.

Now, further: I think it is fairly demonstrated that telepathy and telekinesis are attributes of the human soul and therefore of God. Telepathy is the ability of subjective minds to communicate with each other. Telekinesis is the attribute which enables the subjective mind or soul to move ponderable substances and to control matter. It is this force that enables the spirit under favorable conditions, to materialize and to write messages on slates, of any color without pencil, and in many other ways to communicate, as I have many times witnessed. It is the subjective mind and not the brain mind that possesses these Godly powers, inherited, and that adapts the soul to a sublimer sphere with those passed on. By this force Christ and Peter may have walked on the water, and possibly others on coals of fire.

Still further: The subjective mind or soul, "Created in the image of God," beside the aforesaid attributes has also others, important among which is a perfect or at least potentially perfect memory, which is the storehouse of knowledge, and which, I believe, may embrace and hold the soul's greatest wealth in the great beyond. I have thus come to think that our greatest wealth and pleasure in the spirit realm may there be measured by the advancement we make here in goodness, knowledge, and mind expansion, which, I believe should be our highest aim in life.

With the further faculties of deductive knowledge, intuition, emotional and universal love once all are fully developed. Man appears in the image of his maker, perfectly equipped for an active and happy existence in the kingdom of mind and living worlds.

Thus, in the 72nd year of life's journey you have my belief and reason for same.

And, now, what do you believe? I can hardly expect you to answer, unless you are ready to claim a little liberty to think and reason for yourself, independent of church or its pastor, who can have no more rightful business with your soul's concern than with your pocketbook, with which you would not trust him out of sight unless it were empty, while with your soul's treasure he seems a privileged character. And why? Because, once on a time, under influences and excitement arranged for the purpose, it was preached to you and others that your salvation depended upon your acceptance as true the story of a wonderful miracle, viz: that some two thousand years ago a virgin conceived of the "Holy Ghost" and brought forth a son, in violation of God's law of procreation, in that this Mary knew not a man; and in this and the son you must believe in order to be saved from the wrath of an offended Deity. This story, as once taught, and which you are asked to believe, is no longer defended by most learned theologians, who are fast coming to regard it as a myth, on a par with kindred stories in the Apocryphal books, once embraced in King James' Bible and since eliminated as doubtful,—all in these more advanced times too much for human credulity, being without the shadow of a claim on enlightened reason or common sense.

And, pray, what is the "Holy Ghost?" Why, God, to be sure; for "God, the Son, and Holy Ghost are one," and Mary thus became the mother of God, just as the Catholics today plainly teach; and the Methodists and all orthodox churches, though less plainly, teach the same absurdity, which, declaimed against a few centuries ago, made one a heretic and subject to fiendish torture, the block and the stake; but reason and knowledge have finally triumphed over superstition, and the inquisition is no longer in use to force belief, and religious despotism is fast losing its hold, just as surely as the Czar of Russia is losing his; for we are fast moving onward into the light of a new civilization, and the cobwebs of the old are being swept away with the broom of evolutionary progress.

COL. INGERSOLL'S VIEW OF LIFE.

A Beautiful Word Picture of the Course of Life on Earth.

Born of love and hope, of ecstasy and pain, of agony and fear, of tears and joy—dowered with the wealth of two united hearts—held in happy arms, with lips upon life's drifted font, blue-veined and fair, where perfect peace finds perfect form—rocked by willing feet and wooed to shadowy shores of sleep by siren mother singing soft and low—looking with wonder's wide and startled eyes at common things of life and day—taught by want and wish and contact with the things that touch the dimpled flesh of babes—lured by light and flame and charmed by color's wondrous robes—learning the use of hands and feet, and by the love of mimicry beguiled to utter speech—releasing prisoned thoughts from crabbed and curious marks on soiled and tattered leaves—puzzling the brain with crooked numbers and their changing, tangled worth—and so through years of alternating day and night, until the captive grows familiar with the chains and walls and limitations of a life.

And time runs on in sun and shade, until the one of all the world is wooed and won, and all the lore of love is taught and learned again. Again a home is built with the fair chamber, wherein faint dreams, like cool and shadowy vales, divide the billowed hours of love. Again the miracle of birth—the pain and joy, the kiss of welcome and the cradle-song drowning the dorwsy prattle of a babe.

And then the sense of obligation and of wrong—pity for those who toil and weep—tears for the imprisoned and despised—love for the generous dead, and in the heart the rapture of a high resolve.

And then ambition with its lust of pelf and place and power, longing to put upon its breast distinction's worthless badge. Then keener thoughts of men and eyes that see behind the smiling mask of craft—flattered no more by the obsequious cringe of gain and greed—knowing the uselessness of hoarded gold—of honor bought from those who charge the usury of self-respect—of power that only bends a coward's knees and forces from the lips of fear the lies of praise. Knowing at last the unstudied gesture of esteem, the reverent eyes made rich with honest thought, and holding high above all other things—high as hope's great throbbing star above the darkness of the dead—the love of wife and child and friend.

Then locks of gray and growing love of other days and half remembered things—holding the withered hands of those who first held his, while over dim and loving eyes death softly presses down the lids of rest. And so, locking in marriage vows his children's hands and crossing others on the breasts of peace, with daughter's babes upon his knees, the white hair mingling with the gold, he journeys on from day to day to that horizon where the dusk is waiting for the night. At last, sitting by the holy hearth of home as evening's embers change from red to gray, he falls asleep within the arms of her he worshipped and adored, feeling upon his pallid lips love's last and holiest kiss.

THE HERETIC.

A heretic—poor man—is one
Who would, but cannot prophet be;
He upward soars to reach the sun,
But weak-winged, falls into the sea;
But yet 'tis much to seek the sky
And show where stronger wings may fly.

I spoke against an outworn creed,
And dared denounce the slothful priest;
Men marveled at my daring deed,
And blazoned it from west to east;
Some welcomed it with loud acclaim
And gave to me a hero's name.

And some called me blaspheming knave,
And thrust me from their company;
Some said the fellow does but rave
In madness and senility;
Some in perplexity were dumb,
And wondered what was next to come.

Some said the message was too stern,
And that it was unkindly given;
The sun of truth should warm, not burn,
And light, not lightning, fall from heaven;
I meant all well; and, if I erred,
I pardon ask for each wrong word.

God sends His terrifying storms,
He stirs the sea, he makes earth quake,
He has a myriad awful forms
Man from his sluggishness to wake;
If perfect peace would make men wise,
We should have had it in the skies.

If God makes mighty winds to blow,
Must men always in whispers speak?
When men neglect the truth they know,
When they refuse new truth to seek,
When patience has in vain implored,
For such a time has wrath been stored.

Patience, too long provoked, will speak
Indignation's sterner tone;
Moses, the man surnamed the meek,
At false gods made his anger known;
Jesus, to all men else, though kind,
Called vipers those whom greed made blind.

Strife and estrangement give great pain,
They tear the fibres of the heart;
Yet not for these dare I refrain
From doing what seems duty's part:
Nothing shall move me, said Saint Paul.
His rule should be the rule of all.

The sordid wretch, who by himself
Still measures every other man,
Declares I did it all for pelf,
And followed but a cunning plan:
I only ask for daily bread,
And humbly trust I shall be fed.

Thrice in my life have I resigned
My livelihood for conscience' sake,
And hitherto God has been kind
And given me richer blessings back;
And now in age, as twice in youth,
I trust him as a God of truth.

Amid the storm it gave me joy
That all of those who knew me best,
Who've watched my life since when a boy
I gave up sin and sought God's rest,
Turned to all slanders a deaf ear
And thought me, at the least, sincere.

And most of all I joyed that those Whom I had led to learning's founts,
And showed how English genius rose
And soared above Aonian mounts,—
That all of these, unshaken still,
Looked on me with the old good will.

And street acquaintance kindlier smiled,
Or stopped to speak a word of cheer;
And often was my pain beguiled
By letters from both far and near,
In which men spoke of service done;
And bade me in God's name go on.

Christ dared to part the family
When conscience claimed such sacrifice,
But sweet it is when all agree
And all together higher rise.
My children have approved my deed,
And, trusting, follow where I lead.

And some dear souls who disapprove
Have yet forborne on me to rail,
They utter only words of love,
And pray with faith that does not fail;
Lord, bless these followers of thine,
And let thy light upon them shine.

For love is ever more than light,
However good the light may be;
Yet perfect souls will both unite
And love the more, the more they see:
Christ was the life, the truth, the way;
Make all like him, O Lord, we pray.

I have a blessed peace with him,
Because I have a conscience clear;
I have no secret sense of sin,
And, therefore, have no idle fear;
I spoke the truth, I spoke in love,
Obeyed not men, but God above.

So, scoffers, I am armed in mail
Your sharpest arrows cannot pierce;
Naught can against the right prevail;
Vain all assaults, however fierce;
I hide my weakness in God's might,
His shield is o'er me in the fight.

When I was but a boy of ten,
John Wycliffe o'er my soul gained power.
I thought him a true king of men,
I think so at the present hour;
He saw the truth, and, though, alone,
He dared to speak it in clear tone.

And thus he roused the deadly hate
Of all time-serving, selfish men;
They dragged him from his high estate,
They slandered him with tongue and pen,
They burned his books, they burned his bones,
And cursed his name in thunder tones.

When church and state thus cast him out
With maledictions on his name,
The faithless thought without a doubt
That his was everlasting shame;
But now that centuries have passed,
He, last, is first; they, first, are last.

From his, I filled my torch with light,
And held it with my strength on high:
It brightly flamed upon the sight,
I trust its beam will never die
Until the breaking of the day,
When all night's shadows flee away.

THE SPIRITS AT WORK.

A Letter From Nettie P. Fox, a Prominent Medium, Author and Lecturer, Detailing Some New Experiences.

To the Editor:—While The Progressive Thinker is giving to the world the results of efforts made to drive frauds and fakes from the ranks of Spiritualism, the denizens of the higher spheres seems more active than ever before in developing new phases of mediumship, and presenting phenomena that courts the closest investigation.

It becomes more apparent each year that mediumship is the corner-stone of Spiritualism; the pearl above price, a subject to be carefully and constantly studied; a condition to be subjected to the closest scrutiny and the most searching scientific analysis; and yet a subject so arcane that only those prepared by experience and profound study are competent to explain its mysteries and comprehend its true value. However it is not the intention of the writer to occupy valuable space by dwelling upon a subject so often presented by abler thinkers, but merely to give an account of recent experiences that may be of interest to readers of The Progressive Thinker.

What Was It?

On July 7, my sister, Miss S. Minnie Pease, while preparing to go out to spend the evening, discovered that her white collar was entirely covered with what appeared to be very fine black lace. On examination, the writer's duller vision failed to discover anything unusual. However on the following morning a more careful investigation revealed a light fleecy substance of silvery color, surrounding not only the collar, but also my sister's hands. It is now seen upon her face and along her shoulders.

At first it was only perceptible by the aid of a looking glass; now it is distinctly seen by the unaided vision.

This strange substance has been discovered surrounding the hands of several others, all of them mediumistic. This wonderful phenomenon is always seen in the light, and upon several occasions has appeared like a fluidic hand, the fingers reaching beyond and over the sides of the material fingers.

Having never before heard of such a manifestation we would be pleased to know if any of the readers of The Progressive Thinker have had a similar experience, or can give a rational explanation of it.

On the 12th of July there was another mysterious occurrence at our home. The writer had been standing by the window watching the beautiful sunset; suddenly her eyes caught the glitter of something upon an old daguerreotype standing upon the dresser. The picture is of a young lady, taken many years ago; it had been dusted and cared for from day to day, and nothing peculiar observed until that evening. Then there was seen around the head, and resting upon the dark curls a wreath of delicate ferns shining like silver; they are very beautiful, and seem to be stamped upon the under side of the glass. The picture is admired by all who have seen it, but no one ventures an explanation of how the wreath came upon it.

No Fraud There.

Upon the evening of the 17th of July at our quiet home a little circle met to witness the manifestations given through the mediumship of a young girl. There was in the circle the medium, her mother, her grandmother, my sister and myself. The child has remarkable mediumistic power, but seldom sits for manifestations, as her friends wish her to finish her school education before giving attention to mediumship.

Upon the evening in question a small table stood in the center of the room; upon it was placed trumpet, (in three sections). The members of the circle sat around the table, but not so near as to touch it.

After several manifestations had been given, spirit hands arranged the various parts of the trumpet, took it above the circle and then a man's voice conversed intelligently with the members of the circle. The fact that there was no man in the house, and that the voice came from above the circle made the test of spirit presence convincing.

Such positive demonstrations of the continuity of life are as essential today as they ever were, and all true Spiritualists rejoice that mediums for this phase are being developed.

For the young girl above alluded to the spirits play upon the piano and give independent slate-writing. We trust a future of great usefulness awaits her.

METALS DECLARED TO BE ALIVE.

Metals Suffer From Effects of Pain, Poison and Fatigue.

Jagadis Chundar Bose, M. A., professor of psychic phenomena in the Presidency College at Calcutta, has just announced to the world the startling discovery, made after years of patient and diligent study, that metals are sensitive, subject to pain, fatigue, stimulus, and death.

To the mind of the ordinary, unscientific individual the idea that a piece of iron, or a cement sidewalk, or a $10 gold piece may suffer and sweat, grow tired, get drunk, be poisoned, suffer, or die may be absurd; but Bose—recognized now as one of the leading thinkers of the world—the man who brought the occultism of the east to the learning of the west, and, combining the two, set to work to investigate life of metals, declares this is true. He has studied, by use of wonderful instruments, the action and reaction of flesh, of plants, and of metals, has watched the suffering and torture of a piece of steel, the death of a bit of copper, the writhings of a lead pipe. He has seen plants die of heart break from neglect, has watched them quiver with emotion. He has poisoned iron pirites and murdered silver by disintegrating its crystals.

Finds Laws of Metal Life.

Now, every man who is a machinist knows that machinery will break down if overworked, and every practical machinist gives his machinery "a rest." Any man knows that the leather in his shoes will wear longer if he gives it a "rest," but Bose has figured out the laws of life of metals and animal and vegetable substance and found that iron is subject to the same laws as man.

"Irritability of tissue," he says, "as shown by its capacity for response depends on its physiological activity. It can be converted to an irresponsive state either temporarily, as by anaesthetics, or permanently, as by poison.

From a confusion of 'dead' things with inanimate matter it has been tacitly assumed that inorganic substance, like lead, must necessarily be irresponsive, an assumption which has been shown to be gratuitous.

"Response and all the modifications of response take place in plants and metals just as in animal tissues. The wave of molecular disturbance in a living animal tissue under stimulus is accompanied by a wave of electrical disturbance. Electrical response under stimulus is not confined to animal, but extends to vegetable tissue. Using similar experiments we find the same responses evoked in metals under stimulus. In the responses of animal, vegetable and metal alike we find types where the responses to stimulus are uniform.

Metals Fatigued Like Animals.

"Fatigue in animal tissues, it is claimed, is due to dissimilation or breakdown of tissue, complicated by the presence of fatigue products. Recovery is said to be due to assimilation, for which material is brought by the blood supply. But that the phenomena of fatigue and recovery are not primarily dependent upon dissimilation or assimilation becomes self-evident when we find exactly similar effects produced in plants and metals. These effects are primarily due to strains and a brief period of rest, by removing due strain, removes also all signs of fatigue.

"In animal tissues response becomes feeble at low temperatures. I have observed the same thing in plants. In metals, too, at high temperatures, the response is much diminished.

"Just as the response in animal tissues is exalted by stimulus, lowered by depressants, and abolished by poisons, so also we find the response in plants and metals undergoing similar exaltation, depression, or abolition.

Show Sensitiveness to Poisons.

"The criterion by which vital response is differentiated is its abolition by the action of certain reagents—the so-called poisons. Poisons also abolish the responses in plants and metals. Just as animal tissues pass from responsiveness while living to irresponsiveness when killed by poisons, so also are metals transformed from the responsive to the irresponsive condition by the action of similar 'poisonous' reagents. The parallel becomes the more striking since it has long been known with regard to animal tissues that the same drug, administered in large or small doses, might have opposite effects and experiments prove conclusively that the same statement holds good of plants and metals.

"The stimulus of light has similar effect upon all matter, organic and inorganic, and the abnormalities of retinal response find their reflection in the inorganic.

"Living response in all its diverse manifestations is found to be only a repetition of responses seen in the inorganic. There is in it no element of mystery or caprice, such as we must admit to be applied in the assumption of hypermechanical vital force, acting in contradistinction of those physical laws that govern the world of matter. Nowhere within the entire range of response-phenomena—inclusive as that is of metals, plants and animals—do we detect any breech of continuity.

"Among the phenomena of response there is no necessity of the assumption of vital force. Physiologists have taught us to read in the response-curves a history of the influence of various external agencies and conditions on the phenomena of life. By these means we are able to trace the gradual diminution of responsiveness by fatigue, by extremes of heat and cold, its exaltation by stimulants, the arrest of life process by poison.

"Investigations may possibly carry us one step further, proving that these are determined not by the play of an unknowable and arbitrary vital force, but by the working of laws that know no change, acting equally and uniformly throughout the organic and the inorganic worlds."

The experiments from which Bose draws his conclusions have covered years of patient laboratory work. He has studied carefully the sensations of a radish and watched with vital interest the dying throbs of a cauliflower. He has stood by and watched a weary, world-worn stalk of celery droop and wither and then recover; he has stimulated a carrot until its joyous, exhuberant responses to the stimuli, superimposed, have made strange markings upon the recording papers in his ingenious contrivances. He has revived the stale stalks of a turnip and read its thanks in the marks.

Fagged out pieces of tin have told him the story, and weary bits of platinum confided in him that they were ready to drop from exhaustion. He has poisoned tin with oxalic acid until it died, fed it homeopathic doses and accelerated its molecular activity, and then destroyed them by larger doses. He has murdered other pieces of tin with caustic potash.

And from all these things he adduces the proof of his theory that metals are sensitive and alive—just as are human beings, although the degree of sensitiveness is, of course, much lower.

That there is some truth in the above from the Chicago Tribune, borne out by the report of the Army Court, who examined the boilers of the Bennington, which had exploded and killed over a hundred persons. The Court found that the boiler "B" of the ill-fated gunboat Bennington, exploded because the metal of the crown sheet and the bolts holding that crown in place had become "dead," had lost all life and nearly all tensile strength by reason of constant use and failure to renew the weakened place during the twenty years that the Bennington was in service.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE.

Was Our Martyred President, Abraham Lincoln, a Spiritualist?

To the Editor:—Having been a constant reader of your valuable paper for several years, I see quite often the question, Was President Lincoln a Spiritualist? I have a little personal experience with parties who were associated with the martyred president over forty years ago at the White House, which might, in a measure, strengthen the doubting minds of some, that Mr. Lincoln was a Spiritualist in belief; but the general public might not have known it. I was living in Albany, N. York, in 1861, and part of 1862, and during 1861, Miss Nettie Colburn, a medium of some note, came there with her traveling companion, Miss Maynard, and soon made a stir as to Miss Colburn's mediumship. A few seances were held in private dwellings, and great satisfaction was the result; everybody interested wanted to hear Miss Colburn, the noted entranced speaker. Halls were open for her reception, and also private homes without number. Her controls awakened wonderful interest, but the church, with its priest-ridden people, stood aghast and dare not listen to the angels' calls.

There was a small society of Spiritualists who engaged Miss Colborn for a year as their pastor, and crowded houses was the result. If there was ever a human being controlled by spirits, this Miss Colburn was, for she was, while influenced, an entirely different personality; in her gestures and voice like a man, and wholly unconscious. These ladies would take their seats upon the rostrum, full of fun and laughing like two schoolgirls, studying no sermon nor giving it a thought, but when the services were ready to commence, Miss Colburn would put on a ministerial face and be somebody else, giving the audience the privilege of choosing the subject, to prove she was no fraud.

She would handle the subjects in a masterly manner, to the surprise of all listeners, and much interesting knowledge was received.

She as a personality was small of stature, slim, with round features and dark eyes. These ladies were my guests many days at a time, and we had a harvest of spiritual food seldom met with. Later on she married her companion's brother, Mr. Maynard, and a book was published as to her mediumship, and more minutely given in detail of what I am about to write. I never have seen the book. When her time expired at Albany they went to White Plains, N. Y., and from there to Washington, D. C., President Lincoln giving them a position in the treasury department. Seances were held at the White House and in the presence of the cabinet, and Miss Colburn was the attraction then and there with the heads of the nation.

Through these seances held at the White House, and the combined influences of a superior intelligence ever wishing for the good of humanity, slavery's chains fell from the millions of slaves in bondage, and the angel world must have the credit, notwithstanding the church opposes every progressive movement, if it borders on the spiritual or is not in harmony with their creeds. That far-seeing mind of the immortal Lincoln and his well-stored intellect never could see in any orthodox religion what his noble soul needed; neither can any religious organization claim him as one of their number, but the Spiritualists, and it is a disgrace to our enlightened free republic as a nation, that the Catholics, with their infamous lies should defame the noble deeds of our martyred president and publish to the world that he was a Catholic in belief.

"THE WISE GUYS."

Who Know It All, Without Real Investigation.

Yes, as Dr. Greer aptly says in The Progressive Thinker of July 22, we frequently meet with persons who know more by the negative of not knowing, than those who have had actual experience, and positively know. Like the man who was astonished that he should be considered a thief simply because one man swore that he saw him perpetrate the theft; he says, "I could bring you twenty men who could swear they didn't see me."

But it seems to me that only a little common sense is needed, even without testimony or experience in obsessions. If persons enter the spirit world exactly as they were when leaving the body, the same as an old garment, what should prevent them from exercising the same revengeful, diabolic or mischievous propensities as heretofore? And if, as has been proven, an innocent, pure-minded girl can be controlled by a spirit murderer so as to compel her to try to kill her friend, and that unconsciously to herself, it is proof enough.

When it has been ascertained that innocent or ignorant mediums are sometimes incited by wicked or mischievous spirits to resort to fraud and toggery, deceiving the credulous and unsuspecting, why not treat the lying or fun-loving spirits just as we should human beings who committed the same offenses? We read of respectable (?) college students enjoying the joke, or the fun of hazing a fellow-being almost if not quite to death! Facts are sometimes surprising, but it is wise to know them.

We pity the deceiver and the deceived. And it is humiliating to believe ahat anyone calling himself a Spiritualist could descend so low. It is an important phase of the beautiful philosophy that what one gives he in return receives. That is, when a person attempts to injure another, he hurts himself most. And it is almost inconceivable that a medium, through whom good messages and manifestations have been given, should ever resort to fraud or trickery, yet such appears to be the fact.

If a medium is simply an irresponsible machine, is there no way to keep wicked hands from manipulating said machine? There is no reason to doubt that a hypnotizer who has passed from his body is still able to exercise the same power over a suitable subject. But should not a medium be an intelligent machine with will power enough to say "hands off!" on proper occasions?

Knowledge on these subjects is what is needed. Who is excusable for his ignorance, when there is a publication like The Progressive Thinker?

The Los Angeles Sunday Times of July 23, 1905, copies from the Chicago Chronicle the statement of a "scientist of high standing" that the study of ghosts, phantoms, etc., should be made the subject of careful government study. Then speaks of them as "these mystic things that so few know anything about." In another paragraph he adds: "My investigations all tend to prove that the soul or spirit of man never came back to earth after his body ceased to exist. My conclusion is absolute." Speaking of phenomena and apparitions he says, "The soul of the person is not there. It is merely an embodied idea or thought. If a ghost ever talks at all it is solely on the subject uppermost in the mind at the time of dissolution. No other subject is discussed and a ghost was never known to talk on anything but the one subject." This from a "wise guy" will be news to the readers of The Progressive Thinker.

OUR REPUBLIC.

Its Founders Were Divinely Aided and Instructed.

America is called the heaven-born republic. What gives it precedence and distinction over other and earlier republics? Simply this: The father of this country, the illustrious George Washington, had visions from the heavenly spheres and was divinely instructed how to pursue the work to secure America's independence. The noble band of veterans who helped so manfully in many ways, and in drafting the Constitution and establishing this new republic on a solid basis, were all divinely instructed. It was made possible that this could be done, because they were so fervent in their true devotion to the people's cause, and every act was done with the desire to accomplish the greatest good for the greatest number. This is heaven's own way of government.

Then to compare this republic, its superiority is in a worldly way established in this: that it has welcomed peoples from all the nations of the earth, just as the world's denizens at death pour into the Universal Republic of immortal life.

Here, too, in this land of promise, America, these emigrants have been assigned to states and territories, and even so is it in this vast domain of the higher Republic. Then, too, America has her laws, in accordance with which these aliens are transformed into citizens are are thus endowed with the rights of citizens, being partakers of all the privileges and protection of the American people. A similar process obtains in the higher republic. All newcomers are assigned as their developed fitness calls for, and by complying with the rules of true progress, they are made equal to those who were citizens of such worlds and spheres before them.

Again, in this American Republic it is the rule that before the alien is transformed into a citizen of the country, he has no right to vote for officers, or hold office, yet his personal rights are respected and protected. This is also modified after the heavenly republic. There is a constant emigration into the worlds of no end, from the earth plane, and it is a sad fact that the majority are aliens to true principle and God's moral order. They are all cared for, taught and trained, shown how to labor to make good their deficiencies in most cases required to be the servants of those whom they wronged, on their earth journey, etc. But, when by true merit, they are promoted from such states of service, they then become free citizens and serve thenceforth in accordance with their own desires to be useful, thus to reap the happiness due all cheerful service.

This is sufficient reason why America bears the proud name of the Heaven-born Republic.

THEOLOGICAL DOGMAS.

The Christian Religion Degrades Humanity.

The human mind has expended its forces in formulating and enforcing empty theological dogmas that are a constant affront to and outrage upon human reason. Many people entertain and affirm the irrational views still industriously promulgated by benighted and belated theologians, who are not subject to the laws of logic and rules of evidence. Religion does not contemplate man as free, and cannot tolerate the liberty of thought. The heights of genius and individuality are above and beyond her appreciation and power.

The genuineness of old religion rests on deception. Its devotees worship the ghost of a god, and all they know about it is what they believe; and they believe all sorts of theories and assumptions without facts—no true record, but a rotten foundation. The religious zealots hold tenaciously to the theory of a personal deity, fashioned much after the model of an Oriental despot who, being all-powerful, fore-ordained and created children so weak in nature that they were destined, in the order of things, to fall; and fall so generally that, in spite of his scheme of redemption, the vast majority will be lost, doomed to everlasting torments, compared to a never-dying fire in a pit enveloped in eternal darkness.

As the boss God is exalted man is degraded; and the existence of evil is attributed to some form of transgression of his commands. He makes innately bad men and condemns and punishes them for being bad.

If a man abuse us, calling us vile and bad, we take it as an offense or insult; yet preachers do that and are respected for it. People pay preachers to tell them now bad, sinful, degraded, unworthy they are, and how they need pardon and salvation by blood atonement. The church has, to serve its selfish aims, made a veritable hell on earth for its dupes who have swallowed its lies, thus becoming unwitting tools for exploitation and degradation.

The doctrine that only man is vile has made men vile, and none more so than those who teach these abominable falsehoods. Christianity teaches class distinction, the inequality of men and consequent special privileges for some. Grace favor is a fundamental doctrine. "Jacob have I loved and Esau have I hated," and that, too, before they were born, is its spirit. "As many as were ordained to eternal life, believed." The elect few "the little flock" are saved by grace—the many are condemned to misery and degradation.

The Christian religion directly represses and degrades mankind by teaching that man is totally depraved. It is impossible for language to paint a more horrible character than Christianity affirms of humanity. It teaches that man cannot think or feel other than sinful, nor desire to be better unless moved by divine power. Thus it has paralyzed the innate tendency of human nature to progress, and destroyed man's self-esteem and self-respect. It has darkened the world with the dogma of evelasting punishment, spreading a horror over death and a shadow over life.

A PROGRESSIVE PEOPLE.

Humanitarianism as the Basis of Social Industrialism.

To the Editor:—I have been a continuous and appreciative subscriber to The Progressive Thinker since the first number was issued. Not only has it always stood for a pure Spiritualism, but has been an advocate of every progressive movement that gave promise of benefiting mankind. Knowing this, I venture to send you, for your columns, a brief account of the way the progressive people of New Zealand are doing things.

Just now, the people of the United States are being shocked, almost daily by defalcations, corruption in high places, by get-rich-quick schemes, by robberies, murders, suicides, immoralities of preachers, bogus mediums, labor strikes and other acts, not creditable to a great Christian nation,—so-called. It is my impression that great as this country is, we might learn much from New Zealand. The statesmen of that country, some twelve or fourteen years ago, get the idea that perhaps crime was not so much chargeable to total depravity due to Adam's fall, as from economic conditions and environments, so they enacted a code of laws that had never before been placed upon the statute books of any country in the world. The wisdom of these New Zealanders is now acknowledged by all who are familiar with present conditions in that country.

Helen Gougar went there to study that progressive people and, since her return, has been delivering public lectures explaining the New Zealand system. I have before me a copy of one of her lectures, also the published statement of Hon. George Clark, a prominent American lawyer. I have condensed the statements of these two talented and careful students of the conditions of that country, which are given below:

The government owns and operates the railroads, telegraphs, telephones, water supply, coal mines, life and fire insurance, slaughter houses, meat markets, bakeries, canneries and many other industries. Each succeeding year the list of government-owned utilities is added to. The government loans money at three and a half per cent, leases land to citizens at four per cent of its original value, assists in building houses, in the purchasing of tools, and furnishes seed for planting. The children are carried to the school free by the railroads, also workingmen to their work, and farmers to the market, and the general fare is one cent per mile.

There have been no labor strikes since the new system was adopted some twelve or fourteen years ago. If a dispute arises between employer and his employees it must be submitted to the established court of arbitration. The employer selects one arbitrator, the laborer another, while the third one is the chief justice of the Supreme Court. These three constitute the court. A minimum wage is established at twenty-five cents per hour. The average wage is about $2.50 per day of eight hours. Private ownership of land is still allowed, but is limited to 640 acres of farming land, and double that if it is fitted only for grazing. Political corruption and official bribery are unknown.

Mrs. Gougar says: "There is not a millionaire, nor a trust, nor a poorhouse, nor a general prison in all New Zealand. There is a higher average per capita of wealth, and lower per cent of ignorance and crime than any other country. Old age pensions are granted to men and women past sixty-five, graded from $100 to $250, according to the necessity of the person. The aged, thus pensioned are not considered as paupers, but it is an honor to receive it and it is a badge of good citizenship and a law-abiding life."

Judge Clarke says: "I have traveled around the world by way of New York, London, and the Suez canal, and I am now in the land of government ownership of public utilities, and a more contented and prosperous people does not exist in the world today than the inhabitants of New Zealand. The country is not the place for plutocrats and exploiters who live by the sweat of other men's faces, but for merchants, and store-keepers, and working men this is the best country in the world."

In religion, Spiritualists are concededly the most liberal and progressive people to be found. Politically, I presume, they are scattered among all the existing parties. As their religious creed can be stated in one word, viz: HUMANITARIANISM, cannot we all, though we be republican or democrat, socialist or prohibitionist, do the world good by urging the adoption by this country, of a large part, if not all of the New Zealand laws? QUESTION CONFRONTING WOMEN.

The Real Problem to be Settled Concerning Them.

The question which confronts the modern woman is not what were the qualities which best fitted Eve for the Garden of Eden, but what are the acquirements of a woman to meet and solve the problems of the 20th century?

The presumption is always against the present fitness of the type which was perfectly adapted to the conditions which are obsolete or passing. Therefore, it is not by discussing the problem of whether women are fair or "unfair in judgment;" whether politics are pure or impure; whether women in the past were or were not satisfied with their position which will settle the question of woman's right to perfect equality in a representative government. The question is "Does freedom tend to develop fairness? Does it make humanity more just? Does it develop character? Does it give a larger, broader, saner view of life? Does responsibility which the ballot brings develop self-control, self-respect and a higher sense of justice in dealing with others? In a word, are the results of freedom better for humanity than those of slavery? If so, then there can be no question as to its effects in the development of women, and there is no class of citizens who need its power in the development of those characteristics which fit them for the high vocation and service of life to which the majority of women are dedicated, than the mother who sits in judgment more frequently than the Judge on the bench, that she may be able to render just decisions at a period of a child's life when lessons of justice and fair play are of greater importance than when rendered in later years.—From the Annual Address of Rev. Anna H. Shaw, President National Woman Suffrage Association.

Review of Passing Events.

Who Are the Infidels?

According to a writer in the Daily Mail (London), the greatest infidels are within the churches. Thomas Paine, Hume and Ingersoll are tame in their criticisms compared with Canons, Bishops and high dignitaries, who are leaders of the Established Church.

The following passage has great significance:

"Canon Henson declares the gospel evidence of Christ's physical resurrection to be worthless. Dr. Sanday—a great scholar and divine—has stated that the incidents of Christ's temptation "are on the face of them not historical facts." The Bishop of Birmingham, Dr. Gore, has admitted that the historical evidence of our Lord's birth of a virgin 'does not compel belief.' As to the ascension and the physical going up of a material body Archdeacon Wilberforce has pointed out that 'what is up at Galilee is down at the Antipodes.' The Bishop of Winchester has demolished the accepted version of the gift of tongues at Pentecost. And the whole position of belief in the Bible was given away by the Bishop of Birmingham when he said that 'prophetic inspiration is consistent with erroneous prediction.' Of what profit is all this criticism? These great divines only agree—to differ. Some reject what others accept, and vice-versa. On the field of criticism Canon Henson and Dr. Gore are at daggers drawn. When doctors differ who shall decide? If in practice, then the results of such criticism are clearly not resettlement, but unsettlement, are the Christian people of this country justified in revolting against a clergy who pick the faith to pieces bit by bit? Are they entitled to demand that their ministers of religion shall leave their biblical gerrymandering alone, and get to their Christian business?"

The key to the situation is the fact that all these men are educated, and thereby know that the whole mass of church doctrines is a sham, and not being held in fear by superstition or a dominant power, freely express their opinions.

The writer in the Mail appears to think the laity ought to revolt against their gospel ministers, who "pick the faith to pieces bit by bit," and compel them to "get to Christian business."

This means that they are to continue on in the old rut, and never allow a new idea to enter their minds. But the laity have no thought of persecuting their leaders for heresy. The leaders would not come out were they not fully aware that the members would welcome their bravery.

Evidently the Bible is not a clear and perfect revelation of God to man, or it would not arouse so much controversy over its meaning, or be in danger constantly from attacks of unbelievers. Paine has been held in execration by the pious for a century, yet he was not more infidel than Canon Henson or Dr. Gore.

Public Opinion Vs. Spiritualism.

This publication is supposed not only to give the news of most direct interest to the public, but to represent the consensus of opinion of that public. How wide of the mark it comes is shown in its issue for July 29, in an article on the "Wealth of New Religions," by an author whose name does not appear in any list of accredited writers.

Among the other "new religions," Spiritualism is introduced, and it may be said without fear of contradiction, that never before has a more virulent attack been made on that cause or has it been more misrepresented. That a public journal, which pretends to being truthful and fair to all, should allow such slanderous charges against a great number of the public it claims to represent, is an astonishing policy which would be expected only in the lowest of yellow newspapers.

Toquote: "Spiritualism, which has been twisted into a kind of religion, cloaks the operations of base and rapacious swindlers, who feed on the credulity of mankind. The operations of these 'mediums' are thoroughly selfish.

"There are 10,000 persons in the United States who believe or pretend to believe that they possess the power of communicate with the dead. Most of these are idle rascals who have made a profession of playing on the heart-strings of lonely old men and women who yearn for some message from those who have entered the shadowy beyond and who in senile eagerness are ready to believe any 'materialization,' however clumsy and stupid its execution."

In proof of this he produces Mrs. Pepper, who, on the contributions of those who go to see her is enabled to "lead a life of almost Oriental splendor."

He also cites Luther Marsh, deluded by "Miss Diss De Bar," and adds that "Abraham H. Daily, a lawyer of standing and a man who once occupied the bench, made an astonishing defence of Spiritualism and the Fox sisters, in which he said that the enemies of Spiritualism had tricked Maggie into her confession when she was drunk, and that it was not true." What did Judge Dailey deny according to this writer—that Margaret was not drunk, or that she made a confession?

I have not consulted Judge Dailey but venture the opinion that he never made such a "defense." He too well knows the circumstances which enabled the enemy to extort the so-called "confession," to make such explanation.

But the management of "Public Opinion" stands for a square deal and grants a hearing to both sides. The current number contains the following reply as an antidote to the preceding venomous poison.

It is always delightful to find a public journal edited along the lines of justice and honest expression, and "Public Opinion" should be commended for this freedom of expression.

Editor of Public Opinion:—I request a brief space in your "Readers' Letters" to correct a very erroneous statement made in an article on "Wealth of New Religions." Spiritualism is introduced among the other cults, and the impressions conveyed that all "mediums" are rascals gaining great wealth from their dupes.

The author says: "Most of these (mediums) are merely idle rascals who make a profession of playing on the heart-strings of lonely old men and women who yearn for messages from those who have entered the shadowy beyond and who in senile eagerness are ready to believe any 'materialization,' however clumsy and stupid in execution."

He states the number of believers at 1,500,000 which should be doubled to be correct; of societies he says there are 660; 19 state organizations and 52 camp meetings. He fails to mention the central organization which unites them all, the National Spiritualists' Association. This is located at Washington where it owns a splendid home, a valuable library, a publishing and educational bureau, sends out missionaries, and has a charity fund for needy mediums and workers in the cause. It grants endorsements to worthy mediums, and ordains speakers, giving them all the privileges of gospel ministers. This entire work is carried forward by voluntary contributions. Not a dollar is exacted of any one.

So far as "rolling in wealth," the speakers and mediums on an average, receive less than the ministers of other denominations. As for mediums, there are rascals and frauds passing under that name, as there are black sheep among gospel ministers. Spiritualists are among the first to expose these and herald their deceptions. "Materialization" is by no means the only, or most important phase of the manifestations and if eliminated would not weaken the evidence.

Of these frauds there may be perfidious examples of deception. They are not mediums, more than than a counterfeit bill is money. In all my long and intimate connection with Spiritualism, dating almost from its beginning, I have never known a medium who acquired great wealth by his or her profession. I have known a great number who have sacrificed wealth and position for their faith. Of all the mediums in this country, it may be safely stated, that not one in a score is known to be thus gifted beyond the circle of his or her own family or friends. They hold seances for their own instruction or at request of friends, and would regard it as almost sacrilege to receive pay for entertaining angel visitants.

Among the advocates of Spiritualism are many of the leaders in science, art, literature and statesmanship. Sir William Crookes after twenty-five years' investigation states that he has become more and more confirmed in his belief. A. R. Wallace, co-discoverer with Darwin, of evolution, and Varley, who was electrician to the Atlantic telegraph, are examples. The latter was convinced through the wonderful mediumship of his wife. Sardou, the French author, according to his own words, is one of the most astonishing mediums. Flammarion, the great astronomer, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Queen Victoria, Profs. Hare, Hyslop and James, Mrs. Underwood, author of "Automatic Writing," are a few names from a list that might be extended to pages.

Are these "senile"? Are they "dupes"?

The opinions of Crookes, Wallace or James would be received by the scientific world with deference on any other subject. Why not on spiritual phenomena to which they have given years of careful study?

Spiritualism has come to stand for vastly more than its phenomena. As understood by its supporters, it is a knowledge of everything pertaining to the spiritual nature of man, and as spirit is the moving force of the universe, in its widest scope, it grasps the domain of nature. It embraces all that is known, and all that can be known. It is a cosmopolitan eclecticism, receiving all that is good, rejecting all that is bad. It is a philosophy, a religion, a science of life, here and hereafter.

In the name of the large and increasing body of Spiritualists I protest against the unmerited and vicious attack, and this misrepresentation of a cause which is dear to them.

A WORK OF ART.

Excellent Evidence of Spirit Power.

To the Editor:—I would be pleased to have the readers of The Progressive Thinker read of a picture I have obtained, which those who are very familiar with spirit portrait work, have pronounced out of the ordinary. While at Camp Chesterfield I visited the Bangs Sisters at their cottage, and arranged for a sitting with them, hoping for a picture of my three children. In fifteen minutes from the time the work began, there came upon the canvas the group of three. My daughter, aged 17 in this life, sat directly in front of the canvas, and her perfect likeness appeared at one side; in the center came the picture of a daughter who passed out an infant, who appeared as she has grown in spirit life, about ten years old; at the other came the picture of a son who passed out at the age of 17, but representing him to be 21, after four years in spirit life. I requested that the two on the other side would look as they have grown to be since their leaving me. All who have looked at the picture have admired it as a work of art, and remarked upon the perfect likeness of the one in the form, and have especially noted the spirituelle expression of the little one, who has developed entirely in spirit life.

Spirit portrait work is not new, but the phenomenon of a picture of a group of three, one of whom is in earth life, and two in spirit life, coming on a canvas in fifteen minutes, certainly is remarkable.

MRS. A. H. JACOBS.

THE BRAIN IS REMOVED.

And the Patient Survives The Terrible Ordeal.

The following from the Chicago Chronicle comes from London, Eng.:

There is a great deal of secrecy about the illness of Countess Telfener, Mrs. John Mackay's sister, but now it is known that Sir Victor Hortsey performed on her one of the most wonderful operations ever conceived, much less executed. For twenty years the countess has been a martyr to excruciating neuralgia. She tried every sort of cure in England and on the American continent fruitlessly. During the last six months her continuous pain was beginning to threaten her reason and she agreed to submit herself to the knife. It was such an appalling process that one of the nurses fainted, but to the great joy of all concerned it was pronounced a success.

Whole Brain Removed.

First of all, a piece of skull was sawed away. Then the whole brain was taken out and the nerve which caused all the pain literally torn away.

It was a fearful task and it was with terrible difficulty that the nerve was disentangled from the brain, but Sir Victor's hand never shook the whole time, and with as much calmness as though bandaging a finger he replaced the brain, filled up the hole and sewed up the open scalp wound. Those who saw him declared that when he had finished and the patient pronounced still alive he went white as death. He did not utter a word for some time.

Operation is Successful.

This is quite a fortnight ago and Countess Telfener has not had the slightest twinge of the old pain since. Indeed, except for necessary attention and the inconvenience of the outside wound, she is in wonderful health. When she has regained her strength sufficiently Mrs. Mackay will take her away into the country for a change of air. Meantime Mrs. Mackay is still staying on at Carlton House terrace, seeing to her sister's wants, attending her with untiring devotion.

THE "LITTLE MOTHER,"

And What She Is Doing In the Prisons of Our Land.

"It is the individual that counts—the masses matter little."

No socialist he—this woman with eyes that shine like stars and a voice that is full of music. It sounds like rank socialism—it is only Maud Ballington Booth. You will go far before you find a woman of more soul, more heart, more womanhood than this woman of the Volunteers of America, whom they call the "little mother" of the prisons. On her breast was pinned the pale blue star, the badge of her work. She wore no uniform. Her simple straw hat lay on the dresser. It was light in color and trimmed with black velvet. She wore a plain black dress with one or two dainty feminine adornments. Her brown hair was curled a little around her face. About her personality there is no mark of austerity. Nor is there any in her conversation. She talks brilliantly and logically. Hard horse sense mingles with her poesy. Above all things she is practical.

"Before you can elevate the masses you must look to the individual," she went on in explanation of her statement. We were talking confidentially—up in her room in the Great Northern hotel. A modest little room on the court, it was, too. On her trunk lay a suit case of straw. The table looked very business-like with the pens and papers that were scattered over it. The glory of her life is work.

"I wanted to do something," she said. "I turned to the places where people said there was the least hope."

Beside her on the floor lay two little bedroom slippers. While she talked she put on her shoes. "I am going out to talk to my boys at Hope Home," she said. "We are going to have a dinner and I shall have an opportunity of meeting them personally."

No girl ever talked more enthusiastically of her first ball than did this "little mother" of the state prisons. "That is what I like," she said. "I love to keep in touch with each individual among them."

She leaned back in her chair and looked at me.

To understand her personality you must see her, talk to her. I have never heard her lecture, but I am not afraid to wager that she can hold her own with most orators of the masculine gender. Her voice is like music and her enunciation perfect. In the depths of her hazel eyes one may read all sorts of lovabilities. Sacrifices are there, too, and over it is her faith in God. Maybe it is just a touch of masculinity that keeps her from being an actual beauty.

"You know about Hope Home?" she said. I said that I did. She looked pleased.

"I wonder," she said reflectively, "if you know how many boys have gone through our two homes—the one in New York and the other here in Chicago."

I told her that I could not guess.

"Four thousand five hundred," she said triumphantly. "Think of it—4,500 souls without hope.

"Tonight I am going to talk to them. Tomorrow I am going shopping for them. We needed some things—some furnishings, you know. The easiest way for me to get funds for their purchase was to deliver a few lectures. I have been at one or two Chautauquas and from here I am going to Rockford to speak."

A bright thought flashed across my stupidity. It was a rude thought as well.

"You raise a great deal of money that way," I said.

"Oh, yes; sometimes I raise very large sums. That is the way the work has been kept up."

"How much in a year?" I asked the question boldly. She laughed a little.

"If I worked—if I gave all my time to it," she said slowly, "I could make $10,000 a year."

Go to, some of you men—you are correspondents and seekers after life's truths in the city's darkest depths. There is not one of you can make so much in a year—lecturing. It would not have meant anything if I had expressed surprise. She was too matter of fact over it.

"I am going to shop tomorrow all day," she said. "I always like to buy the little necessities for the Home myself. I like to choose linens and beddings and rugs myself, so that I will be sure the Home has about it no look of an institution."

"You want it to look like a home?"

There was a strain of tenderness in her voice as she answered.

"It is the first home most of my boys know."

Her look wandered toward the picture of a boy that stood on the dresser. It was the fine spirit of motherhood universal that spoke in her. I understood why the prisoners have called her the dear name they do. She picked up a little cylindrical package. It was about eight inches long and an inch through. From the inside she pulled out an elaborately written scroll.

"See what my boys in Anamosa, Ia., gave me," she said. I took the paper and read. Some of it was worth printing.

"You have broken down the barriers which this too censorious world had erected in the form of bigotry, prejudice and condemnation. You have, by your untiring efforts in our behalf, cast for all time to the four winds that old proverb, 'Once a criminal, always a criminal.'

"Resolved, That we hereby renew our pledge, by God's help to be loyal and devoted sons to you, our 'Little Mother,' fully realizing that the welfare of our cause you have so ably defended rests mainly in our hands. We pray to Almighty God that he will abundantly bless you and give you many happy years upon the earth in the midst of your loved ones and to enjoy the blessings of self-sacrifice with 'your boys.'

"Signed in behalf of the Volunteer Prisoners' league, this 9th day of August, 1905."

"Were any of those who went through the homes habitual criminals?" I asked her. The phrase does not mean so much to me personally. I have heard it much around police headquarters and also often within the confines of the state's attorney's office it is mentioned.

Her little indignation was fine. "There is no such thing as a habitual criminal—except on the records of the state," she replied. "All that is necessary is to reach them in the right way. Very few of my boys ever prove unfaithful to me."

There is no use in trying. I cannot tell the way she said it. Her look was upon the pictured boy face that stood upon her dresser. It was a humble sort of a little room—garish, too, with the red-striped wall paper. There was not so much difference in her tones when she spoke again.

"My boy is six feet tall," she said. "He is 17 and six feet tall."

"Where is he?"

"At home. We live in Montclair, N. J. This is my daughter. She is as tall as I am."

To have told her that she did not look half old enough to be the mother of two grown children would not have pleased her especially. I refrained from such a statement of the truth. She went on with her little preachment.

"You must give credit to the tendency of the times, too," she continued. "Public sentiment is changing. There is no longer the same distrust of the man who has served time. Prison government has changed for the better, too. The lockstep has been abolished in favor of military drills. So have stripes and shaven heads in many prisons. I notice the difference in the nine years that I have worked in prisons."

To have paid her another compliment would have been as futile as the other would have been. This "little mother" of the prisons is largely responsible for the change in public sentiment. More unselfishly still she gave credit.

"The boys who go out have a large influence," she said. "There is no lesson like a life well lived."

Her eyes shone with light that was half divine. She did not know that it was herself who typifies the world.—Jean Cowgill in Chicago Chronicle.

STAMP OUT OBSESSION.

Complimentary and Complementary to Nora Batchelor.

Again our frank and noble Sister Nora Batchelor has struck the very chords that trembled within my mind for weeks, without finding me in condition to give them proper expression.

Her article in No. 818 of The Progressive Thinker is one of the most radical, the most enlightening among the many high class contributions that make the columns of our dear Progressive Thinker an inexhaustible mine of mental, moral and spiritual gold.

Some of the controversies in the Open Court, about the subject of obsession, are masterpieces; yet, do they contain much practical value, aside from bringing the subject nearer to our minds?

Facts will remain facts—all optimistic theories, all hypervirtuous tremors notwithstanding. But can there be wisdom in recognizing the existence of a dangerous epidemic, without trying to prevent its ravages by all possible means?

What would we say of the board of health in some stricken district, if its members were wasting time and strength in theorizing about possibilities?

Indeed, Miss Batchelor hits the right point! Wipe out the scourge, ye Spiritualists! It is you who are called to the front; for you alone can measure the extent of the danger; since the rest of the world is blind and deaf and dumb.

I wish that all would carefully study our sister's article, weighing every word of it in the balance of earnest thought, and then? Ah! can we stop there and be worthy of our divine trust? Can we behold the unmistakable sources of so much misery and sin, and fold our hands in idle contemplation?

To be sure, recognition of evil is the first step in the right direction; the second step should be, to devise ways and means to fight it; but both these steps are vain without the principal third one: the courageous attack, followed by consequent wise, relentless warfare. Now, who is ready to enter the arena?

Who is ready to exchange the field of polemic talk for that of fruitful action?

Who is ready to stand by the banner of pure, unselfish, progressive philanthropy?

Single individuals are powerless; to accomplish anything great we must work "viribus unitis."

There is no doubt about the majority of Spiritualists and progressive thinkers of all shades flocking to the standards of capable leaders in a campaign against ignorance and poverty, the natural incubators of crime on earth, and its continuance in the form of obsession after death.

How many among our experienced leaders, our master minds, will step to the front?

Or should we not better look to the already established bodies of Spiritualists throughout the land?

Would not local societies under the direction of the N. S. A. be able to venture preliminary attempts?

Phenomena, lectures, missions, caretaking of worthy mediums, schools, etc., —all this is good and noble and necessary, and we should bring more sacrifices in this direction; but is not the stamping out of the pestholes of society still more important? Is the danger not imminent? Are its consequences not immensely more far-reaching here on earth and in the world of spirits?

Would it not translate Spiritualists from a body of apparent dreamers into a body scintillating with life and activity, forcing recognition from the very people who until now were often pleased to trample upon "those lunatics?"

Let golden action follow the silvery words in the Open Court. Surely, our always progressive editor will endorse our endeavor and open the columns of his grand paper to repeated appeals, as well as to proper suggestions from various directions. And our N. S. A., in spite of many ardent duties, has it ever shirked labor, when called upon to advance our august cause? Not ours alone, though, but the cause of all humanity.

Thank you, dear sister, in the name of each downtrodden, miserable and sin-stained human being!

Let us hope and trust, and courageously pursue the path indicated by your inspired words.

MRS. HENRIETTA STRAUB.

THE DREAMS AHEAD.

What would we do in this world of ours
Were it not for the dreams ahead?
For thorns are mixed with the blooming flowers,
No matter which path we tread.

And each of us has his golden goal,
Stretching far into the years,
And ever he climbs with a hopeful soul,
With alternate smiles and tears.

That dream ahead is what holds him up
Through the storms of a ceaseless fight;
When his lips are pressed to the wormwood's cup
And clouds shut out the light.

To some it's a dream of high estate,
To some it's a dream of wealth;
To some it's a dream of a truce with Fate
In a constant search for health.

To some it's a dream of home and wife;
To some it's a crown above,
The dreams ahead are what make each life—
The dreams—and faith—and love!

LETTER FROM ANNA E. BAIRD.

The Name of a Society Given Through a Vision.

It was my pleasure and privilege to serve the White Key Society of Martin's Ferry Ohio, for its first public meeting since receiving its state charter. The meeting was held in the city hall. A good and appreciative audience greeted us.

The hall was donated for the use of the society, and is to be used by it for its meetings every Sunday. I held four meetings during my stay with them; one in Wheeling, W. Va., at the residence of Mr. W. Schaffer, which was composed of invited guests, and we received some grand results.

Mrs. Schaffer is a young medium, and has only been sitting for development of her spiritual powers for four months. She has been a member of one of the classes of Mrs. Lou Wilson, who has been the instrument through whom the spirit world has done a wonderful work in Martin's Ferry. She is an excellent healer and has cured several.

Let me say here the name of the society was given through the mediumship of Mr. Freeman. They were to think over the matter of choosing a proper name, when Mr. Freeman saw one morning, as he was awakened, a large white key extended toward him, and he was impressed that this was the symbol for a name for the society.

Mr. Freeman's wife, for eight years has been an invalid, caused by an obsessing spirit, who at times would entrance her, and she would fall wherever she was, and lie unconscious for hours, and who had not left her home for all this long time—almost lost to her family only in body and constant care. She has been cured by Mrs. Wilson, and now although her physical is strong, yet at times this spirit comes to her, and she knows what to do to protect herself. Many cures due to Mrs. Wilson's magnetic and mediumistic power were told me.

I can but feel the White Key Society must prosper. Its members are few in number, but earnest, honest and harmonious.

Mr. Chas Miller has offered to give this society the profit of his business for one week, to buy an organ, and the members are all interested in spreading the good news, "There is no death."

Mr. Henry Brunhaus and wife, and many of the Wheeling society, attended the meeting held in their city. Mr. Brunhaus is the president of the Wheeling society, a spiritual, progressive man. They have a large society and very prosperous. Mrs. Wilson has been earnest in her work, is a fine medium, and I trust all who go there to assist her may enjoy the blessings of her work and interest as I did. Truly to see so many brought into the light from the fetters which so long held them in darkness makes one feel we are "not alone" when we struggle against great odds.

There is one mistaken idea going about, which I feel my duty to correct. I was told by several while in the different cities in the Ohio Valley, that the reason they did not want Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran to lecture was because a trumpet medium had told them she was death against trance mediumship and physical mediumship. This is NOT TRUE, and I feel it my duty to speak in defense of this tireless, honest, earnest worker. She is a trance medium herself, is ever a staunch friend to the honest medium, mental or physical. It is no wonder so many of our societies struggle against great odds when honest mediums are maligned and the work that might be done, "in this grand cause misunderstood," because of these fakirs, who are too lazy to work, and fill their pockets with ill-gotten gains.

I would uphold the hands of every honest medium, but the man who circulated this untruth is one who confessed that he was a fraud, and promised to leave our ranks and go to work, and be an honest man.

Mrs. Curran is expected to lecture for the White Key Society at its opening meeting, September 3, and may the angel world shower rich blessings upon her honest efforts, and many blessings be given it for its earnest efforts to promote our grand cause, in uplifting the fallen, strengthening the weak, and bringing light to those who walk in spiritual darkness, is my wish.

HOW DID IT HAPPEN?

An Experience in Spirit Photography.

To the Editor:—Having read, with a deal of vexation, controlled by a goodly degree of mirth and amusement, the article in The Progressive Thinker of July 15, by P. A. Jensen, telling us, "How it is done," I can no longer resist the pleading for justice from the spirit side, in regard to my own knowledge of the mediumship of Mr. Wylie as a spirit photographer. Hence the query, "How did it happen?"

Some eight or nine years ago I was taking in the sights and many of the wonders of the beautiful city of Los Angeles, when among other things I had two sittings for spirit photos at Mr. Wylie's. The first plate contained a pictured face of a young lady, a stranger to me. It was recognized by the father of the lady, who was at the time present with me. I had heard her audibly speak to me before that, as also since, but it is of my second sitting I am more anxious to know the "how" of it, as it occurred a day or two later. I had been on the go, until I was very tired, but would like another try for the otherwise invisible aids. After taking it, the plate was immediately taken to that "back room," of which Mr. Jensen speaks, while I, without waiting for their finish, returned to my home in Summerland, the pictures following a few days later. I wish I could convey to you the wonderment into which I was thrown by that second picture. There were two faces as plainly visible as my own. I saw the resemblance plainly enough, but how could I place them. After enduring the mystery for nearly two days, I asked aloud, and with a good deal of anxiety, "Who can they be?" when a spirit voice made reply, saying, "They are your children." It is more than half a century since they (still-born) passed into spirit life, to live and grow up into manhood, and exact resemblance to those who have since passed over to meet them there.

Now let any fraud hunter tell me "how it was done," or else forever hold his peace until he, too, can say, "I know the truth."

LET YOUR LIGHT SHINE.

A Stirring Call to Active Humanitarian Work by Spiritualists.

In 818 of The Progressive Thinker, Jas. C. Underhill called the attention of Spiritualists to the good work the Salvation Army is doing for the homeless, and the outcasts. I think all will agree with him, that it is a work that Spiritualists should engage in.

For several years I have had a desire to work in the interest of "fallen" women.

Individual effort amounts to little. Societies should be formed, and homes established as a tempory refuge for those who desire to lead honest lives. There should be employed in the homes only those who have the true mother heart; who can overlook all mistakes, and who would treat the unfortunate as they would like to be treated if they were in like circumstances.

For a number of years I have given most of my time to the sick and afflicted, in massage treatments. I have made very little money in the work, for a large per cent of my patients have been on the free list. If the Spiritualists will establish homes for the unfortunate, I will go as a willing worker, if so desired.

In the fall of 1900 I went to Leadville, Colo. For so small a city, it had a large amount of "fallen" women in it. Two streets were given entirely to them, and there were a good many scattered about the city. I learned that a girl had committed suicide a few weeks before my arrival. Her conscience had been awakened to the sinful way she was living, and she passed to a better life, through the only door society makes it possible for one who has "fallen," to pass.

I was told of another who made an attempt to lead a better life. She was employed in a large boarding house. The men jeered at her when she waited upon the table, and she was driven back to the old life. The women for whom she worked should have shielded her from insult.

A woman, whose opinion I value, told me I was wasting sympathy on that class of women. She said they were too lazy to work, and preferred that life. But I was not satisfied. I wanted to know something about their lives, and I promised myself (if my courage didn't fail) to walk to that locality some afternoon when I had leisure.

When the day arrived that I had set for my investigation, I seemed to be made up of two personalities, who stayed by me all day. One urged me to go and see for myself how that class lived; the other one said, "Stay at home and mind your own business."

At four o'clock I put on my wraps and started out. As an excuse for visiting them I took with me an article for the toilet, on pretense of selling it. When I reached those streets the atmosphere seemed unbearable. I became frightened and was about to turn back, when one of the personalities who had been with me all day, said:

"Don't be a coward; go on, and see how these people live."

Just then a young girl came out of a room on the opposite side of the street, and looked at me. I went over to her. She invited me in. I talked to her pleasantly, and asked questions. I learned she was 19 years of age and had lived in immorality for three years. I asked if she was satisfied with that life.

The tears came to her eyes. She said she must have food and coal, and she had no other way to earn it. She then told me her sad story. Her home had been on a ranch in a western state. She left her home on account of the cruelty of a step-father, and an aunt took her in. In some way she made the acquaintance of an immoral married woman, and she led her to ruin.

Right here I would say: An immoral woman will ruin an innocent girl quicker than an immoral man will. They are not on their guard with their own sex.

Her mother cast her off at her tender age. I don't remember what city she went to. After a time, through the efforts of a mission society, she left her life of shame. She said she was never so happy as she was in the few weeks that she led a better life. She was employed in a boarding house, and the work was beyond her strength, and she drifted back to the old life.

She cried bitterly as she said: "Oh, if my mother would only forgive me and take me back, I would promise her to never look at a man again."

I tried to get her mother's address, and said I would write her. She said, "No, my mother never forgives."

Heartless mother, unworthy the name! The poor child was sadly in need of a loving mother's care.

To make a long story short, she was taken with a severe cold on her lungs, and left her room, and took refuge with another "fallen" woman who had left the old life, and was making an honest living at laundry work. So it came about that I made the acquaintance of No. 2. She was a bright, intelligent woman of about 24 years of age. From her I got several valuable suggestions.

Some of her patrons were her former associates. She said they all envied her her clean work. I asked why they did not get clean work to do. She said washing was harder work than they wished to do, and it was difficult to get other work. She showed me her poor hands, discolored by the scars of several blisters.

Is it not a disgrace on our boasted civilization, that when a "fallen" woman wants to reform the doors are closed against her, and scarcely one helping hand is reached out to aid her?

This woman said if one desired to reform an outcast, never to upbraid them, nor look upon them with disdain. It made them angry and one could have no influence over them.

But if one approached them in a kind and loving spirit, they could lead them as they willed.

Do not the last few words give the key to the reason why so many young girls employed in cities go the downward way?

The employer cares nothing for the working girl. They find no sympathy in the home. After the day's work is over, they must sit in their room, or go upon the street for company. Some man offers them what he calls love, and they accept it, following blindly, and the end is DEATH.

When one takes a young girl into the family as a domestic, they should take an interest in her, throw about her a motherly protection, and make her stay in the family as pleasant as circumstances will permit.

We will find in some future state of existence that we are to some extent, our brother's and sister's keeper.

GOD OR NATURE

The Christian Religion and Natural Ethics Considered.

To the Editor:—A friend of mine of religious proclivities, and either inclined to investigation or disposed to argument, sent me a pamphlet, or as he termed it, a tract, written by himself, requesting my opinion as to whether from a biblical point of view he established his position, and also asking me to give him my ideas in regard to the Christian religion. In reply I wrote him a lengthy, and yet comparatively limited exposition of my views on the subject. JEPTHA G. DUNLAP.

San Jose, Cal.

Dear Sir:—A very long time ago, comparatively speaking, I received a letter and pamphlet from you. It has been so long since, that even if you have not quite forgotten all about it, it must seem a little strange to receive a reply at this late day. But I make it a rule, so far as possible, sooner or later, to fulfill all my epistolary obligations, and this does not happen to be one of the exceptions which prove the rule.

Since your letter reached me, I have passed through many physical tribulations and more than once have been on the waters of that misty stream which veils the brighter and better land from this. This, for one thing, must account for the fact that you did not hear from me within a reasonable length of time. In fact I once did write at great length, my views on the subject to which you called my attention, but was unable to finish, so that after all it counted for nothing.

After such a lapse of time—not knowing where to lay my hand upon your letter—I do not feel that I can fully meet the requirements of the case, but I will try as briefly as possible to present the matter proposed by you, in such a way as to cover any and every phase of it.

As to the tract, my recollection is that you probably proved your point; but why not? Every other victim of an idea on that basis does the same. Catholics, Presbyterians, Methodists, Unitarians, Universalists, Adventists and many others are able to produce evidence from the same source to substantiate their views. Slavery, anti-slavery, polygamy, monogamy, all find ample justification in that peculiar and eccentric book. And what is the significance of this? Simply that a book admitting so many interpretations, so many antagonistic conclusions, is no authority for anything, and cannot by any possibility be the inspired word of an infinite intelligence. Therefore in all questions of moral, social or religious ethics it should be set aside in favor of natural, scientific evidence. But instead of discussing, enlarging upon or demonstrating these very evident statements, as I should so much like to do, I will for the sake of brevity, pass on to other features of the case.

The simplest and most effectual way to settle this whole question of orthodox Christianity is to begin at the fountain head. Let us therefore consider the meaning of omnipotence as applied to the supposed author of the universe or in other words, to Jehovah. Omnipotence embraces everything. Omnipotence means all responsibility. An Omnipotent God must be the originator of everything that is, must be all in all, must reign over all and direct all. Nothing can exist or occur contrary to the wishes of an omnipotent creator. These propositions are too self-evident to require discussion. Let us now make some practical application of them. If Jehovah is responsible for all things, if he is all and in all, if he is the origin of all things, if he reigns over all, it follows that he is the author of sin or evil, as emphatically stated in Isaiah XIV, 7, and other places. If by the fruit of a tree it may be known, then especially must an omnipotent author of evil himself be evil. Omnipotence meaning all responsibility, Jehovah could not, can not transfer responsibility to his creations. In all the universe such an impossibility could not be. It is evident, then, that Jehovah, not man, is responsible for all the sin, all the mental and physical agony, in short, for all the deep and damnable excruciation to which mankind is subjected. If Jehovah is omnipotent and reigns, as in that case he must, every den, every dive, every saloon, every place of iniquity must exist as a part of his plan, must exist because he wishes it to exist. If he did not wish it to exist he would prevent it, and, being all in all, it is but a part of himself and a responsibility of his own. It is needless to think of a God who is not the cause of all things, who is not responsible for all things; and to me it is equally absurd to think of a God who is responsible for things as they exist in this life.

Omnipotence essentially means predestination, not alone in one sense, but in all; and in view of all the unknowable, inexpressible evil that prevails, in view of an eternal hell to which Jehovah's victims are unjustly assigned, it is the most inexecusable, horrible, atrocious thing that has ever been ascribed to any being.

As to the pretext of those who seek to exonerate Jehovah from the stigma of predestination but admit foreknowledge, it is evident that predestination and foreknowledge are practically the same; for what Jehovah knows will occur will as unavoidably take place as if predestined; and knowing that it will occur, he also knows that he arranges the conditions for its occurrence, and that, after all, is predestination. So in the case of Omnipotence, predestination and foreknowledge are one and the same.

It is vain to try to escape either the responsibility for or the odium of predestination as ascribed to Jehovah by his devotees. Twist it this way and twist it that, and by no possibility can an omnipotent God who would arrange the affairs of the universe to accommodate so wicked a scheme, be exonerated when he could as easily create a condition of peace and happiness for every living thing; not only here, but every where, not only now, but evermore. It was better to have no God than to degrade one's self in worshiping a being to whom is, and inevitably must be ascribed such attributes.

To the thinking, unbiased mind, the effort to justify Jehovah by transferring his responsibility is profoundly ridiculous. Were it possible under omnipotence for man to be responsible for the characteristics and inclinations imparted to him and thus have freedom of will, he would be in a position to defeat God's will, which is simply absurd. If an omnipotent creator who reigns in the minutest particular, could impart to his creations any degree of free will, he having arranged all the conditions and planned all the events, would be infinitely responsible for all that resulted from such freedom of will.

Were it possible for a man to desire that which an omnipotent creator does not implant within his being—that which is contrary to the designs of omnipotence, this omnipotence must and would prevent the accomplishment of that desire; and here again there can be no freedom of will. If Jehovah has established a universal law, and there is a universal law, how can man be free? The fact is that the idea of man's free will and his responsibility for what he is, is a fallacy; for whether we impute to an infinite designer, the origin of man or whether he is to be regarded as simply a child of Nature, he does not make his individuality and environment which lead to what he is and what he does; and, therefore, cannot be free.

According to the orthodox Christian position, Jehovah creates every day people with evil propensities, when, being omnipotent, he could as easily create them so naturally good that they would never go astray. That he does make some naturally good and others naturally bad, no Christian will deny. The one deserves, then, no commendation and should receive no reward for being good; while the other deserves no condemnation and should not be damned for being bad. What right has Jehovah to create a being and then punish him for being what he has made him? Some people, like Paul, when they can find no other excuse for their beloved Jehovah, assert that he has a right to do as he pleases with his own. That simply means that might makes right. It is simply one way of saying that if Jehovah sees fit to be cruel and unjust, he has a right to be. And generally it also means, so long as Jehovah saves me and damns the other fellow!

According to the orthodox idea Jehovah is responsible for that cruel, fiendish law of nature by which the innocent suffer for the guilty—by which the iniquity of the fathers is visited upon the children. How any Christian can be so deluded, or if not deluded, so depraved as to attribute to the being he professes to worship, such injustice as this and predestination, is almost beyond conception.

Another feature of Nature which if it could be imputed to an infinite intelligence, as it is by the orthodox, would be the acme of cruelty, is that law by which through martyrdom the human race has progressed—that condition of adversity which under the natural law is essential to advancement—that law by which through pain and suffering a few reach a higher plane while by it the great majority (?) are cast down to rise no more—cast down as it were to eventually form a footing above the quicksands of life for those who come afterwards. What a stigma it would be upon an omnipotent creator who could as easily arrange that peace and happiness would be the means of advance, so arrange that every living thing would be free from pain and grief, were he to choose in preference, the law of suffering.

But if I exonerate Jehovah and fix the responsibility for all these evils upon Nature, perhaps you will ask how Nature can be responsible when Jehovah is the author of Nature and all her laws? Well, if he is the author of all things he is of course responsible for all things; but it is not by any means necessary to suppose that he is the first great cause of everything that is, and if I loved him I would try to find for him, some way out of this disreputable tangle in which his professed friends have placed him.

But you may ask how Nature could exist without a creator? Let that question be forever settled by the fact that if nothing can exist without a creator then Jehovah cannot exist. Further, it may be well to add that the creator of a thing must be greater than the thing created. It is therefore easier to conceive that Nature, being inferior could exist without being created, than that a supposed creator, superior in every way, could exist without a cause. The only rational conclusion seems to be that the universe was not created—that it had no beginning and will have no end. This is the idea which the advanced thinkers of the day entertain.

No matter, however, whether we turn to the idea of a creator or to that of no creation, we are confronted by the greatest of all mysteries—the existence of something without a cause—a mystery which we will never be able to solve here or hereafter, though we exist eternally. It should, however, be a cause of congratulation that by the theory of no creation, we relieve Jehovah or any Infinite Intelligence of the ignominy which would attach to the author of all the evil, all the mental and physical pain and all the iniquity which pertains to this life, when he could as well have chosen an order of things under which all would be undiminished happiness. It is also a matter of congratulation that by this means we establish ourselves as the children of Nature, learn where our interests lie, and comprehend the importance of studying and conforming to her laws; knowing that if we violate them we cannot evade the penalty, vicariously or otherwise; knowing that while Nature has provided hell enough for the best of us, we are relieved of that infamous invention of a malignant God or man, an eternal hell of fire. By the natural law we pay the penalty and learn to do better, by the orthodox theory we never get through paying the penalty, and can never have an opportunity to do better—an existence simply wasted in useless and eternal pain. We may also felicitate ourselves that being the children of Nature she will care for us in a natural way, not only here but hereafter.

Here it would be well to consider the relation of so-called orthodox Christianity to the advance of civilization and the existing state of morality, but it is a matter of such breadth and the evidence so profuse and suggestive that it is discouraging to enter upon it and deal with it in the restricted manner which I must now impose upon myself. Like so many others, you have, I presume, been educated to regard the church and its doctrines as the only way to salvation and the most assured source of moral advancement; but if you will give the subject a moment's thought, you will probably admit that it is a little strange that with an omnipotent God at the helm, arranging and directing affairs, morality through all the dark ages has been, and at the present time is, at so low a tide; and this in spite of the fact that for nearly two thousand years the church, claiming to be aided and abetted by Jehovah's almighty arm, has failed to rectify the evil which prevail. In viewing this, one would naturally conclude that the term omnipotence was wrongly applied to Jehovah, and that he was so restricted in power that he could not arrange a better condition of affairs or that he is unable to control the forces which he set in motion, or that he preferred the cruel way by which sin and misery abound, or that the doctrines held and taught by the church are radically wrong.

The church accomplishes a certain amount of good, that is, if anything standing in the way of something better can be said to do good. What good it does accomplish is plainly on natural principles; there is nothing supernatural about it. Its most potent feature for restraint; if not its most elevating, is the doctrine of an eternal hell. Fear of this leads a certain class of people into the embrace of the church. But fear is a degrading influence. Whoever refrains from evil through fear has still an evil heart which sooner or later gets the best of him. But this doctrine of eternal damnation is the corner-stone of the church. Remove it and the fabric would crumble to ruin. And yet in the light of advancing thought it is being rapidly eliminated from the minds of the people. Even the pulpit now descants but little upon its evident inconsistency and horror. That feature of the church which accomplishes the most good is its social character. So far as it expects and demands natural morality of its members, it may do good, but even this influence is greatly abrogated by its religious inculcations; such as vicarious atonement and simple faith.

Now let us look at some of the reasons why the church in all these ages has failed. First it requires a system of religious beliefs and ceremonies which it makes paramount to the natural law—to science and philosophy, making morality and conformity to the the natural law of no avail unless associated with these inconsistent observances.

Second, it takes for its foundation a book so plainly, so positively contradictory that the unbiased, thinking mind refuses to accept it, and even the more advanced youthful intellect of the present day gives it a clear cut rejection or else doubts—not to be "damned," but sooner or later to arrive at the truth. Unfortunately such minds if brought up under religious influences have had but little training on scientific or natural principles, and are thus left like a ship without a rudder, to drift upon the stormy sea of life.

Third, the doctrine of atonement is responsible for more iniquity than any other belief that at present suggests itself. Show me the man who believes that absurd impossibility, in the church or out of the church, and does not in consequence of it commit sin, and I will show you an angel materialized. One of the most wicked men with whom I have been thrust in contact believed that doctrine, and told me that sometime he expected to join the church and get to heaven, but that in the meantime he intended to follow the bent of his inclinations and enjoy himself.

Fourth, the idea that faith is essential to salvation meets with opposition from the logical mind who is so in harmony with the natural law that he understands the complete efficiency of good works without faith which Nature yields to all who conform to her. Whether Nature be the offspring of some infinite intelligence or not, the laws governing the universe have full sway not only now but hereafter—not only here but everywhere, and the good that man does, the morality that he observes, the law must and will reward. The idea that morality without faith will avail nothing in the hereafter is absurd; for there is no hereafter which is not a part of the universe and subject to its law, and the law responds to goodness and to every good deed as well as to evil and and to every evil deed.

THE MOTHER WAS THERE.

A Savior was born quite a long time ago—
Or so the old legend continues to go;
But whether a fable or whether a fact,
Has little to do with a certain greatact:
If babe was e'er born to breathe the earth air—
A Savior or sinner—the mother was there.

Though God-like or sinful and born out of fame,
To every true mother the babe is the same.
Once seen and once coddled, asleep on her breast,
Her life is illumined, her soul is at rest.
Though Christ was a Savior, when babyhood care
Demanded attention, his mother was there.

Give Jesus due credit for miracles wrought,
And all the "glad tidings" to earth he e'er brought;
Aye! shout with loud voices his high, holy name,
And give him, for virtue and goodness due fame,
But do not forget in the worship and prayer,
That Mary, his mother, was certainly there.

Though born to be mighty or humble and low;
Though born amid riches, or squalor and woe;
Though born well and active, or dullard in mind;
Though born full of love, or of hate for mankind,
With her sacred office of life, sweet and fair,
In love, pain and patience, the mother was there.

Now let us be just unto all humankind;
Give credit to all for virtues we find;
Be candid and honest, be noble and true,
And help all our fellows to bear their loads through;
Help every brother to bear his full share,
But never forget that his mother was there.

DR. T. WILKINS.

A LITTLE WAY.

A little way to walk with you, my own—
Only a little way.
Then one of us must weep and walk alone
Until God's day.

A little way! It is so sweet to live
Together, that I know
Life would not have one withered rose to give
If one of us should go.

And if these lips should ever learn to smile,
With thy heart far from mine,
'Twould be for joy that in a little while
They would be kissed by thine!

SEE TELEPATHY IN RESCUE.

Miss Stewart's Parents Tell of Mental States in the Search—Mother Heard "Thoughts" Saying, "We Are Alive in the Boat."

Did telepathy play a part in the rescue of Miss Zelda E. Stewart and her escort, John Charters, after they had drifted aimlessly in an open boat with but one oar for forty-one hours?

Did some mysterious sixth sense tell the father of the lost girl that she was still alive long after many had given up all hope?

Did a strange psychic power carry the Christian Science "thoughts" from the daughter in the lost boat in the open sea back to her mother in the home in Irving Park?

Did an omniscient power through the great over-soul hear and answer the prayers and supplications of Catholic, Protestant, Jew and Dowieite that were offered for the safety of the young couple?

These are the questions that are being discussed now at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ethelbert Stewart, 2299 Forty-first court, Irving Park.

When it was known Monday morning that Miss Stewart and Mr. Charters were lost in the lake Mrs. Esther Falkenstein and many friends of the young woman and her parents at the Armitage settlement, 783 Armitage avenue, offered fervent prayers that the lost couple might be found alive. In this settlement are Protestants, Catholics and Jews. Miss Stewart has aided in the work at this settlement and she has been training a chorus of fifty children for a concert that was to have been given last Tuesday night. It was on Tuesday afternoon that Miss Stewart was saved. Instead of the concert at the settlement a thanksgiving service was held.

Dowieites Pray for Rescue.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. Stewart was informed by a letter written the day before from Zion saying that the Dowieites had held services and offered special prayers for the rescue of her daughter. Besides she received letters and telegrams from many individuals assuring her that prayers had been offered for the safety of her daughter.

Mrs. Stewart, the mother of the young woman, is inclined to believe that the doctrine of Christian Science has its virtue. The members of the family, even to the smallest son, 13 years old, have some of the teachings of this cult familiarized.

"All day Monday, Monday night and Tuesday morning, when the prospects of finding the lost couple were very dark," said Mrs. Stewart yesterday afternoon, as she sat beneath the shade of the trees in the yard at home, "I could hear distinctly the Christian Science 'thoughts" saying: 'We are safe and alive in the boat.' Even the children would come to me and say: 'Mother, Zelda and John are safe, for we can hear it.' And then with all the prayers that I now know were offered I can hardly believe it possible, for the couple to have been lost forever. It is plain that some mysterious power worked for good.

"But what convinces me of this fact now is that both John and Zelda tell me that they both repeated many times this saying: 'We are safe and alive in the boat.' And this is the saying all of us heard here. It may be telepathy, or call it what you will."

Remarkable Phases in Search.

"I realize that there are some remarkable phases to the finding of my daughter, considered from the psychological point of view," said the father of the young woman yesterday. "After the long search on the beach Monday and Monday night and no word from the lost couple I felt my hope wane. Intellectually, I had given up the thought of finding them alive, but something seemed to whisper to me, nevertheless, that they were alive and were drifting in that boat out in the lake. Now, living a block from me is Theodore Wiese. I had never spoken to him, as we were not acquainted. But I remembered seeing some boats piled up by the side of his house at one time. The thought occurred to me as my son and I were walking down the street Tuesday morning and I saw Mr. Wiese coming out of his house. I spoke to him and asked him if he could tell me where I could get a fast launch and how I would go about it, as I wanted to find my daughter and her escort.

"'Yes, this is Mr. Stewart, isn't it?' he said. 'Your daughter is lost in the lake, I hear. Well, you have struck just the right man in me to get a boat. Now, you rest, and leave this whole matter to me and I will start a fleet of small craft in search of your daughter immediately.'

Wiese Has Spirit of Hope.

"I impressed on Mr. Wiese's mind my thorough conviction that my daughter and her escort were floating alive in the boat in the lake. He seemed to catch the spirit that controlled me. I soon learned that of all men in Chicago Mr. Wiese was the one who could get the fastest launch, the Erin, owned by Captain T. H. Bullock, and more, too, he was commodore of the Chicago Power-Boat club, and could start a fleet in search in short order. Commodore Wiese met his friend, Captain Bullock, later and told him what he wanted to do.

"'Why, there is not a chance of finding that couple,' said Captain Bullock. 'I think there is an equal chance of finding them alive,' replied Commodore Wiese, 'and we will start right now and we will find them, too.'

"Commodore Wiese had caught my spirit so thoroughly that he just felt that he would find the missing couple and his conviction could not be shaken. Captain Bullock then joined in the search with a vim. And it is well known how they sailed out several miles and met a steamer from Muskegon, the captain of which said nothing had been seen in the wake of his vessel. The Erin then veered eighteen miles east, clear out of the beaten path of the steamers, and found the little boat with my daughter and Mr. Charters."—Chicago Chronicle.

SMILES.

There are smiles of mockery, smiles of disdain,
Smiles of defiance, smiles of pain.
There are smiles of bitterness, smiles that are glad,
Smiles of sorrow, smiles that are sad.
There are smiles of pleasure that light up a face,
And the social smile full of grace.
There's the smile means happy, a smile means joy,
The brazen smile, the smile that's coy.
There's the smile from lips only—made in haste,
The smile of deceit, the smile of bad taste.
The peaceful smile, the smile of unrest,
The smile that's cursed, the smile that's blessed.
But there's no smile will win, below or above,
Like the sweet, tender smile, full of love.

KNOW YOUR MISSION

As Teachers of Spiritual Truth and Knowledge.

There are millions and millions of hungry and thirsting souls on this earth longing for truth and knowledge, i. e., spiritual truth and knowledge, in regard to their own soul-life, future existence, life of spirits, spirit return and the ruling of the unchangeable spiritual law in this natural world. For all the doctrines and teaching of the various denominations and sects can not fill their hearts' desire. And as long as these fellow-men and women, of whatever clime, country, nation, color, race or tribe are without this truth and knowledge, they are not only in a state of error and ignorance, but also at unrest and unhappy, and can not go on in soul character-building on the road of spiritual progress.

Be these mortals yet children of nature, half barbarians or civilized, it is all the same with them to a certain degree; and dreadful it is to state that the mind of the so-called civilized and advanced nations and peoples is often the most perverted. But they all need the truth and knowledge to think and to do right. The various sects of many countries send out missionaries, especially the so-called Christians, to convert the heathen nations. But as these pseudo-christian-teachers do not understand the mission of the great reformer and master, Christ, they neither understand his doctrine and therefore cannot teach it. If they were real missionaries of truth and apostles of the gospel of Divine Love, they would not need swords, rifles and quick-firing guns to protect their physical life and to uphold their teaching. It is not compassion that leads these men into the mission field, but misconception. Blind leaders, often without a spark of true charity, unless they would not hiss curses and damnation at those who do not receive their adulterated doctrines with favor and—horror! asked their government for armed intervention.

Christians? Counterfeiters of Christ's life and teaching, that was a life of love and charity and a doctrine of truth. He, Christ, and the christian teachers! what contrast! He taught: love one another. They envy one another. He, Christ, taught equality and united co-operation. They envy one another and are divided into schisms. And these poor self-conceited teachers want to have, or say they have the power to make saints, forgive sins, redeem from hell and are themselves in the hells of ignorance. A devil in ignorance and a satan in the mire of falsity, claims to have the power to make saints! Where would the human race go to, if it were not for the blissful truth and light of Spiritualism? This power, as it has worked in the ages of the past and in the future, will change conditions still more favorable till this good light shines everywhere. And encouraging it is, these forces are waking up and arousing human minds everywhere. They begin to see gradually and to start thinking. It has lifted science, it has improved social conditions, it has weakened the spirit of dominion and oppression in a decaying church, that never was a church of unadulterated truth.

Adulterated food! Adulterated food is harmful, dangerous to physical health and well-being. Truth perverted, causes still more deplorable conditions, as it concerns the well-being of the soul. The body is only the soul's covering. The soul is the acting man. Reason, think! Strive for truth, work for the truth! It will emancipate humanity! If this is understood, then we grasp for it with both hands as the great redeeming blessing; hold it fast to our hearts with a grateful soul. Then those whimpering and quivering platform and rostrum lamentations will at once and for all the time, stop and cease. Fear! quaking about opposition or undeserved slander!

Pshaw!

Spiritualism is the sole truth, the only truth, the whole truth, the eternal, universal truth, and therefore it shall, it must, it will prevail by the divine law of nature's order!

Impressed, imbued and inspired of this to the depth, the innermost of one's soul-life, such a person will grow strong, good and wise, and will develop favorably, also grow in courage. Fear? Sadness? Discouragement? Doleful lamentations coming from the mouths of Spiritualists or mediums? What an incompatible condition for a spiritual teacher expounding the truth! Never! As we have such a host of friends around us strengthening, leading and teaching us on our walks of life and in performing our duties faithfully.

If this is the vibrating thought, the underlying leading principle of our souls, how gladly, how willingly and cheerfully will angel and spirit friends come, guide, impress and inspire us in our life, in our work, in making progress that we be wise, become pure and wise to understand and enlighten others. Then it will be a pleasure to push on and work. There will be fidelity, patience, forbearance, consideration. We will have and take time for our own self-development that we may be able to aid others. Then, we will meet with success, will be able to draw, to give satisfaction, instead of the contrary. And last, but not least, no departed spirits will have cause to accuse us of misleading or of having neglected our duty when we meet them on the other plane.

L. C. KOEHLER, Ph. D., M. D.

THE GRASS WILL GROW OVER YOUR HEAD.

Would you win in the battle of life, my friend,
And reach the bright goal of success?
Then up with the standard you've vowed to defend,
Nor ever to weakness confess.
It may be so willed, that you fight but to-day,
And die ere the victory's complete—
The grass will grow over your head some day,
Don't let it grow under your feet.

The load may be heavy, the road may be long,
And your cup may be none too sweet,
But follow the way with a lilt and a song,
And a "Hail!" for pilgrims you meet.
Keep pace with the moments fast speeding away,
For the race will be to the fleet—
The grass will grow over your head some day,
Don't let it grow under your feet.

There's no time for despair, nor repining,
'Tis foolish to turn and look back;
If you can't get along without whining,
Clear out and give others the track.
Don't loiter! Move lively! Step forward, I say,
The future with courage to greet—
The grass will grow over your head some day,
Don't let it grow under your feet.

A Discarded Teaching of Jesus.

The very general dissatisfaction in regard to popular religious creeds is shown by the constant multiplication of new sects, each having an amended feature from all preceding sects, and each dropping out of sight some other feature which was formerly deemed cardinal. The Catholic is the only church which seems stable. It is "the same yesterday, to-day and forever." Rooted in paganism, and moored to ancient dogmas common to barbarianism, it cannot advance. The Greek Catholics, the state religion of Russia, was an offshoot of Roman Catholicism in the eighth century. With the renaissance, and the revival of learning and the arts in the 15th century, after the long sleep of a thousand years, when Luther came to the front with his reforms, there seems to have been but slight difference in opinion, and that difference, when it found expression, was terminated by force.

Since then some 1,200 varying sects have sprang into being, each claiming the Bible as its infallible guide, and each quoting texts therefrom which seem to sustain the new faith.

One important teaching of the dear Master, possibly the most important of all, has been wholly discarded. And that, "Take no thought for the morrow." When the ruler approached Jesus and inquired what he should do to inherit eternal life, and showed he had kept all the commandments, and even honored his father and mother, yet Jesus told him: "Thou lackest one thing. Sell all thou hast and give to the poor." Without doing this the unfortunate ruler had no treasure in heaven.

Where are the Rockefellers, the Morgans, the Rothschilds, ah, the humblest citizen who is in possession of worldly goods? They have no claim on heaven until they sell all they have and give the proceeds to the poor.

Where the church that has made this inculcation a basic principle, and has been founded upon the words of the loving Jesus? There is not one. The only persons who will voluntarily become members of such a church, should one be founded, are the tramps, who, like the Master, bewail their hard fortune, having no place to lay their heads, less fortunate in fact than the birds of the air that have nests, or foxes that have holes.

A Thinker Who Thinks.

That fellow, Elbert Hubbard, the Roycrofter, at East Aurora, N. Y., seems to be an original genius. In his "Little Journeys," article "Haeckel," we find many good things. Here is one:

"How a death-bed can be 'glorious' for a man who has perfect faith in his own salvation, and an equally perfect faith in the damnation of most everybody else, is difficult to understand."

And here is another:

"It is not all strange that men are better than their religion. They drag their dead creeds behind them, like a stage coach, with priests and preachers on top; kings and nobles inside; and coffins, full of past sins, in the boot. A man is always better than his creed, unless, perchance, he makes his creed new every day. 'Hand-me-down religions' seldom fit. Professional theology is mostly a dealing in old clothes."

Let us join with Mackey and sing:

"Rags and tatters, get you gone, get you gone."

Hubbard publishes "The Philistine" semi-occasionally. In a late issue he gave his opinion of Religious Revivals. We will try to make room for it at an early day, for the delectation of our readers. It will keep.

A Well Known Fact.

Rev. Dr. Buckley, of the Methodist, in an address at Chautauqua, N. Y., recently, declared that a clergyman had no right to make his congregation laugh, concluding with, "Yet there are a good many clowns in the pulpit," a fact most of us discovered years ago.

Justice to Paganism.

It is a well recognized principle in ethics, that we have no more right to suppress a truth, than we have to promulgate a lie. He who wilfully does either justly incurs the censure of all honorable men.

A lie gains nothing by age. If a lie was a lie yesterday, it is a lie to-day, and will remain a lie forever. It matters not how many aid in giving currency to a lie.

Though a whole generation, or a thousand generations repeat a lie, if it was false in the beginning it is false still; and however earnestly believed by all, yet it is a falsehood deserving correction, and truth should be substituted in its place.

For ages the Christian world has taught that the old Egyptians, they who built the pyramids, reared the obelisks, mummified their dead, and protected them with such tender care from decay, were polytheists, worshipers of many gods; and those gods they said were false gods, as distinguished from the Father who presides over all, the true God, whom Christians profess to adore.

This teaching was and is false. The Egyptians had but one God, with many attributes. Each attribute of that one God had its representative as has our God, whom we mention by a multitude of names. It would be as just, possibly more so, to charge Christians with being polytheists as to so designate the ancient residents in the valley of the Nile.

Do our Christian readers demand the proof? They shall have it from one of their own number, from Rev. Geo. Rawlinson, professor of ancient history in Oxford University, author of the "Seven Great Monarchies," and of "The Religions of the Ancient World." No one will question his scholarship, or his orthodoxy. It is a pleasure to cite such authority. We quote from the latter work, published in 1885, by John B. Alden, New York, p. 31:

"Below the popular mythology there lay concealed from general view, but open to the educated classes, a theological system which was not far removed from pure 'natural theology.' The real essential unity of the divine nature was taught and insisted on. The sacred texts spoke of a single being, 'the sole producer of all things in heaven and earth, himself not produced of any,' 'the only true living God, self-originated,' 'who exists from the beginning,' 'who has made all things, but has not himself been made.' This being seems never to have been represented by any material, even symbolical form. It is thought he had no name, or, if he had, it must have been unlawful to pronounce or write it. Even Ammon, the 'concealed God,' was a mere external adumbration [shadowing] of this mysterious and unapproachable deity. He was a pure spirit, perfect in every respect, all-wise, all-mighty, supremely, perfectly good.

"Those who grasped this great truth understood clearly that the many gods of the popular mythology were mere names, personified attributes of the one true Deity, or parts of the nature inspired by him."

Prof. Rawlinson cites numerous authorities, by way of notes, confirming each of his statements, which we omit, as they who have not access to the great libraries cannot confirm them by an appeal to the records.

Most strange of all, the evidence is incontrovertible, that these same Egyptians whose theology has been so shamefully misrepresented, comprised a recognition of the doctrine of the Trinity. Cudworth, in the 17th century, maintained this; but this position for a time was controverted. Renouf, however, in his "The Religion of Ancient Egypt," abundantly confirms Cudworth's discoveries. On page 130, of his Hibbert Lectures, Scribner & Son's edition, Renouf is very pointed in this statment. As the Sun, under an Egyptian name, was the material representation of the Supreme God, he bore one name at his rising, another at noon, another at his setting, quite equivalent to the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, each independent of the other, and yet identically the same God.

Is it not possible the founders of the Christian system, who we know made heavy drafts on what they term paganism, borrowed their idea of the Trinity from Egypt, without the mental capacity to grasp the nice distinction the pyramid- builders made, by which they counted one as three, and the three as one?

Without elaborating, the whole so-called pagan systems of religion have been falsified, as has the Egyptian, and in a similar manner and for the same purpose, to magnify the Christian faith, and minify that from which theirs was stolen. Not a single feature in the Christian system can be named, but its parallel can be found in paganism, and antedating the founding of Christianity.

The Bludgeon and Prayer.

An Associated Press dispatch from Muskegon, Michigan, of August 8, relates the following:

"Enforcing his prayers with a club brought conviction on the charge of wife beating to Henry E. Rozema. His wife testified that when hunger compelled her to protest at the length of his grace before meals, he attacked her and beat her with a club."

That was muscular Christianity with a vengeance, a survival of the inquisitorial age. It is questionable if the God of Moses, with all his brutality, would approve of such procedure.

Whose Good?

A great uprising of the Chinese, as we learn by telegram from Shanghai, is now on in the province of Honan against Christians. It is said 20,000 rebels are in the field, and they are being augmented daily. The Chinese government is doing all in its power to quiet the agitation.

The Christian missionaries will be responsible for all the blood which shall be shed in the great strife. For whose good the attempt to force a religion on an opposing people?

Death of Dr. J. C. Phillips.

On August 23, at 6:30 in the evening, at Mt. Pleasant Park Camp, Clinton, Iowa, Dr. Phillips passed to spirit life. He was at the well for a pitcher of water when he suddenly expired. He was a man of generous impulses, and an excellent psychometrist and healer. For many years he had been a steady attendant at the camp.

"The Attainment of Womaly Beauty of Form and Features. The Cultivation of Personal Beauty, Based on Hygiene and Health Culture. By twenty physicians and specialists. Edited by Albert Turner." Of especial interest and value. Price $1.

Ministerial Pessimism.

That a preacher of the old-time orthodox type, one of the kind that used to believe implicitly in the doctrine of endless hell-fire torments for the "wicked," which "wicked" comprised the vastly larger part of mankind—that such a preacher, or layman should ever smile or burst into laughter, were a strange anomaly in human mentality. Smiles or laughter on the part of such a believer would denote either strange forgetfulness of an impending horror, or impervious callousness to the fate of humanity.

Whilst the old and horrible dogma of endless damnation has largely lost its power in these days of modern progress in thought, there yet remain lingering remnants of the old style ministerial lugubriousness, preachers who deem it a part of their professional propriety to wear long, solemn visages, speak in doleful, sepulchral tones, to impress their hearers with the tremendously solemn import of their message to the world.

The results of this are not always of an uplifting and spiritualizing nature, and sometimes, indeed, are definitely tragical.

For instance, so stated in the Chicago Chronicle, almost at the same moment that a Chicago preacher was making the declaration that a Christian can not become a pessimist a New York policeman was taking from the pocket of an individual who had committed suicide a newspaper clipping with the caption, "Pessimistic views of life by clergymen who think it has little joy."

If it be true that a real Christian can not be a pessimist the fact is a severe arraignment of a large percentage of the ordained guides and teachers of Christianity. Perhaps there is less pessimism in the pulpit now than in the earlier days of the church in this country when the prevailing doctrine was that the degree of happiness to be attained in the world beyond was in direct proportion to the amount of unhappiness experienced in this life.

With due allowance, however, for the cheerfulness that has been infused into Christianity by the practical philosophers among the clergy, pessimism is still a characteristic of the Christian pulpit in America. This is due in part to the temperament of the individuals who enter the ministry, many of whom are grave, solemn-visaged, mournful-looking men, thoroughly imbued with Christianity in the abstract, but lacking the faculty to give it any practical application to the affairs of life. These are the teachers who would destroy all the joys of this life in the belief that it will lead to a greater inheritance of the joys to come.

But these sincere, though mistaken pulpiteers seem to be less responsible for the prevalence of pessimism in the pulpit than another class of preachers who, seemingly to gain notoriety and emphasize their self-righteousness, take advantage of the liberty of their calling to attack the reputations and assail the motives of others—in other words, the so-called sensational preachers, whose sermons too often are mere diatribes and vulgar denunciations of wealth, social position, political success and other practicalities of life.

Instead of using the achievements of successful men and women as examples and inspirations, the sensational preacher holds them up as warnings. His hearers are told that practically all of the achievements of life which appeal to the ambitions and natural impulses of mankind are only failures—dead sea fruit. Before every path that leads to human happiness in this life he erects a "danger" sign.

In this work of deadening ambition and wrecking the faith and hope of his followers he is ably assisted by the sensational preachments of the yellow press. The sensational preacher and the yellow editor teach in common the doctrine that all so-called success in life is failure, that the acquisition of money is a species of dishonesty, that social position is a form of immorality and that high political preferment is but a means to tyranny and oppression. They reverse all of the tenets of moral philosophy, close the door of ambition and shut and bar the gateways of faith and hope in mankind until their hearers wander out upon the bleak and barren desert of despair to live in prolonged misery or to end it by self-destruction as did the New York individual, who evidently had been instigated to the act by the "pessimistic views of life by clergymen who think it has little joy."

EXPLAINS SPIRITUALISM.

President Barrett Declares His Is the Only One of the Several Religions That Can Be Proved—Declares God Never Created a Soul to Be Destroyed.

Harrison D. Barrett, president of the National Spiritualists Association, delivered the principal address at the Spiritualist camp-meeting at Surprise Lake yesterday. The big tent was packed and many gathered around the outside walls to listen.

Mr. Barrett is a scholarly speaker. He tried in one brief hour to tell what Spiritualism is. He started by saying that there are two classes of thinkers, Materialists and Spiritualists. The latter class contains all of the so-called Christians and church members. The Materialist believes there is no God, and the Spiritualist believes there is.

Mr. Barrett said many are surprised to learn that Spiritualists believe in a God.

The speaker explained that many persons abuse Spiritualistic knowledge, making it a means for cheap and sensational shows. He said he had known mediums, after giving a seance, to dismiss the spirits by saying: "That's all for to-night, spirits; hustle out of here." Such a remark he branded as irreverent.

He said prayer is to the soul what exercise is to the muscles. Prayer is high thinking—the lifting of the soul above common surroundings.

No Soul Is Lost.

Mr. Barrett taught that Spiritualism is not so different from other religions, except that it can be proven, while other religions cannot. Heaven is where and what we make it, and hell is where and what we make it. Death is but the graduation of the soul from the body. The soul does not go away to some great unknown place, but it remains near those it loves to comfort them until they, too, shall have graduated. The soul which, while in the body, learns great truths, is but the more fitted to enjoy the life after death. No soul is lost. The great Infinite which, for want of a better name, is called God, never created a soul to be destroyed, he declared.—Tacoma (Wash.) News.

CRIME LET ALONE, WILL INCREASE

Eternal Vigilance Is the Price of Purity and Honesty in Spiritualism.

To the Editor:—N. H. Wilson in the Chicago Record-Herald, presents some serious reflections, setting forth that the recent developments in Philadelphia, Milwaukee and other large cities, the Equitable Life Assurance disclosures, the Town Topics scandal and the New Orleans epidemic, all clearly show that eternal vigilance is the price of political and financial integrity, social purity and public health.

All stagnant waters soon become impure. ANY CESSATION OF THE ACTIVITIES OF LIFE INDUCES DECAY OR THAT STAGE OF DISEASE WHERE FESTERINGS, PUTRIDITY OR OTHER CORRUPTIONS PREDOMINATE. The reason why diseases have their special seasons is because at those seasons certain conditions favorable to their propagation most naturally occur. If in certain decades office-holders become more venal than in others it is because at such times the PEOPLE ARE NOT VIGILANT. We wait for filth to accumulate until an epidemic results before we clear it away; for venality to become rampant before ordering the court surgeon to operate upon corrupt officials; for vice to become flagrant before attempting its suppression, and then we lay the blame at the doors of others. Evil schemes devised in secret; evil acts performed in the dens of great cities; robberies under cover of the law; impure thoughts stimulated and vile slanders circulated under the pretense of social portrayals do not impress the public with their evil significance. It is only when the light of publicity is turned on that their baneful tendency is fully realized. Then the horror of them shocks the nerves; their stench offends the senses; the sight of them produces a revulsion of feeling toward them and all kindred acts.

Few stop to think that they are to blame for such conditions—but most are. If every one was vigilant, political venalities, financial irregularities and social immoralities could not exist to any great extent. If every one would clear up their own premises the whole city would be clean. IF EVERY ONE WOULD EXAMINE HIS OWN ACTS AND KEEP AN EYE UPON THOSE OF HIS COMPANIONS THE FIRST BEGINNINGS OF CRIME WOULD BE DETECTED AND CRIME PREVENTED. If each one would keep his own morals pure and use his influence with his associates social purity would be the rule. If each would demand a continuous knowledge of what is being done with property he intrusts to others it would not be misapplied.

Many publicists prefer to use the dark lantern whereby they may turn the light upon others while they, themselves, remain in the dark. Many officials who are compelled to turn on the light for public scrutiny are extremely anxious to use such a lantern.

Nevertheless when the light of even the dark lantern is turned on some of it will be reflected, and any careless handling of it may change its direction and disclose more than was intended. If we are mindful of the condition of the public mind just now we shall hasten to clear up our own premises and adjust our conduct to the new conditions which are sure to be brought about. By so doing we shall no longer fear the turning on of the light, but rather welcome it.

When a thorough cleansing has been effected and our eyes are no longer offended by the corruption and debauchery that has been effaced WE SHALL BE SURPRISED TO DISCOVER HOW MUCH OF BEAUTY, VIRTUE, AND HONESTY THAT HAS BEEN QUIETLY WAITING FOR AN OPPORTUNITY TO REVEAL ITSELF.

The above from the Chicago Record-Herald contains many pregnant truths. Purity and honesty on the part of officials can only be induced by constant vigilance. Leave them without watching and they will STEAL THE PUBLIC POOR. Leave the ranks of Spiritualism FREE FOR EVERY TRICKSTER TO ENTER, CURB OR SUPPRESS ALL CRITICISM, DON'T TALK FRAUD FROM THE ROSTRUM, OR IN THE PAPERS, HOWL DOWN EVERY ONE WHO EXPOSES A TRICKING MEDIUM, and in two years' time Spiritualism would lose the respect of the civilized world. Pursue the same course that the government does in trying to suppress counterfeiting, or adopt the plans of different clubs for civic purity, and apply the same to our cause, protest all the time against trickery and counterfeit phenomena, and artificial toggery to cover spirits, and our cause can be kept passably clean and pure, but not otherwise. In the language of the immortal Ingersoll, "LET US BE HONEST." ANXIETY.

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

To Be Held in Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

The thirteenth annual convention of the National Spiritualists' Association will be held in the First Unitarian Church, Eighth street and Mary Place, Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

Among those invited and expected to participate in the exercises are Rev. Dr. Austin, Will J. Erwood, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, Oscar Edgerly, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Mesdames. H. P. Ressegue, R. S. Lillie, Laura G. Fixen, Eva McCoy, Margaret Gaule Ridinger, and a galaxy of others.

Come one and all to the greatest Spiritual convention ever held.

Special railway rates on the certificate plan can be secured over all lines. Ask your railroad agent for certificate tickets to the National Spiritualists' convention at Minneapolis; the round fare will be one and one-third of a fare. Delegates and visitors desiring to receive the benefits of this special rate must have their tic[illegible] vised by our railroad agent at convention the last day, October 20, and pay 25 cents each for such vising.

Hotel Nicollet, a first-class hotel on the European plan, will be headquarters of the convention. Special rates for good rooms, one dollar per day each person. Write and secure your rooms from Shattuck & Wood, proprietors of the Nicollet Hotel, Minneapolis, Minn.

The annual reception to delegates and visitors will be held at the First Unitarian Church, Monday, October 16, at 8 p. m.

All are cordially invited. Admission free to all meetings.

The Lights the Biblical Writers Saw.

Newly Discovered Emanations From Human Body Said to Be the Lights Which Biblical Writers Saw---What a Scientist Says About Experiences of St. Paul and St. John of the Cross---How Character Is Revealed by Strange Colors in "N"-Rays, Which Are Now Classified.

The process employed in the experiments is that known in the psychic world as psychometry, or "soul-sensing," the hypothesis being that the psychic emanations from us are so subtle as to penetrate and permeate anything which we handle or wear, as for instance the paper upon which we write our letters, or any article of jewelry worn. By holding in the hand such a letter, any one who has psychic vision is able to sense the vibrations in it; such vibrations taking the form of color and indicating the general surroundings, character, etc., of the writer.

One by one modern science has advanced reasons to explain various unaccountable things in the Bible. It is claimed that the miracle of the manna in the desert is explained by the discovery a few years ago of a manna plant which grows in the desert, that the miracle of the burning bush can be witnessed by anybody in Syria, where a peculiar plant bursts into flame and yet continues to grow afterwards, that the bringing of the dead to life and even the resurrection itself are accounted for by suspended animation, while the healing of the sick, the curing of the leper and the restoration of sight to the blind by the laying on of hands, were done through hypnotism.

The most remarkable of all these alleged scientific explanations of apparently superhuman occurrences in Biblical times is now to be disclosed. It is nothing more nor less than the statement that the halo, the mysterious aura or strange effulgence of light from the human body, which is again and again testified to by Gospel writers, was in fact the mysterious N-rays about which the scientific world is now excited. St. Paul testifies that a great light shone round about him, which he believed came from heaven. A strange light also radiated at times from the countenance of St. John of the Cross.

Leaving aside the figure of the Savior, there are numerous instances in the Scriptures where these mysterious lights surrounded the face or the body so that they were seen by many people. The testimony in regard to these lights is of such character that it has been generally accepted that the lights existed. But up to the present modern science has been unable to explain how they could have come in any natural way. It is this fact which makes the explanation now advanced very striking, and it is being discussed with eagerness by many scientists and theologians in St. Louis. Is it possible, ask these gentlemen, that the mysterious N-rays lately discovered as a result of radium, formed the lights which St. Paul thought were of heavenly origin? Can it be true, they ask, that these luminous phenomena which so puzzled people in the time of Christ were merely the operation of a natural law? These and other questions concerning the matter are attracting much attention in religious circles.

No less remarkable is the claim that every person emanates N-rays by means of which the character of each may be readily deciphered, and that the colors of the rays in each case change in accordance with the schedule given below.

The N-ray primarily discovered by Charpentier of Paris is a strange nebulous emanation of the human form, discoverable by the use of an instrument known as the biometer. At the same time every one cannot even then see these rays, but must either be of a peculiar constitution himself or in such a condition at the time of his investigations that he is receptive.

Dr. Stenson Hooker of London confesses that the element, or principle, or whatever the N-rays are, necessitate a scheme of investigation combining the scientific and the clairvoyant. At any rate, a sensation has been caused in medical and scientific circles by so prominent a man as Dr. Hooker giving such importance to the matter. Dr. Hooker's own account of his investigation among the N-rays.

BY DR. STENSON HOOKER.

The earliest record I can find of magnetic emanations from man occurs in an epic poem of Ramayana, written some 2000 B. C. As some of your readers may be unfamiliar with the account, it will perhaps not be amiss to give it in full.

A monarch of that time was passing through a forest with a number of his soldiers and came upon a hermit in his solitary dwelling. After giving the king such hospitality as the place could afford the hermit asked if he could bestow upon him any further gifts, and the king replied: "Nothing more, unless it be the friendly emanations of your eyes." The expression, in the light of our present-day knowledge of human rays, is full of significance and potent with suggestion. Even if the incident thus roughly outlined had no foundation in fact, the poet must have known of the presence—aye, and of the virtue and value—which lay in what we now know as personal magnetism, more correctly magnetic rays.

Taking a long jump across the rivers of cosmic time, and coming down to the days of our own New Testament, we have there many instances recorded of light being seen around individuals. Leaving out from motives of reverence the consideration of the halo which is often depicted around Christ, we have the case of Paul—"And suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me."

It seems to me not unreasonable to suppose that this radiant light was merely a manifestation of rays issuing from himself; in his case the rays being intensified to such an extent that they were obvious to those round about him who, together with Paul himself, naturally, perhaps thought they came from "heaven."

So, with regard to many of the holy ones of the past. It is told us in Butler's "Lives of the Saints," respecting St. John of the Cross, "A certain brightness darted from his countenance on many occasions, especially when he came from the altar at prayer."

In Sherwood's "Motive Powers of the Human System" are described some experiments made by eminent physicians of that day (about 1846) with a hypnotized clairvoyant girl. She was utterly ignorant of even the rudiments of anatomy, yet could see and describe all the organs and nerves of the body, and the light vibrating from these nerves. When asked, "How do you know there is any motion along the nerves when you move your arm?" the girl replied, "It looks lighter when it is moving along the nerves."

There we have a clear perception and a clear description of rays which have been recently discovered and named N-rays. Baron Reichenbach, one of the most eminent scientists of Austria, made the discovery that a fine force issues from all known elements and substances and appears in beautiful lights and colors which can both be seen and felt by persons whom he called "Sensitives."

In our own day we have an instrument known as the biometer, first invented some fifty years ago. This shows beyond the possibility of cavil that some kind of rays at all events are admitted from us. In this simple instrument a carefully and delicately poised needle is suspended in a glass jar over a graduated dial. The hand of the patient (palm toward the instrument) is held within an inch or so of the glass jar which contains the poised needle. The latter swings round to a certain figure on the dial, and according to the number of degrees the needle moves, and the direction it takes, the physician is able to gauge the vital force of his patient. I have recently procured a biometer and hope to substantiate all the claims made for it by Dr. Baraduc and others who have been working with it.

However that may be, it is at all events acknowledged now that the rays emanate from all substances, organic and inorganic, and it would indeed be passing strange if our living, active, vibrant physical organization were the exception in this universal law. All things have, at one time or another (including radium), absorbed from the great source of light itself, and all will give that light out again.

Granting, then, that rays of light are projected from us, though these rays are only visible to those who have, owing to a finer organization—a finer sense of vision—it follows that they have a spectrum, just in the same way that appertains to the ordinary ray of light, which we all know can be split up by a prism into its component colors; and it would appear to me only logical that the human body acts as a prism and splits up the light which has been absorbed by it into different hues, and that one or two of these hues always predominates, according to predominating influences.

I have made some three hundred experiments to test this question for myself so that my experience has at all events the merit of being first-hand. I went into the matter with a perfectly open mind; have prejudged nothing, and certainly have precolored nothing; have endeavored in every way to shut out any ideas of guesswork or self-deception; have sought only the truth, and now if anyone comes along and proves to me that the whole thing is a "baseless fabric of vision," I am ready to bow myself out and to acknowledge my wrong assumptions. At present I have not the shadow of a doubt as to my own conclusions.

The process employed in the experiments is that known in the psychic world as psychometry, or "soul-seeing" the hypothesis being that the psychic emanations from us are so subtle as to penetrate and permeate anything which we handle or wear, as for instance, the paper upon which we write our letters, or any article of jewelry worn. By holding in the hand such a letter, any one who has psychic vision is able to sense the vibrations in it, such vibrations taking the form of color and indicating the general surroundings, character, etc., of the writer. There are other hypotheses to explain the gift of psychometry, but we have not space now for consideration.

The experiments were conducted with letters from all sorts and conditions of men—those of exalted degree, those of low degree; men of intellect, men of no mind at all; good people, bad people. What I sensed was dictated by me to my wife at the time. The letters were handed to me while I had my eyes closed, so I had no knowledge as to who was the writer of the letter I happened to be handling. The results thus obtained were profoundly significant and truly remarkable. I invariably saw a good color when dealing with a good person, and a bad color from a bad person, with the exception that illness or other temporary conditions overshadowed an otherwise natural hue. My experiences were carefully tabulated and classified, and may be put briefly in concrete form as follows:

DARK GREEN—Bad conditions somewhere, it may be on the physical or mental plane. Among my tests were seven lunatics. Five of them threw off the dark green, and the other two muddy dark gray rays.

LIGHT BLUE—Generally a quiet, thoughtful, devotional character; not necessarily very intellectual.

DEEP BLUE—Deep thought; I have found this in scholars, eminent members of the medical and clerical professions, etc. Perhaps this will account for the idea of a "blue stocking!"

PURPLE—A very intellectual character as a rule; often intentional or "psychic." I have seen this color around the highest intellects. The late W. E. Gladstone, for instance; here it was very profound and decked with bright gold colors.

GRAY—Varying from a light to very dark. Anxiety, fear, depression, mental illness, great dread. If very dark, approaching black, impending death. A great number of my patients have nervous affections, and this gray or dark green is invariably present.

YELLOW—Refinement of mind, love of art; fair intelligence; pleasant surroundings. The hue varies from an extremely pale yellow to orange yellow, according to the spirituality of the person or the mere human elements of the character.

ORANGE—If dark in tone, there is pride, ambition of a worldly nature; if light in tone the motives are good; there is desire to progress on good lines; aspiration is there.

LIGHT BROWN—Persons living on an ordinary plane of life without any special virtue or marked vice; many worthy members of the working community throw off this color.

DARK BROWN—The essentially common, vulgar mind, without any redeeming quality. This often shades off into quite a muddy chocolate hue, in which case the individual is thoroughly debased. Muddy thoughts—muddy rays.

DARK RED—Irritability, earthliness, bad temper.

LIGHT RED—Versatility of mind and thought, generally. Essentially human, a well-meaning person, but if the hue is quite scarlet, passion is shown.

ROSE PINK—An affectionate person, unselfish, even philanthropic. The one who throws off these rays is one who tries to do good and be good.

LIGHT GREEN—Versatility of mind and thought generally. A well-meaning person, often of a progressive bent of mind. I have often seen this associated with the yellow, and should trust such an individual as living along right lines.

I have by no means forgotten that man is a complex being, and that the conditions under which he lives are also often complex. The complexity is indicated by the rays he emits. For instance, I have often seen the case of a patient that the physical for the time being completely overshadows the natural characteristics. The dark green and the pink, for example, may be seen struggling for the mastery. The man of noble ideals may throw off the deep red of passion, but behind that one can sense a light pink endeavoring, as it were, to make its way to the front.

There is also often seen a blending of color, such as mauve, amber, gray-blue, magenta, red-purple, etc., etc., all indicating a mixture of conditions and characteristics. Again, there may be quite a variety of hues at different times in the same person—erratic character, erratic hues. Indeed, I know one lady who is so many-sided that the rays she emits change in hues like those of the chameleon, but on the other hand, the stable, equilibrated, strong character, almost invariably has stable, definite, unchanging hues, apart from the temporary conditions of illness, etc. I have, for instance, obtained a yellow ten times in succession from one friend; in another I have seen the pink eight times in succession.

It is most interesting to watch the changing colors over a period of years, as the character and conditions change from bad to good or the converse. One friend who has entirely altered his life and trend of thought by my advice on mental philosophy, threw out ten years ago quite gray and rather dark green rays. In the course of time he emitted a lighter green, sometimes with yellow spots; later on, pink with gray—the latter due to some anxiety. Now I invariably get a bright pink. In other words, he is in a constant state of aspiration, of cheerfulness and in a brighter thought world altogether. He is living so that "each to-morrow finds (him) further than to-day."

Space forbids me to enter upon the many side issues connected with this fascinating study. Innumerable questions at once present themselves to the thinking mind in connection therewith. If we absorb light, color must be absorbed, for is it not a potential part of light? May there not be a big field here for the progressive physician to experiment in, in the way of prescribing certain colors to be worn in certain cases; to extend the idea of having differently colored wall papers, etc., in different cases of illness, as is, I believe, already carried out in some asylums and sanitaria?

Again, are human rays curative? Is this the explanation of the cures wrought by "laying on of hands?" May not the knowledge of these rays be made educative and helpful to many? and so forth.

There are more rays in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in our philosophy, acknowleged by our scientists, or believed in by our people generally, and it only remains now for advanced thinkers to focus and concrete all this knowledge of these rays in order to make it ancillary to mankind in many walks of life; to the physician in his stern fight against diseased humanity; to the teacher and preachers in their endeavors to lift men out of the mires and marshes of a deadly materialism by showing them that there is a great Immaterial world of Being as well as a material one; that the things invisible are as real and as potent—and perhaps have more permanency—than the things visible.—St. Louis (Mo.) Oregon State Spiritualist Association.

The State Spiritualist Association of Oregon will hold its convention, beginning on Saturday, September, 2, on which date the business session and election of officers for the ensuing year will take place.

We hope to have a prosperous session and trust the coming year will bring better results than we have had in the year just closing.

During the past year charters have been issued to McMinnville, Cottage Grove, Medford and Portland, by the State Board.

In many ways the work during 1905 has been encouraging and the signs of the times point to renewed activity in general throughout the state by societies, lecturers and mediums.

All organizations vie with each other in their efforts to keep none but honest workers before their audiences and for that reason Oregon has little occasion to cry, "fraud."

I trust the new board of officers for the State Association will do better work for the cause than has ever been done by any board in the past, and that Spiritualists everywhere will in all ways possible give to them every assistance in their power.

EXCELLENT TESTS.

The Slates Were New, and Carefully Wrapped in Paper, Yet a Message Was Written Thereon.

On June 2, while still in Oakland, Cal., Mr. E. J. Hoyt read of Fred P. Evans, a world-famed psychic, who has a mountain home near San Francisco, and parlors in the city where he gives readings, so Mr. Hoyt wishing to get a reading from Evans, crossed the bay from Oakland to San Francisco and called at the Evans home, on Eddy street. Before leaving Oakland, Mr. Hoyt had stepped into a bazaar or small shop where he purchased a pair of slates of a peculiar size, and cutting off the cloth binding which held the slates together, Mr. Hoyt washed the slates; marked them with a private mark so he would be proof against substitution, and wrapping the slates in paper which was held in place with rubber bands, Mr. Hoyt took them with him to San Francisco and had the package under his arm when he called at the psychic's home.

As Mr. Hoyt was ushered from the parlor, where he had been waiting, into the reader's room, a man who had received a reading passed into the parlor and sat down there to transcribe on paper the slate messages he had received. Mr. Hoyt paid no more attention to his looks or general appearance than to any stranger he'd meet at such time and place. Mr. Hoyt, after entering the reader's room where he seated himself on one side of a large, plain table, seemingly with a poplar top, unvarnished, Mr. Evans, the reader, sitting in a chair on the opposite side of the table, explained to Evans that he had brought his own slates. Evans made no objection to this. The slates which the medium was in the habit of using for the reception of spirit messages were of much smaller size and of different appearance than those Mr. Hoyt had provided.

Mr. Hoyt explained that he brought his own slates to prevent any deception. He wanted to be sure there was a square deal. Evans replied that while this was all right that he had some rights in the matter, too, and while the visitor was privileged to guard himself against deception, Evans wanted to do the same. He said: "I'm from Missouri, too, and I'll watch you just as close as you watch me to see that there isn't any job put up!" With this mutual understanding the reading began.

After sitting a moment the medium said: "Hoyt! Hoyt! I hear the name of Hoyt!" Mr. Evans seemed to be puzzled and in a moment he said to Joe, by way, seemingly, of explanation: "Sometimes peoples' magnetism gets mixed." After a moment's wait the medium again repeated the name "Hoyt, Hoyt," and acted as though he was nonplused. "Well, what's the matter with that?" queried Joe from the opposite side of the table. The medium stared at Joe and asked with astonishment: "Is your name Hoyt?" "It is," answered Joe, and the medium plainly showed his astonishment.

He then explained his surprise by saying that the man who had just left the room, who had been given a reading before Joe was named Hoyt, and when Joe, a total stranger entered on a reading and the medium could hear nothing but the name of "Hoyt," he could not but think that a bit of the other visitor's magnetism had remained in the room.

This was a most strange happening, and the medium remarked to Joe that the other Hoyt was about Joe's age and had lived much the same sort of a life. Joe queried how the medium knew this, and Mr. Evans replied "by psychic intelligence or discernment." Mr. Hoyt was interested in the man who had preceded him and remarked that he'd like to talk with him after the reading, so Mr. Evans stepped to the door of the parlor and told the other Mr. Hoyt who was still busy copying messages that if he'd please remain till the man who was getting his readings was through, the man would like to talk with him. Joe's reading was then resumed.

Joe had kept the slates he had purchased in Oakland and which were still wrapped in paper, held by rubber bands, under his arm all this time, never letting them get away from him. When the reading was resumed Joe laid his slates, still wrapped up, on the side of the table nearest him and kept his fingers on the edge of the package. Mr. Evans picked up three of his own slates, both sides being perfectly blank, on the table in one, two, three order. He then reached over, seized Joe's slates by one corner of the wrapped package and threw them out into the center of the room, six or eight feet away, where the package lay on the carpet nearer to Joe than the medium. Joe remarked: "That's all right, the farther away from you the better!"

While Joe's package of slates, still wrapped in paper, with rubber bands around, lay on the carpet several feet away, the medium had Joe pick up the three smaller slates that had been lying on the table between them, perfectly blank slates when they were laid there. The first slate picked up had the beginning of a neatly written message that started out, "My Dear Son," the second slate was picked up at once, then the third slate, then a fourth, fifth and sixth as rapidly as they could be laid face down on the plain-topped table and picked up again. The message which was from Samuel Hoyt to his son, covered the six slates, and the phraseology of the message was in old Mr. Hoyt's peculiar style and choice of words.

A seventh slate, perfectly blank, was laid on the table and when Joe picked it up, immediately, the under side bore a message from "Guide Bolands," who is Joe's Hindoo control in the spirit world, or his cabinet chemist as Mr. Hoyt calls him. This message was written on the slate in seven colors, and told Joe that Guide Bolands would appear (materialize) before him in his cabinet when he got home.

After the seventh slate had been read, Evans, the psychic reader, stepped to the center of the room which was perfectly light, it being mid-day, and picked up from the carpet where they had been lying, Joe's slates, still tied in paper as they had been when Joe left Oakland. Handing the package to Joe, Evans commanded him to unwrap the package and see if there was a message. Joe did so, and after the rubber bands had been taken off, the paper wrappings removed and the double slates, which bore Joe's private mark, were opened, there was a beautifully written message signed, "Your Brother, Warren Hoyt." Joe's brother Warren passed out of this life forty years ago. Joe brought all these slates back with him, the six containing his father's message, the one from his guide "Bolands," in seven colors, and the double slates with his brother Warren's message. All these slates were shown to The Traveler reporter yesterday.—Arkansas City Daily Traveler.

"Wedding Chimes." By Delpha Pearl Hughes. A tasty, beautiful and appropriate wedding souvenir. Contains marriage ceremony, marriage certificate, etc., with choice matter in poetry and prose. Specially designed for the use of the Spiritualist and Liberal ministry. Price 75 cents.

LOOKING INTO THE FUTURE.

Most people are given to prophesying more or less. They sometimes hit the truth, and sometimes miss it. Occasionally the predictions are recorded; but generally, when repeated, they are recalled from memory and related often with artful, frequently with undesigned additions or omissions, to make them correspond with events which have occurred. When predictions fail, and the failure is evident, they drop into forgetfulness, except when they are skilfully modified or twisted out of their original meaning, and ingeniously applied to events never thought of by their authors. They prove failures generally, in proportion to their circumstantiality and particularity of statement.

Yet we all possess, in some degree, the power to foresee coming events, to penetrate the veil which separates the present from what shall be, to mingle with the forms of an unborn age. With people generally, this power is very limited; but sagacious minds, who have made some group of physical phenomena or some field of mental activity a special subject of study, can often forecast the future in respect thereto with such precision that their judgment carries weight, and their opinion, for instance, in regard to the weather or the crops, or election, business prospects, or the chances of peace or war, is highly valued.

The statesman, the philosopher, the far-seeing man-of-affairs, may have powers of prophetic vision which to the ordinary man appear to transcend human sagacity.

When Lincoln, in one of his famous speeches, said: "This nation cannot remain permanently half-slave and half free," he spoke from knowledge that freedom and slavery were antagonistic, and that the complete triumph of free institutions involved the extinction of that system of bondage which arrogantly claimed the right to extend its area and influence.

When Rousseau said, "We approach a revolution," he foresaw that the wretchedness and increasing discontent of the oppressed people of France would lead to violence and the probable overthrow of the corrupt government.

Predictions like these merely show the power of reasoning from cause to effect. We can foresee events in proportion as we understand the relations of things. As the past is related to the future by links of cause and effect, by antecedent and consequent. These links can be followed, in many cases, with certainty. An eclipse of the sun or moon can be predicted to a minute, even to a second. Whether the eclipse will be total, partial, or annular, what part of the sun or moon will be covered first, how long the eclipse will last, and from what parts of the world it will be visible,—all these facts can be accurately told years and centuries ahead of the time of their occurrence. Such foreknowledge is acquired by observation and reasoning.

Is there a power of foreseeing what cannot be learned by observation and induction? Something apparently prophetic is seen in the instincts of animals. One generation anticipates the needs of the next. Under the mysterious influence of instinct the lower forms of life seem to show wonderful foresight in providing for the sustenance of offspring which they shall in some cases never see, as if to compensate for their not being allowed to have personal care of them.

The instincts of some of the lower animals are, in regard to changes of weather, more unerring than is the reasoned thought of man. They are sensitive to influences which elude our search. The hedgehog fortifies in its cave with unfailing precision, against the coming storm; and stormy petrels collect in the wake of a ship before a storm.

The first suggestions of warnings of storms on our coasts were those of Dr. Merriweather, at the Exhibition of 1851, when he showed a living barometer, consisting of leeches, which rang little bells when a storm was impending. Certain plants, like the "poor man's weather-glass," shut up their petals before a rain storm. Not only flowers, but the leaves of plants, give warnings of approaching change.

Some persons are so sensitive to electrical and magnetic changes which precede a thunder storm that they have foreknowledge of the storm when there is not a cloud visible in the sky. They do not know how they obtain this knowledge. In some way, they are affected by vibrations to which most people are not susceptible.

Our conscious intelligence is not our entire mental life. Our discursive reason is not the only faculty by which we reach decisions. All who have carefully examined the powers of "mediums," or "psychics," or who are familiar with the results of psychical research, are satisfied that there are some supernormal means of obtaining knowledge. The experiments of Prof. William James of Harvard University, of Prof. Oliver Lodge of University College, Liverpool, and of Dr. Richard Hodgson and others with Mrs. Piper, may be mentioned among those which prove, beyond doubt, the reality of this power. It is manifested in clairvoyance and telepathy and, apparently, in what is claimed to be quite as well attested,—supernormal prevision, which, it is alleged, may be indistinct, vague, or may take the form of a clear conception and foresight of a definite future event, may relate to important events or to those of apparently a trivial character, may be a mere apprehension or a conviction of certainty.

Cicero speaks of "that which does not take place from supposition, observation, or well-known signs, but arises from an inner activity of the mind in which men are enabled, by an unfettered advance of the soul, to foretell future events."

The testimonies and illustrations in regard to this prophetic and premonitory power, both ancient and modern, are very numerous; and it is not uncommon to meet intelligent and trustworthy persons today who relate personal experiences implying foresight beyond that of the reasoning mind. In the writer's knowledge there was a circumstantiality in the statement of what was to occur and did occur which precluded the possibility of the correspondence between the prediction and the occurrence being a mere accident or coincidence.

Zschokke, in his autobiography, speaks of a "singular case of prophetic gift, which," he says, "I call my inward sight, but which has ever been enigmatical to me. I am almost afraid to speak of this, not because I am afraid to be thought superstitious, but lest I should strengthen such feelings in others. And yet it may be an addition to our soul-experience, and therefore I will confess."

Prof. Sherer relates that a company at Stockholm put Swedenborg to the following test: "He should state which of the company should die first. Swedenborg did not refuse to answer this question; but, after some time, in which he appeared to be in a profound and silent meditation, he quite openly replied: 'Olof Olofsohn will die to-morrow morning, at forty-five minutes past four o'clock.' By this predictive declaration, which was pronounced by Swedenborg with all confidence, the company were placed in anxious expectation; and a gentleman, who was a friend of Olofsohn, resolved to go on the following morning, at the time mentioned by Swedenborg, to the house of Olofsohn, in order to see whether Swedenborg's prediction was fulfilled. On the way thither he met the well-known servant of Olofsohn, who told him that his master had suddenly put an end to his life."

A remarkable prediction, to which credit has been given by modern writers of high character, is that of M. Cazotte in regard to the French Revolution. The principal record is that of La Harpe, a learned and upright man. The prediction was particular and circumstantial. Jung. Stilling says, "I can prove that the story is literally true in letter and in spirit." Countess Genlis wrote, "I have heard it related a hundred times by M. La Harpe before the Revolution, and always in the same form as I have read it in print, and as he himself caused it to be printed."

Lacretelle, in his "Histoire de la Revolution Francaise," says, "Many philosophers, if the singular recital of La Harpe is to be believed, had reason to remember Cazotte when death came upon them; for he had foretold how each one should die, and he predicted, also, his own sad end." This story of La Harpe is credited as true by Stilling, by Gregory in his letters on "Animal Magnetism," and by Atkinson and Martineau in their letters on "Man's Nature and Development."

The most careful investigators of the life of Jeanne D'Arc have failed to discover any trace of mental or bodily disease in the maid, "unless we call her premonitions a sign of disease." The premonitions have been called "the expression of military and political genius," which, acted upon, revived and reunited France. They were not manifestations of the maid's conscious mind. She could not believe that such a destiny was before her, and she resisted the influence which urged her on as long as possible. "I am a girl," she said, "and have no skill to ride and fight. Rather would I have been torn to pieces by wild animals than have gone into France, but for the voices. For to fight is not mon etat; but to sit and spin beside my poor mother." Even to the last, according to the priest who confessed her, and stood by her on the pyre, "she averred the divine origin of her voices, and denied that they had deceived her."

Mrs. Mowatt Ritchie, in her autobiography, states that, when in the mesmeric trance into which she was thrown during her illness, she made accurate predictions as to the times when she would be well or ill.

Henry G. Atkinson, who was an investigator of mesmerism and kindred phenomena some sixty years ago, and who used mesmerism as a therapeutic agent, wrote to Harriet Martineau as follows: "To the philosopher the spirit of prophecy, the growth of a blade of grass, and the ordinary perception of any object are all equally wonderful and deeply mysterious, beyond our faculty of conception, and out of the very nature of knowledge. That such exalted conditions do exist is now so clear a matter of history and daily occurrence that no one need trouble himself to convince those who persist in ignorance and doubt of what is so notorious. None know better than yourself how these clairvoyant powers have been manifested in a variety of forms, in all periods of history and with all nations. We know that future events are seen in dreams and in trances, and by some apparently in the ordinary condition of their lives. We know that some can see distant objects without the use of the eye, and that others can see, so to speak, through opaque objects, reading what is written in a closed book, and even the thoughts which are passing in the mind of another. We know that many under mesmerism can describe any diseased condition in themselves and in others within the sphere of their vision; that they have an instinct of remedies, when a crisis will occur and the cure be effected."

Mr. Atkinson was a materialist, or he called himself such; but he recognized "the existence of faculties in man beyond sense experience and reason,—which faculties are chiefly called forth under abnormal conditions, but are seldom exhibited in a wholly pure state." Such experiments as are described and such facts as are narrated in Mr. Atkinson's letters, for a long time discredited by official orthodox science, are now familiar to well-informed readers, especially to those acquainted with hypnotic experiments in France and with the records of the English Society for Psychical Research.

Such experiences as I have mentioned, with which history and literature abound, and which, according to the testimony of thousands, are not uncommon to-day, would seem to indicate that there is a faculty, or power, of foreseeing supernormally, apparently distinct from the power of collecting facts and making them data for conclusions reached by inductive reason. It belongs evidently to our subliminal nature.

Instead of inferring what will occurr from what is observable, it perceives the event or becomes conscious that it is impending, in what way no psychic has been able to explain. A lady of character and education, unknown to the public, who has occasionally had glimpses of the future of her life, as she positively states, with the circumstances and proofs, writes: "I may say that it is entirely above and beyond my own control, and that I cannot command it at will; also that I have only been able to exercise it in connection with my own affairs. For some time before the power awakens, I feel very restless, nervous or irritable. Then the future event flashes into my mind with the vividness of lightning, and gradually fades away again, leaving me in the depths of low spirits."

The words of Herder seem to be warranted: "A few examples of foresight and presentiment have disclosed wonders of the treasures which lie hidden in the soul of man. That, for the most part, these phenomena are the result of disease and of disturbed equipoise of the faculties does not change the nature of the thing; for this disproportion was required to give freedom to the force and exhibit its amount." Perhaps, as W. W. Story says, there are "penumbral powers and senses surrounding our plain and definite ones which we do not understand and which we have not investigated." Of course, the most painstaking care and caution are required in examining the evidence for statements made respecting any of these alleged supernormal phenomena. Credulity, marvelousness, and lack of discrimination are, beyond doubt, very marked among many who imagine that they have premonitions and other "occult" or exceptional experiences.

PRENATAL INFLUENCE.

Importance of Knowledge and Positive Goodness.

To the Editor:—In your issue of July 29, which I have just been reading, I wish to congratulate Eva A. Cassell and her spirit messenger for their truly timely message on the value of prenatal influences. This is the most important question that can engross the minds of all true lovers of the welfare of humanity. In my own work here I have been led to emphasize these teachings. Every word is true in that exceedingly lucid and educational message.

Let the various workers of the movement study it well, for methinks Spiritualists and mediums need these teachings more than anyone else. When we come in contact with the divorced, separated, twice and thrice married and uncongenially mated spiritual workers our hearts are sad.

Instruct your sensitives, educate them in principles and strict morality and a purer movement will be the result. Stop your craze for tests and phenomena. Be orderly, sympathetic and progressive in your investigations into the realms spiritual.

Sensitives who are desirous of being workers in the upliftment of their fellows require a thorough spiritual and educational training. We speak from our knowledge of these things, not from hearsay. The whole Spiritualistic movement, to do the good it ought to do, requires regeneration and reorganization. It requires an intelligent and spiritualized body of genuine psychics to band together for the cleansing of the whole movement. Money is required for such a work, but all the money will be forthcoming to that body of people who can combine, harmonize and intelligently work the plans they would receive from the co-operation of the advanced beings in the immortal spheres.

All obsession is the resultant of ignorance and prenatal heritage. The article by Nora Batchelor still savors of her early experiences. There is too much dwelling on the evil side of spirit influence, and too little attention paid to those guardian angels, spirit guides, relatives and friends who are always ready and willing to lend aid in time of need. Do not tell me, friend Nora Batchelor, that God's laws are capable of being twisted at the will of evil spirits. You did not understand yourself, nor the condition by which you were surrounded at that time. Fear was your principal evil, and also your negative goodness of character. Do not think I am harsh and unjust; but I wish to be fair to all and I cannot allow some of your statements to pass unchallenged.

Positive goodness is virtue acquired through active principles of purity and righteousness governing the life. I will guarantee to find the cause in the process of time of every obsessed individual. Ignorance is not goodness—it is negation, it stagnates the growth of a truly righteous life. No one who is positively good like Jesus or other great spiritual examples, is ever obsessed. Obsession so-called is always the resultant of a screw loose somewhere, the non-adjustment of the individual to some important factor in the life. Positive goodness always relates the soul to a sphere of good both embodied and disembodied, which gives them all the power they need in times of difficulty. There will be no obsession when individuals are emancipated from ignorance and the inheritance of a prenatal psychologized mental condition.

Surely it is the height of ignorance to tell people that God's laws are unjust and unequal, and such must be the conclusion reached when good people are allowed to be obsessed. I defy any demon or malicious spirit to obsess an individual who is in harmony through knowledge and experience with good or divinity.

Let psychics and sensitives cultivate positive and active goodness through the understanding of the potentialities of the divinity within, and fear, demons, obsession will all fly overboard.

There is a good deal of hysteria abroad to-day, let it cease from amongst those who propose to be the educators and instructors of the people. Fear is the heritage of the animal creation; it is not the birthright of man. His is divinity, realize that divinity through the outworking of a positively good life. Be of a determined will, with absolute faith in God and his ministering angels, and your fears and doubts will be overcome. Be optimistic, for only by a supreme optimism in the triumph of good and the perfection of all, will the world be regenerated.

GIFT BEARING GREEKS.

Conscienceless Commercialism Considered From the Standpoint of Capt. L. W. Billingsley, Attorney, Lincoln, Nebraska.

Conscienceless commercialism has even invaded some modern churches. They make no effort to "drive the money changers out of the temple," but meet them at the door, with cordial greeting, and give them the best pews, under the drippings of the sanctuary and then hold out their hands for some of the "tainted money."

The great gifts to churches, colleges and charities by the captains of industry, are simply bribes to influence molders of public opinion. Their purpose is just as mendacious as the charges of "the black horse cavalry" made on state legislatures and municipal bodies. Donations to public institutions is a subtle and insidious distribution of corruption funds. The predaceous trusts fully realize that they get good returns from these business investments.

In the conspiracy of silence, to secure a whitewash of respectability for pirate donors, it is essential that hush money be tossed into coffers of churches. The Congregational board of missions gagged a little at the bowl of nutriment offered it by Dives Rockefeller, but finally gulped it down. Many colleges and churches have made no grimaces at offers of Mr. Rockefeller's loaves and fishes, but piously absorb them as God-given manna, as he has the brand of the elect.

Some of the chancellors of institutions of learning are peripatetic mendicants at the pie counters of plutocracy. This is notably true of the hungry chancellors of the universities of Leland Stanford, Chicago and Syracuse. With clinking music of gold dollars in their pockets, they are intrepid defenders of "The Gift Bearing Greeks." They are read givers of certificates of christian character to exponents of high finance and low morals, thereby maintaining the principles of reciprocity. While subsisting in the rich man's kitchen, they are no longer advocates of the Christ Gospel of right dealing between [illegible] and man. The apostles of rapacity [illegible] and in many high places. All crooks of the United States Senate, coarse and cheap, have been pinched, while the more diplomatic but not less guilty have escaped the toils of justice.

Civic righteousness is now in the mire made by the public sentiment corruption fund, while Folk, LaFollette, Jerome, Washington Gladden and others are pointing out the rock bottom of sound public conscience. The keen, far-seeing robber barons fully realize that without the aid of bribes, by way of public charities, churches, colleges, libraries, and benefactions of divers kinds, and the employment of false advocates of recreant institutions to blind the people, a cyclone of public sentiment would soon sweep away their systems of greed and lawlessness.

Mr. Thomas Lawson who almost reached the stage of death-bed repentance has in a spectacular way rendered some service to our country, by pointing out the pitfalls in the labyrinths of refined grand larceny. His lime light has revealed clever statesmen, as buccaneers of loot. With some exceptions newspapers and magazines are on the fire line for the common people in the battle of civic reform against the aggressions of plutocracy. The people are reading and thinking these days and it is only a question of time when "the gift bearing Greeks" will cease to debauch our public institutions and the people will come into their own.

THE GOSPEL OF GOOD HOPE.

The Unseen World Is Peopled With Our Allies.

And when the servant of the man of God was risen early and gone forth behold an host encompassed the city, both with horses and chariots. And his servant said unto him: "Alas, my master, how shall we do?" And he answered: "Fear not, for they that be with us are more than they that be with them."—II. Kings, vi: 15, 16.

Who has not cried out, with that youth, alas! All things are against me; foes are many and friends there are none! The roads to pessimism are many; but surely this is the shortest one, to get to think that life is but a conflict waged single handed against great odds, a long story of struggle, difficulties, pains, disappointments, temptations, failures, wounds, ending only in death.

Even though you escape that chronic jaundiced view of life there are seasons of depression when it seems easy to get out of bed on the wrong side and to plow all day into stumps instead of in the good clear ground. Ever we need the vision the seer of old gave to the young man, to see the hills about us alive with our allies. Otherwise it is easy to conclude the fates fight against us.

How slight is the evidence on which men base their gloomy conclusions! The pessimist always argues from a single instance to the general law. If he strikes a poor peach on top he throws the whole basket away—or sells them as soon as he can. He insists on sitting square on the cactus bunch when there is only one on the whole bench-land. He then becomes an authority on cactus. If he can spot a few foes on the horizon he is blind to a regiment of friends close at hand.

But the seers, our poets and teachers, have a wider vision; they seek the glory rather than the gloom and they tell us that every man has more friends than foes. This is the song of those who told us long ago of Providence, the one who backs a man up and fights on his side and furnishes him in the hour of need. This is the song of Lowell, Tennyson, Whittier and Browning. Life is not a lone-handed fight against unnumbered foes; it is not a losing fight to anyone who will fight it well.

Every force in this world works with the man who seeks the good. This is a right world and only he who fights the right faces unconquerable foes. A man may meet rebuffs, battle's tides may sweep back and forth, but in the end, as it has ever been in all the long story of man's conflict with nature, so in the conflict with every other foe he is bound to win. This is as true in the individual life of every fighter as nature and history show it to be in universal life.

On our side there is the great world of the unseen. Little do we know of it, but still that little gives us confidence to believe it is peopled with our allies. Our fairest hopes of good angels may be delusions as to details, but they are essentially true, being born of eternal truth.

The gospel of good hope declares there is One over all, the friend of all; greater is he that is with you than any against you; greater is he than your temptations, your adversaries, your difficulties, and your sorrows. This was what the great teacher came to tell men, that God was on their side, seeking to help them, loving, caring, co-operating, leading them into the life of victory over every enemy.

Let a man face life in this confidence and he is invincible. He goes forth and an unseen army goes with him. He gains the seers vision to see even the plotting of the enemy and the forces that fight against him all working for his good. From many combats he gains strength for the decisive struggle. All things work together for good. He serves the right, the truth, the things that are eternal; he fights for character, for manhood, and the good, and the eternal forces that rule the universe fight by his side. He beholds the hills full of the hosts of heaven; though he has no time to enjoy the vision he knows they are there, his allies, his assurance of ultimate victory.—Chicago Tribune.

CLEAR CASE OF OBSESSION.

He Had a Fierce Battle With a Spirit.

My room adjoined that of my father. He had been troubled with bad dreams, over which he would constantly brood. He claimed that an impending evil was hovering over him, but when I laughed at his fears, he only shook his head.

One night I retired rather early. I usually fall asleep immediately, but on that night I tossed restlessly. At length I fell into a state of half-consciousness, when I was aroused by a shriek proceeding from my father's room.

I jumped out of bed and rushed into the room. The sight presented to me made my blood run cold. There in the middle of the room stood my father. His hair was dishevelled. His face was pale, and his eyes were bulging from their sockets.

He was wildly clawing the air, and hoarsely crying: "Now, now, I will kill you, curse you. I say I will not die." Then in a frenzy he rushed about the room striking and clutching at the empty air. I made a step toward my father, but before I could intervene he gave a frightful yell and fell to the floor.

At the same instant a shadowy form brushed past me, and, gliding to the door, which I had left open, slammed it shut. For a moment I stood transfixed with terror. Then, rushing to my father, I laid my hand on his heart. Life had departed. He had burst a blood vessel. ALBERT LANDAU.

SCENES AT A FUNERAL.

The Spirit of Form Lying in the Casket Appears.

To the Editor:—I saw in The Progressive Thinker some time ago where a man attended his funeral services. I will give my experience in that line. About six months ago Mrs. Frank Ellis passed over, and when I came in the room in which the casket lay, she met me in the astral form. She looked as though she was in the physical form. She shook hands with me and said: "I am not in there," pointing to the casket, and told me to have her husband, father, uncle and sister meet at my house the next night, and she would be there and would talk to them. As her sister and her husband were looking over some roses to put in the casket, she selected through me a rose and said, "This is my condition; just unfolding in motherhood." She came to my house as she said, and gave them good advice.

It was about three months ago, at Mr. John Van Orsdel's home, and as the friends were laying flowers on his casket he brought a stem of lilac and said, "George," speaking to me, "this is my choice of all flowers," and laid it on his casket and said to me, "I did not know when the change was made."

REMARKABLE INVENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342R, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

Three Journeys Around the World

—OR—

Travels in the Pacific Islands,

New Zealand, Australia, Ceylon, India, and other Oriental countries. By J. M. Peebles, A. M., M. D., Ph. D. In this splendid large book Dr. Peebles has concentrated a vast amount of valuable information. It is exceedingly entertaining and readable, and Spiritualism as he found it everywhere in his travels receives due attention, making the book of special value and interest to Spiritualists 454 large pages, finely bound, at the price of $1.50.

THE WIDOW'S MITE,

AND OTHER PSYCHIC PHENOMENA.

BY ISAAC K. FUNK.

A remarkable book, of intense interest to all, whether Spiritualists or Materialists, investigators or believers.

The author has embodied in this book an account of his wonderful personal experience, and has culled from other sources the experiences of others, including scientists of world-wide repute, making a volume of great value, 588 octavo pages. Price, cloth. $2.

Can Telepathy Explain?

Results of Psychical Research.

By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage, in this book of 243 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH,

Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crockee. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

A MASTERLY WORK.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth

By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual conscious selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth, $1.00.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

To Camp Correspondents:—Notices of camp-meetings should reach this office not later than Friday afternoon to secure insertion in the next issue of The Progressive Thinker.

Will C. Hodge is now in Seattle, where he will remain until the first of October. All letters should be addressed in care of General Delivery, Seattle, Wash.

Geo. H. Brooks writes: "I am at home, 114 President street, Wheaton, Ill., and will respond to calls for funerals at any time."

The accomplished lady, Nora Batchelor (Hensley), writes: "I write to thank you for The Progressive Thinker which has come regularly to my address for the past four or five years, and to say that it is no longer necessary to send it, as I was married recently to a staunch Spiritualist who is a subscriber to the paper, Robert C. Hensley. Since the article on obsession appeared, I have received many letters from all parts of the country, some telling pitiful tales of suffering and begging for advice, others warmly commending the article. Among the latter is one from Dr. Peebles, Dr. Greer, and R. A. Dague."

Barbara Miller writes: "How very much I enjoy each number of The Progressive Thinker. I especially enjoy the thought of the article headed, 'Home Life Not Impaired Through Woman's Interest in Public Affairs.' Give us more broad-minded, spiritual women like Anna H. Shaw and Nora Batchelor. Of course, I notice the broad, noble-minded men, too; they are worthy of praise."

Mrs. M. E. Jenkins, Windsor, Canada, has open dates for fall and winter work as platform speaker and message bearer. She is endorsed and highly recommended to societies who need a thoroughly honest medium.

D. G. Hill writes: "On Sunday evening, August 20 the usual large attendance greeted the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society to listen to our esteemed coworker, Mrs. M. Schumacher. She was closely followed by her listeners as she forcibly presented the truths embodied in the philosophy of Spiritualism. She was followed with a short talk by Dr. L. C. Koehler of this city, who presented some telling truths, heartily applauded. He has promised to speak from our rostrum in the near future. The messages were given by our very dear sister, Mrs. Alice Sexsmith, who has just returned from Canada, after laying away the last remains of her aged mother who passed into the higher life listening to music as rendered by the dwellers of the spirit spheres, and our good sister, Mrs. M. McIntire; the messages given by these splendid mediums were most satisfactory. This society will open the regular season on Sunday, Sept. 3, with services both afternoon and evening, at 3 and 8 p. m. The speaker for the afternoon will be Mrs. Sexsmith, and for the evening Mrs. Nora E. Hill. The society feels amply repaid in the success of their series of summer meetings, and look forward to a successful period of fall and winter sessions, at O'Donnell College hall, South Paulina street, between Washington and Park evenue. All cordially invited."

Julia Craig writes from Indianapolis, Ind.: "The last two numbers of The Progressive Thinker are just brimful of good things, especially that of Aug. 12, containing a funeral service by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond. It is simply beautiful, and I wish I could place it in the hands of every sorrowing man and woman. I have only been investigating Spiritualism about two years, and no one but myself knows what a sweet balm of comfort and healing it has been to me. Three grown sons and daughters have passed to the other side, and a mother, sister and brother, all in the last six years, and I truly bless the day that I was led to a Spiritualist meeting. I never miss a chance to spread the good cause by word or deed."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Henrietta L. Lichtig, secretary, writes: "The Sunflower Club, the ladies' auxiliary to the Ill. State Spiritualist Association, has accepted the invitation of Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, vice-president of the I. S. S. A., to again hold a basket picnic on the grounds of the Minnetonka Club, at Lake Bluff, Ill., on Labor Day, September 4. Come everybody and bring your baskets well filled. Coffee will be sold on the grounds. Fare, 75 cents round trip. Trains leave the Wells street depot of the Chicago & Northwestern road at 8:25 and 10:30 a. m. Parties that cannot leave at those hours will find trains going almost every hour afterwards. Tickets can be purchased at The Progressive Thinker office of Mrs. J. R. Francis; at 560 East 55th street of Mrs. Isa Cross; Otto street, of Mrs. Belle Curtis; 6822 Wentworth avenue, of Mrs. Henrietta L. Lichtig. There will also be parties wearing Sunflower badges at the 8:25 and 10:30 trains to sell tickets to those wishing them. Don't forget, September 4. Come and bring your friends and have the best time of your life."

Mrs. Caird, formerly Mrs. Hanson, lately arrived in the city from Lynn, Mass., where she and her husband, Dr. Alex. Caird, have resided for the last ten years. They have been especially prominent in Spiritualism there, the Doctor having made himself exceptionally popular by his harmonizing, soul-inspiring work, and his wife by giving remarkable tests, and we shall take great pleasure in welcoming them both back to their old home, Chicago. Mrs. Caird is a most excellent medium, and had a large following and extensive patronage when living here before. The Doctor will probably be here sometime this fall, and will practice his profession. Mrs. Caird is now located at 472 West Adams street, where she can be consulted.

Oscar A. Edgerly, having concluded his month's engagement with the Grand Ledge Camp, will on Sunday, Aug. 27, speak for the society at Marcellus, Mich. On Sunday, September 3, he will begin a month's engagement with the First Spiritualist Society of Jackson, Mich. Mr. Edgerly's engagements as made for the season of 1905 and 1906 are as follows: In October he will go to the N. S. A. convention at Minneapolis, as delegate from Grand Ledge Camp Association; November and December, still open; January, 1906, is engaged with the First Spiritualist Church of Pittsburg, Pa.; February is engaged with the First Association of Spiritualists, Washington, D. C.; during March and April he will serve the First Spiritual Church of Baltimore, Md.; first two Sundays of May are engaged with theFirst Society of Worcester, Mass.; June is engaged with the society at Providence, R. I., and Unity Camp, Saugus, Mass. Mr. Edgerly will be pleased to hear from societies desirous of employing a trance speaker and test medium, during November and December, 1905, or for the last two Sundays of May, 1906. Home address, 42 Smith street, Lynn, Mass.

By some oversight an item for last week's paper was mislaid, stating that J. W. Ring, fresh from a very successful trip in California and at Clinton, Iowa, passed through our city on his way to Lily Dale, to fill an engagement there. He is doing a splendid work for the lyceums.

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "At the services of the Rising Sun Mission on Sunday, August 20, we were somewhat disappointed in not having Sister Price for our speaker, but was more than pleased to have our sister Fravel with us. She delivered one of her strong inspirational lectures which was highly appreciated by those present. Her words brought comfort to quite a few, as well as did the spirit messages given by Brother Thompson and Sister Kirchner who just returned from her vacation. Our choir as usual, rendered some very fine selections. The short talk our president gave about the High Rollers, a sect who reside in Benton Harbor, was very interesting, he having had an interview with them while on his vacation at that place. Our mission had intended occupying our new temple in September, but owing to the present occupants holding a lease, we are unable to do so until later, so we have arranged to hold our services every Sunday afternoon at 3, evening at 8, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western avenue, until further notice. Our speaker for Sunday, September 3, will be Mrs. J. H. Fravel, a highly gifted inspirational lecturer. All welcome."

Mrs. R. E. Henze writes: "The monthly social of the Psychical Research Society will be held at the home of our speaker, Mrs. Glenn C. Stephens, 3108 East 14th street, Friday, August 25. We feel that some attention should be given to the Psychical Research Society, which is chartered under State and N. S. A. Quite a number of our members read The Progressive Thinker and would like to see our society mentioned occasionally. We hold circles every Wednesday evening, instructing those present in the philosophy of Spiritualism. Our speaker is a member of the State Board of Missouri, and has done efficient work in past years. We as a society send her, expenses paid, to the N. S. A. convention as our delegate. She was delegate for the First Spiritualist Society last year to St. Louis. Her phase is trance speaking medium, being controlled by an eloquent speaker calling himself the Unknown, and one French Doctor, Deaustreaux. She has several musical guides who play all the classical and harmonies of the mundane and spiritual spheres, in many languages and voices. Several members of our society will accompany our delegate to the convention, where we hope to meet many of those whose good work we read of in The Progressive Thinker. The Sunday evening services have been abandoned during the warm weather, but will be resumed the first Sunday in October at the Ladies' Atheneum roms, corner Tenth and McGee, Kansas City, Mo."

Minnie Sharlow of Detroit, Mich., and a worker well recommended, expects to enter the field of labor again in September, and with an expectant visit to the East, Watertown, N. Y., she will be pleased to hear from every society that may be in need of an earnest worker.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Newport, R. I., Aug. 20.—The death of young Vinson Walsh, who was killed in an automobile accident yesterday, was foretold by a palmist about three weeks ago. He was aguest at a luncheon given by Miss Vera Gilbert in the villa of Charles Pierrepont H. Gilbert at Ochre Point. A palmist told the fortunes of the guests after the luncheon. When he took up Mr. Walsh's hand he declared it was no use to read the palm, as the young man would die in an accident within a month.

L. S. Burdick writes: "We believe we voice the wishes of many in presenting the name of E. W. Sprague of Jamestown, N. Y., as a candidate for president of the N. S. A., at its next annual convention."

H. H. Howe, secretary of the Psychic Research Society of Rockford, Ill., writes: "The Spiritualists of Rockford, Ill., and vicinity will hold a grove meeting at Duncan Rogers' place, 1047 N. Second street, September 3. Mrs. D. L. West of Elgin, will be the message bearer. All are cordially invited to come and bring their lunch baskets and spend the day with us. Take Second street car or Beloit car."

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, the noted platform test medium and lecturer, will, after September 1, be in Chicago, and will answer calls to lecture and officiate at funerals within a reasonable distance from the city. She will be located at No. 567 East 62nd street. Mrs. Cooley stands high as a platform test medium, and good reports of her work come from all quarters. She has been engaged in her work at Lily Dale N. Y., and Clinton, Iowa, this season.

Dr. L. H. Freedman, the Australian healer and physician of Chicago, says: "I am again at my post after a pleasant visit to Wonewoc and Vicksburg camps. I am in excellent condition for my winter's work outside of my professional duties. I am open to lecture for any society upon Spiritualism (I also furnish my own music) within a radius of 100 miles, for societies that cannot afford to pay a speaker, the society to defray expenses. At the close of my lectures I give public demonstrations of healing with extemporaneous diagnosis. Address me at my house, 3036 Indiana avenue."

Prof. Wm. Bradley, a healer, formerly a resident of this city, is back again, and is located at No. 17 Loomis street.

Maurgurite Mac writes: "On Thursday evening, August 31, Mrs. M. A. Burland will hold her regular monthly social at her parlors, 3019 Vernon avenue. A good time for all; good psychics present to give messages and short readings. Mrs. Maggie Henry, the palmist is always present to read the lines in your hands. Mrs. Burland always has some dainty refreshments prepared, and a good cup of coffee, all for 25 cents."

Mrs. C. Oswald, test medium, wishes to announce her return from the beautiful Grand Ledge camp and its sociable people. Her house at 5823 Aberdeen street, is open to friends and honest investigators of this grand truth.

Mrs. Maggie Henry writes: "On Sunday evening at the Universal Occult Society our meeting was well attended and we had a very interesting time. Our speaker, F. M. Stoller, took his subject from the audience. A number of very instructive questions were asked, and answered by his guides. They also answered a number of personal questions at the close of his lecture. Mr. J. K. Billis gave some convincing messages through his control, Wyandotte. All are welcome to our meetings."

The eighth annual encampment of the Ottawa (Kans.) Spiritualist Association will convene Sept. 15 and continue to the 25th. Mr. Will J. Erwood, Bessie Bellman, Mrs. A. L. Lull and Mrs. Edward Connelly are principal speakers. A long list of mediums and camp workers will attend and instruct in the various capacities as Spiritualistic workers.

President Barrett passed through the city last Saturday on his way to fill an engagement in Maine.

Lily M. Thiebaud writes from San Diego, Cal.: "I have been at the Escondido (Cal.) camp-meeting, called Harmony Grove Camp, a name which fits. It was a joy to work under such happy conditions. I will remain here now for the state convention, which will be held September 1, 2 and 3. I will then return to my home in San Bernardino, where I am pastor of the society there. Our meetings will be resumed Oct. 1."

Dr. G. B. Warne visited the camp at Clinton, Iowa, last week.

Carrie Smith, secretary, writes from Billings, Mont.: "The First Spiritual Church of Billings, Mont., derived great pleasure in having Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., lecture on the great question, 'What Is Spiritualism?' It was rendered in an able manner. Our local society is progressing rapidly under the presidency of Mrs. Frank McCormick, who is a gifted medium, being both trance and inspirational speaker; also giving tests which prove true. She is loved by all with whom she comes in contact."

Delphos (Kans.) Camp.

The second and last week of Delphos camp has come and gone. The other workers arrived in camp Monday were Mrs. McClossen of Columbus, Ohio, a very earnest little woman, then Mrs. E. D. McCarty of Denver, Colo., whose work has been greatly liked, and she has gained many friends. Mrs. McCarty has had charge of the healing circle and has done a great deal of good in conference, and outside work.

All are kept busy. Last Sunday morning was taken up by Mrs. Kayner's thirty-minute talk, then our test work. In the afternoon, Mr. Bledsoe lectured to an audience of over two thousand, followed by the ballot tests by Mrs. Inez Wagner. A gentleman blindfolds her. I took the liberty of standing by the side of her, and I could not see but that it was all right; anyway, all were pleased. In the evening Mrs. Bledsoe and I followed her.

I forgot to mention a unique meeting, called "Burning of the Mortgage," which took place one evening last week. A big log fire was made and all papers and notes were burned up. Mr. Reeves, his wife and son, have furnished the music during the camp and it was good. The camp will close Sunday night, and then once more all will be on the wing.

One thing, all meetings are free; no charge week days; Sundays, 10 cents only.

Mrs. Wagner was put under test conditions last night, and had a grand success. ISA. W. KAYNER.

"Right Generation the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth." By Dr. M. E. Conger. An appeal to reason and man's highest aspirations. A plea for justice and equality in all the relations of life between men and women. Cloth, 75 cents; leatherette, 50 cents.

Haslett Park Camp, Mich.

Haslett camp is still in session, and we are having a successful camp. Last Sunday over five hundred gate tickets were sold, and eighty teams drove on the grounds, thus giving us a very large attendance.

Mrs. Carpenter was the speaker; her lectures and messages were well received. To-day is her last day with us, and it is Memorial Day.

A number of new faces have come to our camp this week. We have with us Dr. Stevens and wife of Buffalo, being a help to us in music and other ways.

The materializing medium, W. W. Aber, is with us; he has held two seances with good results.

Charles Barnes and sister, Mrs. Hamilton Gill, are here; also John Mabee. Mr. Oscar Edgerly is making us a visit.

We are greatly encouraged for we are doing better than last year. Our next speakers are Mr. and Mrs. Kates.

Building lots are in great demand, and property has advanced half since last year. We are in this way thankful for the electric cars. The prospects are brighter and we are looking for our cause to progress, and Camp Haslett to be one of the leading camps of Michigan. E. R. WETER.

Vicksburg (Mich.) Camp.

Sunday, August 20, was the closing day at Vicksburg camp, and its twenty-second annual meeting is now a thing of history; the last words have been said, the last song has been sung; the good-byes and "God bless you" have been uttered, and all is growing still. The sun shines, the song-birds fill the air with their beautiful music, the dear old historical trees lift their lofty heads high above the camp as in days gone by; but the white tents have been folded and laid away, their inmates have gone, the familiar faces have disappeared. To watch the going out of life from the camp is akin to watching the passing of a friend. But then, like the butterfly, the camp but folds its wings for a season, when it again unfurls its banner to the breeze.

And Vicksburg can say that its 22nd year was one of marked success, as on every hand we heard it remarked that it was better than it was last year.

A fine program was presented from the opening to the close, and I believe that men and women of larger spiritual stature and mental caliber wended their way homeward from this camp, as a result of the grand truths presented by the various speakers.

I have spoken words of praise for the splendid work of Dr. Austin, in a previous report; I have told you about Bro. Sprague and the religion he had in his feet, but (let me whisper to you, Bro. Francis) the kind he has in his heart is of the noblest works of God; I have told you of the fine work our Brother Grimshaw and his estimable guides were doing, but I have yet to tell you of the fine lecture delivered Sunday morning, Aug. 13, by Dr. Edson A. Titus of Battle Creek, Mich. We heard the clanging of the chains of theology; we saw he angels come, and by their touch these chains were broken asunder; we heard the man enslaved cry out for joy at revelations given; his children lived; the grave—it claimed them not; there was no death; 'twas life, eternal life.

In the afternoon of this day we again listened to the masterly truths of Spiritualism from the high standpoint of the guides of Thomas Grimshaw, and I am sure the large audience assembled at this time were led upward in the scale of being, and if any were unacquainted with Spiritualism, or prejudiced against its principles, they must have been obliged to lay aside petty prejudice and acknowledge that ours was a truth that brought man face to face with himself, with the angel world, and with God.

This day had already been well filled, but Brother and Sister Sprague had remained over this Sunday with us as visitors, and not wishing to allow them to get rusty in the service, an evening meeting was called. It was found upon investigation that this was the thirty-eighth anniversary of their marriage, and so this meeting was turned into an anniversary occasion, and it was found that Mr. Sprague had just as much enthusiasm along this line as any other. Mrs. Sprague also responded and related many interesting incidents in connection with their mutual interests. Congratulations and good wishes were extended on every hand.

May the golden strands of love be strengthened by the years,
More of life joys be added, and a lessening of the tears;
And as the shadows gather at the setting of the sun,
May they hear the angels whisper,
"Well done, well done."

Mrs. and Mrs. Kates were our next speakers. They appeared upon the scene Tuesday afternoon, hale, hearty and happy. The platform was filled by them alternately, Mrs. Kates following each service with beautiful messages from the loved ones upon the other shore. Mr. Kates is full of logic and is very apt at showing up a religion based upon theological lines as compared to that founded upon reason and sound facts.

Thursday, August 17, was Woman's Day at our camp, and Mrs. Kates was the speaker of the afternoon. She said many good things in behalf of woman, and touched upon many problems for both man and woman to solve ere the birthright of the race will be all that it should be.

Sunday, August 20, large audiences gathered to greet Mr. and Mrs. Kates, and their lectures upon this occasion were a fitting close to a camp filled with good things.

The work of our good friend Mrs. Flora Russell of Alliance, Ohio, has added much to each service. Her beautiful songs wended their way into people's lives and touched an inner chord that sermons do not always reach.

A closing conference was held Sunday evening, at which time many good things were said, Mr. Grimshaw closing the meeting with eulogistic remarks in regard to the camp and its management, together with an eulogy for our cause. We sang "God Be With You Till We Meet Again" and all went our several ways, feeling that ours was the grandest truth given to the children of man. So ends the camp at Vicksburg, Mich., 1905. EMMA GIBBS.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

"Death Defeated; or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young." By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D. Price $1. 10 cents.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull. Price 10 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms and Ceremonies for the Use of Liberals." Price 25 cents.

CLINTON CAMP, IOWA.

Notes of the Camp-meeting at Mt. Pleasant Park.

The present week is the last of the camp session, and the program is of special interest. We have as speakers, W. J. Colville and Miss Elizabeth Harlow, and as message bearer Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, all of whom will be with us until the close of the camp.

Last Friday, August 18, the M. V. S. A. annual business meeting was held. The entire day was given up to the consideration of the business affairs of the association.

The election of officers resulted in the re-election of President W. F. Peck; vice-president, W. A. Willing; secretary, Mrs. M. B. Anderson; treasurer, Christine Cooper; trustee, W. M. Kellogg, and the election to the office of trustee of G. B. Holbert and Mrs. E. J. Owen.

The passing of the following resolutions marks a great step in advance for the M. V. S. A.:

Whereas, In view of the many alleged exposures of fraudulent mediumship, and particularly of that phase known as materialization, we as an association wish to place ourselves on record upon this question so vitally important to the well-being of Spiritualism. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we recognize materialization as a fact in nature, a natural process by which all visible forms are brought into being from the invisible elements.

Resolved, That we believe it possible under proper conditions to hasten the process of materialization by and with the aid of persons possessing peculiar qualities, yet, recognizing the delicacy of the conditions requisite to the success of such experiments, we earnestly deprecate and discountenance the methods pursued by many so-called mediums and investigators, in holding promiscuous circles and gatherings, as unscientific and irrational, calculated to invite fraud, and to bring discredit upon all genuine mediumship and the cause of Spiritualism.

Resolved, That the claim that a medium can, in the presence of a promiscuous and heterogeneous gathering produce from five to fifty forms and faces at a single session, and follow it up day after day, is, on the face of it, a false claim, unsupported by facts, and one which justifies suspicion of the integrity of the medium.

Resolved, That we counsel all mediums and investigators seeking to obtain the materialization of forms, to discard the unnatural and irrational methods now pursued, and return again to the careful and scientific modes of experiment pursued by Profs. Crookes, Wallace, Hare, Zollner and others, which have resulted so satisfactorily and convincingly.

Resolved, That as the phenomena are of as much importance as is the philosophy of Spiritualism, therefore we should be as careful in our selection of its exponents as we are in the selection of those who teach the philosophy.

Interest in the various meetings continues unabated, especially in the conference meetings. A very lively discussion took place yesterday at a special conference on the subject, "The Present Crisis in Spiritualism." The discussion of this subject is to be continued on Friday morning.

Cottages and tents are filled to overflowing and it is a difficult matter to find accommodations for all the visitors who come to enjoy the camp life, and drink in the soul-inspiring teachings of our speakers and mediums.

REBECCA WORTH.

A PROMINENT WISCONSIN MEDIUM

She Expresses Her Views in Regard to the Present Condition of Our Cause.

To the Editor:—In reading the ever welcome Progressive Thinker of last issue, I had such a heart-sick feeling. Brother Barrett's article and others in this and previous issues cause me to feel indignation at times, and then again to feel heart-sick over the fraudulent element that is blighting the work that is the grandest in the world.

In April, 1901, I entered into the work of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association, and was elected secretary. After the first session of the executive board, and other members had left, President Clara Stewart was telling me about the work of the coming year, and as she finished, she looked at me in such a pitying way that I could not understand, and said: "YOU WILL FIND MANY THINGS THAT WILL SURPRISE YOU." I requested her to inform me in regard to them and she shook her head and said: "Mrs. Baker, I cannot let you down." Her words were an enigma to me then, but clear as daylight now. "I have been let down," and have grieved over it much. I went into the work as innocent as a child. I had only worked in my own home city, and never dreamed that there could be a worker that was not good and true. Happy innocence found upon the way DEGRADATION OF THE BLACKEST TYPE. It never entered my mind that any one could sink so low as to give a false message or impersonate a spirit for a few paltry dollars.

Materialization has occurred in my home twice; but think, this occurrence has only taken place twice in twenty years, and then when no one was looking for it. The spirit friends have ever told me that such manifestations are of rare occurrence. When I read of exposure in any phase, I cannot but feel indignant, and "tramp mediums" find a chilly welcome in Portage.

I often think of past president Clara Stewart's words to me, as I left the camp grounds at Waukesha: "I wish, Mrs. Baker, that you were in a position to stay and help me. I WILL STAND FOR PURITY OF MEDIUMSHIP AND THE DOWNING OF FRAUD AS LONG AS THE GOOD LORD GIVES ME BREATH." This is the spirit that is, and has been rife in Wisconsin, and in our present president, W. J. Erwood, we have one that is just as zealous and emphatic as Mrs. Stewart was. It is the intention to keep Wisconsin as clean as possible. As for myself I will not recognize any mediums upon the platform where I work that are not allied to a state or National Association, for I deem it to be one of the best ways to band together to fight for TRUTH, PURITY AND PROGRESS.

LILY DALE, N. Y.

Notes of the City of Light Assembly.

Sunday, August 20, was a bright, beautiful day, and the audience greeting Susan B. Anthony and Rev. Anna B. Shaw, at their last appearance here for the season was one calculated to inspire to best endeavor. And, indeed, the attention of the vast audience was held to the last utterance of these two earnest workers for humanity.

Each paid a glowing tribute to the hospitality, liberality, and spirituality of the Assembly at the City of Light, and expressed the hope of returning at some future time to enjoy a stay in this ideal spot. Miss Anthony's last injunction was, "Go home and join a society for the emancipation of woman."

For fifty-five years this noble woman has been working for the best interest of humanity which she believes will be brought about by franchise for her sex; for only by the right of ballot, as Miss Shaw declared in one of her lectures, can women share the power to rightly care for their families, and bring about that spirituality which is to bless mankind.

Miss Anthony and Anna Shaw part company here; the former going directly to her home in Rochester, while the latter will go to Richmond, Ind., to fill an engagement.

It is interesting to know that in fifty-five years Miss Anthony has missed but two conventions held in the interest of her life work—one before, the other after the Civil war. The National Convention of the Suffragists will be held at Baltimore, Md., in February next.

The New York State Convention will convene in October, at Rochester, where these two workers for the upliftment of humanity will again join their forces in the struggle to gain freedom for women.

Sunday night was given over to Wilson Fritch in the presentation of Hamlet. Introductory to his most excellent personation of the principal characters in the play, Mr. Fritch said: "Mr. Ingersoll used to begin his famous lecture on Shakspeare with these words: 'In the year in which John Calvin died, Shakspeare was born, a glorious exchange!'

"Calvin stands for theology; Shakspeare for art; art has done more to arouse and beautify the human spirit than theology, and is truth in the highest form. The function of art is to hold, as it were, the mirror up to nature, not to give a mere photograph of nature, but to show the facts of nature from the ideal point of view.

"In this, Shakspeare excelled all poets, and is therefore, the world's greatest poet.

"Long ago a great critic said Shakspeare made the world better worth living in, and made life a divine thing, so Shakspeare is one of the greatest benefactors of human kind. Hamlet has been called his greatest work; it is a tragedy of thought and has therefore not been so popular with theater-goers as those tragedies whose action is objective.

"Art does not settle philosophies, or solve problems. The artist sees an infinite world and that infinite world can not be expressed in propositions.

"The artist's sole business is to express truth in the form of beauty. The effect of such art is to deepen and purify the feelings, to enlarge the soul. In Hamlet the whole gamut of life is rounded. Through it all we feel that 'There is a divinity that shapes our ends, rough-hew them how we will,' and whatever may be our researches in science, philosophy and art, or whatever sorrow or joy we may experience, our limitations silence us before the Infinite, and the words on the dying lips of Hamlet become us, as we float out into the eternal serenity, 'The rest is silence.'"

Mr. Fritch made a lasting impression in his portrayal of the principal characters of Hamlet. His was no easy task to carry the various parts of this masterpiece in drama, changing from one role to another in an instant, carrying the several acts to completion, leaving a mental picture of tragedy before his audience clear, distinct, satisfying.

John W. Ring gave his first lecture before the City of Light Assembly on Tuesday afternoon.

With unpretentious earnestness he goes about his work, be it on the lecture platform, or in the lyceum, in a manner which betokens sincerity, determined purpose to deliver his message of truth and accomplish that for which he was sent.

August 25 will be Lyceum Day, when we expect to hear many good suggestions for lyceum work, from Mr. Ring.

Wednesday of this week, Geo. Elmer Littlefield spoke on the subject, "Facts of Human Progress." As principal factors in human progress he mentioned heredity, environment, natural selection, economic determinism, and human will—each a subject in itself, from which he drew lessons which if heeded would go far toward developing the spirituality of those who desire human progress to have an upward trend; Mr. Littlefield will later appear before the assembly in the discussion of socialism.

The City of Light Assembly held the annual stockholders' meeting on Monday, August 21, 1905 and unanimously elected a new board of trustees to carry on the work for the ensuing year. The following are the officers and trustees: President, Abbie Louise Pettengill; secretary, Eulalia Evstaphieve; treasurer, Albert C. White; auditor, Laura G. Fixen. Trustees: Abbie Louise Pettengill, Esther C. Humphrey, Annette J. Pettengill, Laura G. Fixen, Henry A. Everett, Homer Todd, Albert C. White. The personnel of the new board gives great satisfaction to everybody; inspiring confidence that the coming year will be far superior in attraction and attendance to any record of the past. It is proposed to bring upon the rostrum the representative Spiritualists and lecturers of the country with such additions of orators, and men and women of note in other lines of work for humanity, as the advanced intelligence of the times demands.

Fraudulent mediumship received its death blow at Lily Dale, as the trustees unanimously agreed that as through the phenomena of Spiritualism a large number of seekers receive ocular proofs of the truths of Spiritualism, and as some fraudulent manifestations have been presented in the past, so that the good received from the platform has been lost in the seance room, the same great care should be used in selecting those who are to present the phenomena as is used in selecting those who present the philosophy.

It was furthermore decided to appoint a committee to invite such mediums as they believe are best fitted to demonstrate the phenomena, and who will approve the application of any and all mediums, astrologers, magnetic healers and others who desire to demonstrate the phenomena or give readings for pay to visitors, thus insuring protection to the visitors, honest mediums as well as the assembly.

Liberal arrangements will be made to interest children and young people, and the assembly will be made attractive to young and old.

The work of the coming season has been divided among competent committees, thus relieving President Pettengill from the excessive burdens she has borne for the past three years, and all confidently look upon the City of Light Assembly as the Mecca of Spiritualism, New Thought and Natural Philosophy in the varied phases, and where it will be demonstrated by the ablest exponents. HIMALYA
(THE KOLA COMPOUND)

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific, proving that

HAY-FEVER —AND— ASTHMA can be CURED.

Mr. W. H. Kelley, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma by Himalya, after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Cleave, 128 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes, Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good, but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya, as it cured me of Hay-Fever and Asthma, and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-Fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write today to the Kola Importing Co., 1102 Broadway, New York.

OUR TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

And lastly, our latest premium book, "Letters From the Spirit World," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea.

All these TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.75 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family,—an achievement only accomplished by the Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

STANDARD BOOKS,
Cloth Binding, 50c. Each.

The following books by well known and popular writers, we have selected with the thought that they will be of interest to our readers. They are printed on fine paper; perfectly clear, readable type; cloth binding. Good home library edition:

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE,

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. An Investigator: Q. Why is suicide a crime? Why should one be compelled to live when life is only agony? When one is only a burden to himself and others and the world or himself has nothing to gain by his living. The philosophy of Spiritualism teaches that suicides are doomed to a darkened and unhappy existence in the next world. It is claimed that our suffering in the next world is regret and remorse for acts done in this; how can one regret for escaping a life of torment? If it is a noble act to help others in their sorrow, why should it be a crime to help one's self? I can understand why a person should forget self and live, no matter how bitter his existence, if necessary for the benefit of others, but when this is not the case, why should he be compelled to live through long years a life that is full of sorrow and mental agony? I do not understand the philosophy of it. I do not see why, when life becomes a burden, and when it has nothing more to give, that he should not be allowed to solve all his troubles and perplexities in death.

A. Our laws recognize at least tacitly that it is not a crime to take one's own life. There has thus been a modification of the English law which makes it a criminal offense, severely punished if there is failure in the attempt, and the clergy have initiated the movement by refusing Christian burial to those who succeed.

The Grecians, Romans and all ancient people believed, when fate was seemingly irresistible, to escape by cutting short the thread of life. It was thought dishonorable to live disgraced or vanquished. The Bible sanctions this form of departure, as in the case of Samson, Judas Iscariot and others.

The right to take one's life has been the cause of heated controversy, and some of the most distinguished thinkers as Hume, Gibbon and Madame De Stael have been its advocates.

There are instances where it would appear justifiable, but in such instances it is rarely resorted to.

Whatever may have been the causes in ancient times under different religious and ethical training, it is doubtful if at present a person having normal action of the brain will resort to suicide.

The desire to kill one's self is akin to murder, and murder is often followed by the murderer taking his own life. Such are usually results of erotic insanity, and in the majority of instances a disordered mind is indicated. There have been epidemics of suicide, and vigorous meaures have been necessary to stop the disease. There are many instances where suggestion has induced the act, as the presence of razors, sharp knives or poisons. The means as hanging, the last and most repulsive, shows how far this suggestion operates.

Death by Paris green is most painful, yet because it has been used and thus suggested, it is constantly resorted to. The Eiffel tower has to be guarded to prevent a constant succession of suicides. The Brooklyn bridge is another instance when suggestion is a factor.

At the present time, the act of suicide is a confession of defeat or of guilt, and thus brings disgrace on the actor and all connected with him, and if it be considered from the point of view, that the victim is perfectly sane and responsible, it is not just for him to cast odium and responsibilities on others. The meaning of life is strength gained from resisting opposing obstacles and no one can determine when these obstructions will pass away or the skies clear. While in some particular instance, we may justify the act, to grant the right would be to cheapen the value of life which should be held sacred.

From my own observations and communications received, there is no distinctive punishment for the suicide. There are instances where in the reunion with friends, the wretchedness of earth-life, is like a half-forgotten dream. There are others, where in momentary madness the tie of life was cut, remorse and regret are poignant. But like all mistakes and blunders of this life, these will be outgrown. There is no more punishment in the next life than in this.

LIFE.

Life comes and goes; it ebbs and flows,
In one eternal chain,
Preparing soil and sowing seed
For reaping golden grain.
The soul that comes on Solar wave,
The light that love shall give,
Renewing us, reviving us,
And teaching how to live.
Howe'er we sin, or strive to stray
From His eternal plan,
We must return, the lesson learn,
Perfect the inner man.
Each soul, a star in cosmic life,
May shed a brightening ray;
Its circle run, 'twill rise again,
Dispelling hate and fear,
And lead us on by light of hope
To seek to know it here.
The Moon that lights the evening hour,
The Sun that lights by day,
All planets, stars, the frallest flower
Reveal the mighty plan;
Each does its work, gives of its life,
To manifest God-Man.

PHENOMENA AS PROOF OF SPIRIT WORLD.

Materialization and Photography Given Through the Agency of Mediums Are Pointed to In Reply to Request for One Unimpeachable Case of the Supernatural.

In the Battle Ground [Record-Herald] appeared an article from Austin Bierbower asking proof of the supernatural which article was interesting to me on account of the seeming unfamiliarity of the writer with the subject he undertook to handle.

Assuming that he means supernormal when he speaks of supernatural, let me suggest to the writer that progressive thinkers have long ago discarded the word supernatural in relation to spirit phenomena, and that the word miracle has come to mean an expression of natural law beyond the normal comprehension of the witness. And "the world's greatest religious problem" is not "to find something supernatural," but to find the derivation of the law that produces the "supernatural."

I believe I am not putting it too strongly when I say that no well informed man doubts that there is such a thing as real spirit phenomena. There are a few hard facts investigators, however, who are trying to account for the phenomena by telepathy and the subliminal and subconscious self.

None of your philosophers have even offered to explain materialization, trumpet or independent voice communication, or the common phase of slate writing. And why? Simply because the wise man soon discovers that he has been playing in the sands of the sea shore, while the great ocean of spiritual truth lay undiscovered before him, and, like most men when they have their pet theories annihilated, they go home and say no more.

But your writer wants one case of communication from the spirit world, and asks some one to take the trouble to bring it to him, let him examine it in open day, and if it is to be a "ghost" test, that he brings in said ghost and have it do the celestial performance on his study table, stand a rigid cross-examination to test its mentality and undergo the fire and acid test physically. And he says nothing would be as valuable as one case of the "supernatural."

Did the gentleman ever stop to reflect that the production of one case of the "supernatural" would mean the stopping of the whole machinery of the universe?

I have heard many men talk of the great value of the proof of man's existence after death, but when the chance is offered they will not spend $10 in trying to get the desired information. So, I will warrant that Mr. Bierbower would not spend $100 in search of the desired proof, but rather go on making assertions that are as far from the truth as the truth is from the "supernatural."

There are dozens of Spiritualist camp meetings in progress just now in all parts of the United States. Thousands of people from all parts of the country visit them, and they are not there out of mere curiosity. You will find there mediums of all classes from the spirit photographer to the materializing medium. These thousands and tens of thousands of intelligent people who visit the camp meetings each year are convinced beyond any doubt that they talk with their spirit friends.

Is the evidence of these thousands of honest people worth nothing? Does not this fact alone inspire you with interest enough to spend a little time in investigation instead of empty assertions? Would the testimony of Sir William Crookes, England's greatest scientist; Victor Hugo, France's greatest writer; Minot J. Savage, one of America's greatest divines, have no weight with you?

I have a little more spare time, and I will donate my time freely to any man who wants to "know the truth." Any poor soul who knows so little about the facts upon which the after life is based needs sympathy and help. I am one of the many whose faith has been changed to knowledge, and I am ready to furnish "unspeakable testimony" of the truth I assert.

Such men as Mr. Bierbower are the kind who wind up their speculations by becoming good Spiritualists. To the ultra-religious class no proof is good unless hallowed by dim, forgotten ages. To the ultra-materialist, proof of the senses is no proof, since the subconscious ego can produce hallucinations that to the individual are real. So, while these go on arguing the truth seeker gets evidence daily, objective and subjective, that removes every doubt.

Let me ask Mr. Bierbower and others of his way of thinking, to go out after the evidence instead of calling for it to come to them. Let them spend a few dollars in honest investigation. Then, if they do not discover that they have been pygmies hurling pebbles while giants warred with mountains, I will admit that the five millions or more Spiritualists in the United States have not "proved one case," and that they are, in fact, a lot of drivelling idiots.

THE INSTINCT OF LIFE.

Go on with your pleasures, my dear ones,
The world is as fair to your view
As when from the hill-tops, in May-time,
I saw it a-glitter with dew.
The visions of Hope were resplendent;
There were dream-crested mountains to climb,
And valleys a-bloom, far beyond them,
Where life might be wholly sublime.

The moon sailed the blue in the night-time,
The stars twinkled off in the sky,
And my head never ached, as it now does,
With solving the How and the Why;
Life's keenest delight was in action;
Results were not planned as exact,
Nor movements economised strictly
To bring us the things we most lacked.

The instinct of life is toward motion,
Not for plans to achieve, nor to shirk,
Not horror about the two demons,
Out-of-Work, and his twin, Over-work!
So if youth's wild uneasiness frets us,
Remember 'tis life in full play;
The birds sing, the leaves dance, the winds laugh,
And everything has its heyday.

We may not see where the good gain shows,
But a manifestation it is
Of the soul of the universe, stirring
Matter into fine ecstasies.
"Be quiet!" the mandate of Death is,
"Be active!" the fiat of Life,
Let us smile in activity's tumult,
And step to the drum and the fife.

PSYCHIC HASH.

Suggestive Illustrations by the California Philosopher.

"We speak of 'the flashes of genius,' and the 'startling penetration of intuition,' which in themselves often transcend the power of any mortal brain. We now know they are brief manifestations of the larger manhood of the mortal. But it has become the custom of the believers in human immortality to HASH this entire outer manhood, and call the dish 'Spirit Return.' Hence the motive for the present article."

The glory of a photograph is its faithful picture of the form of our friend. The sun will give you the same careful detail for the child as for the man—for the tramp as for the millionaire—for the sinner as for the saint. We recognize every feature of the man as we knew him. But the sun is just as careful and particular to copy the clothes as the face, so, for the most part, the portrait exhibits man and maiden as they wish to be seen.

But the sun appeals to the eye and leaves the rest of the senses unsatisfied. By the aid of the phonograph we can appeal to the ear, and record just what a man said, and how he said it. So it happens that science and sun, working together, give us to-day more of the man than his mere portrait. We can now have something of a record of both the form and the mind of the man. But it is apparent that both camera and phonograph have told all they have to tell about him. We can do a little more than that, for we can measure, weigh and dissect his form, and so far as he has expressed himself in word or action we picture him mentally. We recognize him as human, with form and mind acting and reacting on each other. So all history can do is to tell the tale of flesh and blood and bone, mingled with mind, and to note how many millions of such form expressions were recorded in the last census.

Science has its two lines of investigation. It studies form, and it studies mind. That is to say, intelligence and substance, blended into form by energy, are the lessons for its students. And the most interesting discovery of to-day, by those students, is that neither the portrait nor the phonograph, and not even the form nor the kind give us a picture of the man as he really is.

Every form is now known to have an extension that mortal sense cannot seize, which means that its atoms are vibrating far beyond all possibility of recognition by eye or touch. At this point we recall a fact now acknowledged, that even colors have "ultra" rays, known only by their effect. Thus when the vibrations of red are lowered they become heat. And we all know what is above and beyond violet as it is now called "the X-ray." And a little further on comes the awful effect we call "radio activity." We now know that from the same raw material come heat, light, electricity, magnetism and undoubtedly life itself. Each and all are the effect of certain rates of motion. In other words "energy" is the divine creator or producer of these various manifestations.

So much will hardly be disputed today by any independent thinker. And since these effects of energy really concern man more than any other form, we will push our investigation out and beyond what we sense of him in daily life. For instance, some one sees beyond the normal sight of the rest of us. So we call it "clairvoyance," which is merely an effect of added vibration to certain of his nerves. In the same manner his hearing becomes clairaudience, which merely marks another dance of the unit, with a little change of time and tune. Presently the mind itself grows more active under like stimulus, and we then call the effect "psychometry." Or perhaps it flashes its way to a distance when we exclaim, "Behold the power of telepathic suggestion," for we see it compel that other mind to its own sight and thought.

We now know that these sense manifestations are all merely certain vibratory movements, exactly as heat, and light, and life are all effects of motion or energy. But we must remember they are effects outside the man we know. They all belong to his outer form that reaches out in every direction, out and away beyond form into illimitable space.

We speak of "the flashes of genius" and the "startling penetration of intuition" which in themselves often far transcend the power of any mortal brain. We now know they are brief manifestations of the larger manhood of the mortal. But it has become the custom of the believers in human immortality to HASH this entire outer manhood, and call the dish "Spirit Return." Hence the motive for the present article.

No one hashes heat, light, electricity, magnetism, etc., although they are known to be but different vibrations of the same raw material. And great would be the confusion if a speaker or writer were to count them all as different manifestations of Light. But, as a general thing, the unthoughtful believer in spirit return is making and including an absurd combination of outer and inner manhood when he discusses the verity of life after death, and offers certain facts to prove it. To every one fact that by itself is reasonable proof he offers a dozen others that are of no value to the student of the outer manhood, for he recognizes such facts as merely evolved by man the mortal from his outer self. His psychometry, his clairvoyance, and his clairaudience are "hashed" up, perhaps with a flavoring of real "spirit return," and the dish is then set before the poor mortal suffering with soul hunger.

I would repeat and emphasize that Modern Spiritualism has been, for the most part, a system of "psychic hash," in which dish ninety-nine one-hundredths have been ingredients evolved from the individuality of the mortal, although, in many cases, we find a trifle of real spirit return to make up the balance, and give flavoring to the whole. Indeed we might fairly say that the man of to-day has been belittled that the man of to-morrow might be glorified.

Out of this "psychic hash" there has been an attempt to build up a mighty system of belief that was to shake the world. To-day that belief, like the primitive monad which increases by fissures, is splitting in twain. On the one hand we have Spiritualist churches, with ordained and very reverend preachers, usually exhibiting some outer manhood as "spirit phenomena," with prayers, hymns, sermons and creeds to suit the ever faithful. The members have each his individual experience of "spirit return" that has, once for all, settled the question of immortality for him. This as we have said is one wing of the movement.

The other wing is also composed of men and women with "individual experiences," and nourished by the same "psychic hash," but it is too individualized to combine, so remains without any great influence on the community.

For the most part the men and women of this wing of the movement live just as they did before their conversion. They go to the same old church, or to no church at all, as in days of yore. They like a circle where they can get phenomena, but in all other respects are unnoticeable by their friends and neighbors. But both wings alike have been brought up on "psychic hash." That is to say, nine-tenths of their belief in human immortality is founded on real facts that are misunderstood. Such facts are supposed to mean one thing, when they really mean another. As proofs of spirit return they will not bear examination, because they are chiefly exhibitions of faculties belonging to the outer manhood. But it is not my present intention to dwell on this phase of so-called "spirit return" further than to emphasize that in the light of the known faculties belonging to the entire self of every man, very much of the phenomena used to demonstrate Modern Spiritualism may be rightly entitled PSYCHIC HASH.

Most fortunately for the world the actual demonstrations of human immortality by verified spirit return are sufficiently numerous to justify a reasonable certainty that death is a friend rather than a foe. But I have repeatedly felt it my duty to point out the limitations to intercourse between spirits and mortals, since only those who are unusually sensitive, on both sides, can possibly meet, or even know of each other's presence. Even then both of these sensitives are abnormal to their present life, and therefore can only meet in what I have called "fog-land," because their communications to each other must necessarily be befogged and imperfect. In this article I want to examine, and analyze briefly, so far as I may, this outer manhood, whose faculties have been so woefully misunderstood by the votaries of spirit return, as well as by theologians the world over.

Some of my readers will remember that we once examined together what we then called "aural manhood." That, of course, was practically the same as our present "outer manhood," but we will now try to study the mystery from a different standpoint.

That everything sensed by the mortal outstretches his sense limit hardly needs demonstration in this twentieth century. The magnet has its two poles. If broken into fragments the tiniest speck has the same manifestation of this eternal truth. Man can find no explanation of this fact. He simply accepts it as an attribute of the eternal ether from which everything, including himself, springs into manifestation. But he knows that every magnet has its field outside its form, in which its activity continues.

Man further knows that the atmosphere around him is composed of magnetic units, for he has only to change its rate of vibration by his dynamos when he can at once determine whether it shall serve him as heat or light, or merely as power. So we have in the ether, among its other qualities, infinite magnetism, capable of every manifestation desired. If only its energy be called into sufficient play. That being universal law it applies to every form, including that of man.

Man, like everything else, is just a condensation, a sort of essence, of the grand total of intelligence, energy and substance which, unmanifested, we call "ether." In other words, there is the central core composed of flesh and bone, and shaped into the form we call man. This form has a system of nerves by which it senses all other forms that are vibrating at about the same rate as itself. But, like everything else in nature, the form we see has an outward extension we don't see. Man, as much as a fragment of loadstone, has an outer form which is only dimly recognized by its actual faculties of clairvoyance, psychometry, etc.

The whole of a man, woman or child is thus very different from the form which wears clothes, and poses as a mortal in earth life. But the really important part of the man is invisible. It necessarily exists before the mortal form, and being intelligent it must largely influence so much of itself as creeps into the lower life. Like everything else manhood, or the living speck, from which manhood evolved, is a condensation from the ether, and of course the earlier the condensation the less solid the form. But, so far as we can determine, it seems as if the law of its nature is compelling its every unit to seek personality. As a human being it has become individualized. Its appearances, or in other words its personalities, will be a mere result of vibration. The student must here carefully note that if the vibration changes there will be a different person, and the mortal form seems the lowest possible manifestation of such vibration. We must further note that only a small part of the whole manhood can condense into normal earth life. But it seems as if there were an intense longing for this lowest personation as an inherent quality of every unit. It is apparently only waiting an opportunity to enter these lower vibrations and become a mortal human being.

The many recently proved cases of multiple personality seem to be portions of the outer manhood welcoming an opportunity to personify in earth life. Such cases as Miss Beauchamp, Mollie Fancher, Rev. Hanna and the many others now on record, are easily explained if we keep this in mind. A certain portion of the whole man may get into mortal form as a baby, and grow up through passing years from infancy to manhood. But if by accident or disease that portion loses its hold on that form, if it cease to dominate that mortal brain, there will be eager and instant attempt by some other portion of the unseen man to occupy that form, and become a person in earth life. And thus not merely one but a number of such persons may use the same body. Each will be a distinct person, but all of them, be they many or few, will be merely differing manifestations of the one individuality which originally condensed from the ether.

These personalities feel themselves distinct from one another. They are really distinct from one another as persons for each has his own loves, hates and passions, because vibrating differently. But each and all are born of the one individuality. This truth is splendidly illustrated in the case of Mollie Fancher wherein a convulsion—that is to say a tremendous vibratory change—at almost regular intervals allows another personality to appear and manifest Just so long and so often as the particular vibration is repeated the same personality will appear and re-appear, with a life as rigid an effect of causes as that of the original Mollie Fancher.

The same law is exemplified by Miss Beauchamp, and even with still more striking effect by the Rev. Hanna of Connecticut. In his case his personality was broken up by accident and great bodily injury. After many interesting experiences there were left at last just two of these distinct personalities which were induced to blend with the result that the orginal Rev. Hanna is restored to his memories and his place among his fellow mortals.

But we must ever keep in mind that each appearance is compelled to its particular personation by certain changes of vibration which may be induced by disease, accident, or some other cause. And this means a clear demonstration to the thinker that he himself is only very partially in earth life. And yet further, that there is a great deal of him ready at a moment's notice to burst into mortal experiences, provided only that the portion now at work happens from any cause to lose its hold of the mortal form. And whether there shall be just one such personality or many is a mere matter of detail that leaves the individuality unchanged.

These facts mean, yet further, that, since man is by his thought perpetually changing his vibrations, he is thus coming into contact with other portions of his own individuality. There are lives concentrated on one idea, such as the accumulation of wealth or the gratification of appetite, which fail to express much of their real individuality. They do not come into active relation with any part of themselves save the one born into the earth child, and of course influenced by the laws of heredity and environment.

If this great truth be once realized we can now see how greatly it will enlarge and broaden the conception of mortality and immortality now held and taught by Spiritualist and theologian. "Spirit return," as we have now seen, has been not merely a conglomeration and mixture of seen and unseen manhood into "psychic hash," but that hash has itself many more ingredients than we are likely to comprehend in earth life. The mysteries of manhood become more profound as we pursue our studies, for they are proofs of our relation to infinity.

All our present conceptions of manhood are based on the idea that "man's a man for a' that," but in reality the remedy for most of the imperfections of manhood will only be discovered when we have learned how to give the outer man greater play in our daily life. When we learn to realize that even the most fascinating personality, and still more the most repulsive, is but a mere fragment of the true individual, we are beginning to chase truth out into the invisible. Radium and wireless telegraphy are telling us that every form is practically unlimited, and this applies to man himself. His influence by thought upon his brother man a thousand miles away, not only proves this truth, but also proves that his outer self is in touch with other selves almost regardless of distance. In other words, individuality is a tremendous truth, of which personality is but a shadow.

But let us keep each truth to itself—not mix them into "psychic hash" and call it "spirit return" of some visitor from the unseen, when in reality it is, in most cases, an emanation from the person in earth life. We will all presently find ourselves in possession of a far greater manhood than we have realized in earth life, because after the death change we shall have dropped forever our mortal personality by merging it into our grand individuality, which alone constitutes our true manhood. THE HAPPY EARTH IS OURS.

Here's the time of joy and rhyme—
In the summer gay and sweet;
In the gleam of Eden's clime,
We our own in gladness meet;
For we come to see the world—
As possession all our own;
So God's banners are unfurled,
Making this in beauty known!

What is earth but just a place,
Made to please the souls right here?
Everything of good and grace,
So for us does bright appear;
All the circling world contains,
From the dewdrop to the star,
Oceans, mountains, and the plains,
These for us in splendor are!

Common are they to our kind,
All the day and all the night;
Every son of man can find,
In these riches true delight;
Claim has he upon all bliss,
As the food for head and heart;
Naught of goodness comes amiss,
In wide nature or the mart!

O how slow we are to learn—
The divineness of our days,
And our present blessings spurn—
For a future we would praise;
Music is in every wind,
Perfume issues from the flower;
Let us then the wisdom find—
Charming every fleeting hour!

We so often come to grief
Just because we close our eyes
To the beautiful belief—
All is ours in earth and skies;
Everything belongs to man,
In the universe so wide;
If we followed out God's plan—
Good for all we should provide!

Every soul has God as friend,
Thro' the eternal round of years;
Good once given ne'er will end;
Still your heart and dry your tears;
Nothing need we lack below,
If distrust we will destroy;
All the world is ours we know—
Just to fill our lives with joy!

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

The Warfare of Science With Theology.

A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom. By ANDREW D. WHITE, LL. D., late President and Professor of History at Cornell University. In Two Volumes. 8vo. Cloth, Five Dollars. For Sale at This Office.

In these two large volumes are combined information that the reader could not find in the libraries of the world in fifty years. It shows the constant and determined opposition of Theology to the advancement that has been made in every branch of Science. To the Student it is indispensible. Every Free Thought Speaker should have it. It should circulate in every community. It goes into minute details, citing in all cases the authority, showing the persistency of Theology in fighting new and advanced ideas in Science.

"THE WARFARE OF SCIENCE WITH THEOLOGY" is undoubtedly the most complete, careful, conscientious, able and bravely impartial history of the subject ever written. The exactness and reliability of its facts and citations are unquestioned. Its vast scholarly research is amazing. It contains just the information the student and thinker needs, and so indexed and tabulated that it is handy as a dictionary when one wishes to refer to some special point or topic.

These two large volumes, containing about 900 pages, will be sent to any address on receipt of the price, Five Dollars.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as o Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

"THE UNKNOWN"

—BY—

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. Price $2.00.

History of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION to the Year 200,

BY CHARLES V. WAITE, A. M.

Fifth Edition—Revised, with Much Additional Matter in Appendix

A standard and reliable history of the earlier period of the church, giving facts that are not found in the so-called histories written by churchmen. This latest edition has been carefully and thoroughly revised, and it is a reliable magazine of facts, such as the honest inquirer wants. It opens up to the investigator and student a wide field of historical research in matters of fact wholly ignored by the regular church historians, and throws a bright glare of light on points heretofore carefully shrouded in darkness.

A large octavo volume of 556 pages, strongly bound in cloth. Price $2.25. For sale at The Progressive Thinker office.

GRAND LEDGE CAMP.

Some Suggestive Items From One of the Visitors—The Infamous Attack on Moses Hull.

Sunday, August 20, was a day of ideal weather at Grand Ledge, Michigan. Strangers found there a camp having beautiful grounds, a commodious auditorium unsurpassed at any other of our western centers, a people, whether transient, or resident in the near-by city, of genial manner and winning sociability and an official board of substantial men and women. On that day the crowd came from near and far, afoot, in carriages which spoke of well-to-do conditions, or aboard the little steamers on Grand River. Officials estimated the number present during the day at almost two thousand individuals. The president of the Illinois State Spiritualists Association spoke both forenoon and afternoon, while Chairman Edgerly closed the latter with words of impressive appropriateness which were received by the campers with hearty approbation, and then the season for 1905 was declared formally ended.

In asking after the best known personalities met there during the last days of the meeting, Mrs. Abbie Sheets naturally comes first in the minds of The Progressive Thinker family. Only a single glance at her welcome face was necessary to tell that she has in the more recent months made real progress towards improved health. Still not strong enough for official burdens, or continuous speaking engagements, yet she is taking up the latter work by degrees and friends are hoping will ere long be fully equal to the labor she holds so sacred and for which choice forces have fitted her.

Mrs. Marian Carpenter, always a favorite here because of her personality and womanly worth, was credited with having outdone herself in the quality of her lectures and the merit of her messages during this year's engagement at Grand Ledge, while it is pleasant to also record that her physical health is apparently better than in past months. Many healing thoughts will go out to her from widely scattered friends.

Mrs. Russell, vice-president of the camp, and Grand Ledge's own medium, was in popular demand for private readings and made many new friends.

Mrs. Alex Caird, of Lynn, Mass., was present during the entire camp and gave marked satisfaction in her private work, while she was gladly welcomed whenever she lent her aid upon the platform. She may, with her earnest husband, Dr. Caird, soon return to their former love and take up residence in Chicago.

Mr. Comstock, residing near Marcellus, a farmer by vocation, gave the fire test often and very successfully without injury to either the mucous membrane of his mouth or the hair and cuticle of his hands. A minister tried to imitate his work at his closing seance, but burned his hand quite severely.

Mrs. C. Oswald of the Englewood Spiritual Union, Chicago, was a personal favorite with the campers and her mediumistic work, both public and private, was heartily commended. Old friends noted certain developments in her psychic powers.

Once again "The Expositor and Yearly Psychic Era and Hull Crucible" is being put in circulation—this time bearing the stamp of the Goshen, Ind., postoffice, instead of Chicago. It is the same in matter as last year. The sneaks back of this anonymous attack upon Moses Hull had better step to the front and assume public responsibility for it before it is forced upon them. Intervening time since its first appearance has not been lost. Financial backer, editor, distributers and the source from which it is supplied have been traced closely home. Its appearance savors of a Mafia-like assassination of character in which only cowards indulge.

Anonymous charges against the Morris Pratt Institute faculty are in circulation. The author of the foul slanders is known. Let the matter go at once to the United States postoffice inspectors. I am myself in receipt of a fresh communication of that character.

GEORGE B. WARNE.

A REAL SPIRIT AT WORK.

It Makes a Noise Which Can Be Heard a Block Away.

A special dispatch to the Chicago American from New York, says:

Strange raps, apparently the sound of a hammer, have upset the Marion section of Jersey City and plunged the residents into an excited discussion as to whether the noise is caused by ghosts. The noises can be heard nightly in the old-fashioned residence on Pavonia, near Giles avenue, where reside Charles William Meyers, his wife, his daughter, aged 19, and his two sons, Charles, 21 years old, and William, 14 years old. The younger boy is an epileptic.

Two weeks ago Charles was awakened by strange, hammer-like raps under the bed in which he and his brother slept.

Strange Noise Repeated.

The next night and following nights the strange noises were repeated.

The younger brother apparently slept through it all.

The next night Brother Charles tied William's hands and feet. But the old tap, tap, tap was heard. The neighbors were skeptical and all said:

"It's William."

And William it seemed to be, for, though tied hand and foot, the rapping would follow him around the house wherever he was carried at night. He was carried into the parlor and trussed up with ropes. The rapping still continued near him. The noise was as it made by a hammer and it could be heard a half block away.

Spirits Want to "Talk."

During the daytime Charles tore out the walls of his room and examined the gabled roof of the house without success. Charles Brown, a Spiritualist, sat through a session of mysterious knocking and announced that some spirit was trying to communicate to the world through the epileptic boy.

Nightly delegations of Marion residents crowd the Meyers home listening to the knocking spook and three of Jersey City's wisest policemen have sat in for a session. The mystery is unsolved and deeper than when it began.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars 'round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Sunapee Lake Camp.

August 15 was a very rainy day. At 2:30 p. m., a lecture by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding, to a small audience. A good lecture and tests. We all learned something new.

August 16, at 2:30 p. m., lecture and tests. At 7:45 p. m., seance in hall, by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding. The tests were all recognized, and all were well pleased with the seance.

August 17, at 1 p. m., Ladies' Aid fair, which was well attended and was a success every way.

August 18, at 2:30 p. m., lecture and tests by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding. The subject was "Power and Force," and was well delivered, and was spoken well of by everyone.

August 19, at 2:30 p. m., a lecture by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding. Her subject was, "What Is God?" The audience was as good as any of this season. The audience spoke well of the lecture and the speaker.

August 20, at 10:45 a. m., it looked well for a cool day, the air very bracing and everything bid fair to be a good meeting. The president presented Annie Banks Scott of Boston. The speaker opened with a poem, and then with tests, and they all were recognized. At 2:45 p. m., singing followed by a poem written by Lizzie Doten, and music by Miss Ida Bond and Mrs. Millen. The subject, by Mrs. Harding, "What Has Spiritualism Done for Humanity?" There was a large audience and the speaker was very forcible. It was one of Mrs. Harding's best lectures, and this was her last day here.

At 4:30 p. m., the Ladies' Aid Association held their annual meeting for election of officers and the following were chosen: President, Mrs. Addie M. Stevens, Charemont, N. H.; first vice-president, Mrs. Hattie P. Burpee, Sutton, N. H.; second vice-president, Mrs. Susan E. Watson, Hillsboro Br., N. H.; secretary, Mrs. H. G. Newman, Washington, N. H.; treasurer, Mrs. Harriet C. Comstock, Newport, N. H. Business Committee: Mrs. H. C. Comstock, Newport, N. H.; Mrs. Hattie Burpee, Sutton, N. H.; Mrs. Susan E. Watson, Hillsboro, Br., N. H.; Mrs. C. C. Davis, Hartland, Vt.; Mrs. Caroline C. Lull, Charemont, N. H.; Miss Caroline Marcey, Hillsboro, N. H.

At the annual meeting of the Sunapee Lake Camp-meeting Association, Aug. 19, the following officers were elected: President, John Gage, Henniker, N. H.; vice-president, Isaac K. Connor, Warner, N. H.; secretary, Lorenzo Worthen, Hillsboro Bridge, N. H.; treasurer, Mrs. Harriet C. Comstock, Newport, N. H.

Business committee: Thomas Burpee, chairman, Sutton, N. H.; C. E. Gove, Riverdale, N. H.; Isaac K. Connor, Warner, N. H.

Auditors: C. C. Davis, Hartland, Vt.; Mrs. Harriet G. Newman, Washington, N. H.

LORENZO WORTHEN.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

August 20 dawned clear and beautiful, bringing to the camp many seekers after spiritual truths, as an expounder of which no one is superior to W. J. Colville, the speaker of the day. He began the services by singing a solo, "Angels Ever Bright and Fair." Mr. Hunger, the president, in his remarks spoke of the coming dedication of their temple in Cleveland the first Sunday in October. Mr. Colville gave an improvised poem as an invocation. His subject for the morning was "The Evidence of Spiritualism and the Practical Benefits of Spiritualism." He held his audience from start to finish as only he can, giving many points that suited his hearers, as the frequent applause testified,

In the afternoon he sang "The Prince and the Minstrel," then for an hour and a half he placed before his large audience the facts and evidences within his knowledge of individual Immortality. From four to five he answered any questions that were propounded and they were many and varied; his answers were to the point and clearly illustrated so as to be fully understood.

Mrs. Challen was message bearer after both lectures, her last appearance here for the season.

What might have been a serious accident occurred during the morning lecture. Mr. Hunger, our worthy president, sitting at the back of the rostrum, in some way lost his balance and he fell backward with head down between the tent and platform, only his feet remaining in sight. Several gentlemen ran to his assistance and helped to extricate him from his uncomfortable position. He arose smiling and debonair, seemingly none the worse for his involuntary acrobatic feat, which had not even caused a pause in the speaker's flow of eloquence. MARY L. BETTES.

Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

Ashley Camp, Ohio.

Everything is moving along lovely here. The park was never so lovely as now. "Lake Tiberias" is swimming full of fish; sometimes its banks are lined with men, women and children enjoying the fishing. One day last week Mrs. Kibby is reported to have caught one hundred fish. They are small, but make good eating.

The attendance at the meetings has been better than it has been for years past. The people seem to be renewing their interest and everybody is encouraged.

The talent employed are as follows: W. V. Nicum of Dayton, Ohio; Mrs. E. A. Kibby of Cincinnati; Mrs. Margaret Stewart of Piqua, Ohio, and Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, the N. S. A. missionaries, of Jamestown, N. Y.

Mrs. Kibby and Mrs. Stewart are employed for the season. Mr. Nicum has filled his engagement and gone, and Mr. and Mrs. Sprague are here. They held services in our fine auditorium last Sunday, speaking twice to the largest audiences that have been in attendance for years. To-night (Tuesday) Mr. Sprague will speak upon "Marriage and Divorce," and will compare the teachings of the Bible with the teachings of Modern Spiritualism concerning the subject. The Spragues have the rostrum this week and will close the camp next Sunday. They will be assisted by Mrs. Stewart and Mrs. Kibby from time to time.

It is a great pity that the people all over this country do not know of the wonderful mineral spring on this camp ground. It is called the Odovene Well. It is four hundred feet deep, and when first struck was a flowing well; it is pumped now. People come many miles to carry the water away in jugs and bottles. Its wonderful curative qualities have been demonstrated over and over again.

It is the hope of our camp-meeting association that they may soon be able to erect a fine hotel and start a sanitarium here. There is to be a trolley line built soon which will bring the people from Delaware direct to the camp grounds. This will make perfect connections by trolley from Columbus, Ohio and many other smaller towns both north and south. When it is completed then mineral water cures will be plenty, sanitarium, hotels, etc., will be built, the grounds extended and beautified, our large auditorium will be filled from day to day, and the great work of Ashley camp will be materially increased. For a good time, everybody come to Ashley next year.

IMPORTANT WORK.

"Official Register of the National, State and Local Spiritualist Associations of the United States and Canada, With Lyceums, Camp-Meetings and Mediums."

The above is the title of a highly important illustrated work, gotten up with painstaking care, by Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, the efficient vice-president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, 1047 Carmen Avenue, Chicago. It contains 100 pages and will prove of great value to those who wish to get information in regard to the different societies located in various parts of the country. It is gotten up in a most beautifully artistic style, and reflects great credit on its compiler. This long needed work will impress the casual observer with the extensive following we have, and the dignity due to the grandest and most important philosophy now before the whole civilized world. It leads off with a magnificent photo-engraving of Mrs. Abby Louise Pettengill, president of the "City of Light" Assembly, Lily Dale, N. Y., who is a prominent factor in the education process now going on in our ranks. This Official Register can be obtained by addressing this office. Price $1.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

THE SOUL: ITS NATURE, RELATIONS AND EXPRESSIONS IN HUMAN EMBODIMENTS. Third edition now on sale. Price $1.00. This is one of the best books given by the guides of Mrs Cora L. V. Richmond. They are really lessons, published primarily, as a book of reference for those who have been members of the classes receiving them. This volume is a careful compilation from reports of lessons, containing the bases of the teachings.

ROMANISM EXPOSED Is a pamphlet of 30 pages, in reply to Prof. David Swing, Priest Cashman and Dr. Withrow, and is principally in defense of Protestantism. A concise little pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

HELIOGENTRIC ASTROLOGY,

Or Essentials of Astronomy and Solar Mentality, with Tables of Ephemeris to 1910. By Yarmo Vedra. With 64 illustrations, 35 of which are original drawings by Holmes W. Merton, author of "Descriptive Mentality." A new system of personally determining the primary fund of Mental and Physical forces and their results in mental aptitudes that dominate the nature of the individual as based upon date of birth. Price, cloth, $1.50.

"THE DREAM CHILD,"

A Fascinating Romance of Two Worlds. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents. Books like "The Dream Child" spur humanity on to make more and more demands of this nature, and will open up new heights and depths of spiritual knowledge.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Will, I believe, take its place beside Bulwer's "Zanoni" and the "Seraphita" of Balzac.—Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. Although simple and unvarnished with any inflammable descriptions, enthralls the mind to the exclusion of other thoughts, until reluctantly the reader closes the last page.—Minneapolis Sunday Times.

HARMONICS OF EVOLUTION.

The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science

As taught by modern masters of law. By Florence Huntley. An exceedingly interesting and distinctly valuable contribution to the literature of evolution, unfolding its laws from the deeper and clearer spiritual aspect, and indicating the defects of the Darwinian theory. Spiritualists and Materialists alike can gain much from its perusal. Price, finely bound in cloth, $2.

Discovery of a Lost Trail

BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,

Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by this wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail"

Is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

SPIRITUAL HARP A collection of Vocal Music for the Choir, Congregation and Social Circles. By J. M. Peebles and J. O. Barrett; E. H. Bailey, Musical Editor. New edition. Culled from a wide field of literature with the most critical care, free from all theological bias, throbbing with the soul of inspiration, embodying the principles and virtues of the spiritual philosophy, set to the most cheerful and popular music (nearly all original) and adapted to all occasions, it is doubtless the most attractive work of the kind ever published. Its beautiful songs, duets and quartets, with piano, organ or melodeon accompaniment, adapted both to public meetings and the social circles. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 14 cents.

THE GOLDEN ECHOES:

A New Book of Inspirational Words and Music,

For the use of meetings, lyceums and home, by S. W. Tucker. These beautiful songs have already comforted many broken hearts, and it is hoped that they may be heard in every land. Price 15c; $1.50 per dozen. For sale at this office.

A POET'S VIEW.

Bishop A. Beals Offers Some Suggestive Thoughts.

The Progressive Thinker scintillates and glows with the rich and best thoughts of minds stored with knowledge, and from every subject pertaining to science, progress, philosophy, ethics and the soul embodied and disembodied, and no live thinker can peruse its interesting pages from week to week without feeling an awakening within him of latent possibilities making him stronger of purpose and will, and more keenly alive to the nearness of the spirit world.

The issue of August 19 is a very remarkable one, headed with the remarkable experiences with the medium Charles Bailey and before a learned body of men and women, and their testimony to show the crucial test conditions under which the phenomena occurred.

The article of Prof. James H. Hyslop is replete with interest, and the reports of his scientific experiences in psychic research, which must carry great weight on the side of facts going to prove the truth of the continuity of the soul.

The always interesting column of Hudson Tuttle's Answers to Questions, which throws so much light on all subjects pertaining to man and his relations here and hereafter, make that page replete with gems of thought and light, worth alone the price of the paper, and The Progressive Thinker the most important paper of its kind in the world.

But my special object in writing this article was to notice the interesting letter in this issue on the 8th page, from the pen of our veteran medium, speaker, poet and writer, Lyman C. Howe. If affliction, disease and old age have such an illuminating effect on the mind as it seems to in his case, and to quicken with flashes of wit, sarcasm and poetic imagery as flows from his inspired pen, one can almost wish to be afflicted that way if the disease could call out such genius of thought and give such undaunted courage and hope.

One cannot read this letter without seeing how closely allied is that will and mind to the eternal energies of the soul the indestructible mind and spirit of the man, and how unflinchingly brave and heroic he subordinates the pain and sorrow of the body to the will and higher upliftment of the spirit to do the bidding of his mediumistic thought. But it is comforting to see the rosy light of dawn just before, and these brave souls who have given their life energies to aid in the march of spiritual progress will soon feel the summer winds of immortal glory play through their souls where beauty-clouds are alight with the rainbows of joy and peace.

BISHOP A. BEALS.

BUTTE, MONTANA.

An Interesting Account of Special Exercises.

Through the instrumentality of Henry B. Allen, a physical and musical medium of rare merit, who has been with us for several months, and whom we hope to keep with us for several months longer, we have been fortunate enough to procure the services of the president of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association, Rev. Fred D. Dunakin of Cecil, O., who has been lecturing for us in the old Masonic Hall on West Park street, for the last six weeks, on various subjects relating to Spiritualism and its kindred sciences, demonstrating to the inquiring minds that from Sunday to Sunday came out to listen to the inspired teachings of this most gifted and eloquent lecturer, the facts of immortality and the continuity of life beyond the grave. Through our united efforts assisted by this able leader we were successful in organizing a very active working society named The Silver Bow Esoteric Association of workers and investigators along the line of psychic research both in the physical and spiritual.

Our brother, Mr. Dunakin, closed his appointment with us last evening by administering the rite of baptism upon a young lady of our order. Miss Hazel Logue, granddaughter of Mrs. M. E. Logue (Grandma Logue, as she is familiarly known). The ceremony, as given by our speaker, was something new to the people of Butte, and all pronounced it a grand success and a scene long to be remembered. The rostrum was beautifully decorated with flowers and palms, and the young lady, dressed in the richest attire of pure white, was seated in the center with her guardian uncle on one side (she being an orphan) and her grandmother on the other. Mr. Dunakin's discourse for the occasion was on the subject of baptism, showing that the baptism which is administered by the Spiritualists is a baptism of the spirit to unfold our spiritual natures and to bring out the latent spiritual forces within us. The speaker, after requiring the baptismal subject to answer a few questions pertaining to the Declaration of Principles of our philosophy, then said: "These flowers, (holding up a beautiful bouquet of roses and carnations) emblem and type of purity, love and virtue, I bestow on you, emblematical of our divine order and religion, and now in the presence of the witnesses, by the power vested in me as a minister of the gospel of Spiritualism, I baptise you in the name of Love, Purity and Virtue," followed by an invocation.

The ceremony was very affecting and all felt that the divine spirit of Light and Love was showering down benedictions for the occasion.

Mr. Dunakin returns to his home by way of Portland, Oregon, where he will spend a few days to visit the Lewis and Clark Exposition. Thence to Denver, Colo., where his wife is expected to join him, where they will spend some time during the Grand Army Encampment at that place.

We hope to be able to have our brother with us again at some time in the near future, as his work is calculated to build up the cause and add new recruits to our ranks by the plain philosophical statements that through his instrumentality the angel world bestows upon all who hear his eloquent discourses. MRS. MARY L. FIFER, President Silver Bow Esoteric Association.

"Cosmian Hymn Book." A collection of original and relected hymns, for liberal and ethical societies, for schools and the home; compiled by L. K. Washburn. This volume meets a public want. It comprises 258 choice selections of poetry and music, embodying the highest moral sentiment, and free from all sectarianism. Price 50 cents.

"Religious and Theological Works of Thomas Paine," contains his celebrated "Age of Reason," and a number of letters and discourses on religious and theological subjects. Cloth binding, 430 pages. Price $1.

"An Infamous Dynamite Roman Catholic Conspiracy Detected and Exposed." "Romanism Exposed," two pamphlets by Rev. J. G. White, author of Startling Facts. Price 10 cents each, or two for 15 cents.

NOTES FROM G. H. BROOKS.

Explaining Apparent Lack of Activity in Field Work.

It has been a long time since I have sent any letter to the many readers of The Progressive Thinker, which makes its weekly visits to so many homes, and keeps so many posted of the work that is going on. During my long silence I have received a number of letters from my friends, asking me where I was, and what I was doing? As far as possible I have tried to answer them, but there are those who are still wondering why I am seemingly out of the work at least for the present. No doubt there are many who are also wondering why I am not at work. To one and all I will arise and explain. On the return of my wife last spring, I found she would need me at home, and my constant care of her and the home. While she was benefited by her trip to California, yet she was far from well. As soon as I discovered that I gave up all thought of going away, much as I might desire to, and much as I needed the work, and devote myself to my wife, boy and the home, and so I have remained. There has been much for me to do, and I have been more than busy in ways I cannot explain. Indeed I have been so busy up to within a short time, that I have had no time for letter writing, or if I had I should not have been in the spirit to write. Thus have I been busy not on the platform of Spiritualism, but doing as high and holy work, looking after the interest of my family, and aiding in every way I could to bring back the roses to my wife's cheeks.

She is not strong yet, but I believe she will gain, when the heated term expires. Soon I expect to return to my work, and have some one with my wife to care for her while I again go forth with the message Spiritualism has for the people. I consider it a blessed privilege to be blessed by this spiritual power, to be able to go forth trying to give comfort and consolation to a hungry people, who are in need of the great spiritual truths that Spiritualism has to offer. To impress if possible upon a materially-minded world the great fact of the continuity of life, of the law of spirit communion, which when rightly understood gives peace and joy to those who receive its teachings as they should.

This task may not be a pleasant one in one sense of the word, for there is so much to contend with in the presentation of these truths, yet they must be given forth for there are those who are ready for them, and will be blessed in the receiving. For those who are not ready, all there is for them to do is to wait until the soul is ready to receive. It may not be it will be on this plane, they may be obliged to pass through with much ere they can receive, but when they do, then comes the blessing. For over twenty-five years have I been busy in trying to do what I could to spread these truths. I have left no stone unturned, I have done all within my power to build up our societies, to unite them in one grand cause, to show to the world we are a power, and are trying to build up the great cause of truth, and have organized societies, lyceums, ladies' aids, young people's societies, and all things that tend to unite and cement our people in one common cause. I shall say nothing of the discouragements and obstacles to overcome, that belong to all phases of life. So when I am not able to be out and at work, one and all may know that there is a cause that holds me back. And when it comes to wife and family, I consider that a holy and precious charge. I have needed the work, the long strain on me from a financial point has been hard, but some way the way will open, and all will be straight in time. There are times in my life when everything goes against any undertaking I may have, or make. Thus it has seemed to be for my work for fall and winter, but in time that will be made clear, the clouds will roll by, and once more the sun will shine.

I send my love and greetings to one and all, and trust as the days roll into months and the months into years, we shall have all grown, grown into the great fact of spirit communion, of what it means, of where it leads, leading us away and out into new truths, new facts, and at last filling us with peace.

GRAND LEDGE CAMP.

Some Suggestive Items From One of the Visitors—The Infamous Attack on Moses Hull.

Sunday, August 20, was a day of ideal weather at Grand Ledge, Michigan. Strangers found there a camp having beautiful grounds, a commodious auditorium unsurpassed at any other of our western centers, a people, whether transient, or resident in the near-by city, of genial manner and winning sociability and an official board of substantial men and women. On that day the crowd came from near and far, afoot, in carriages which spoke of well-to-do conditions, or aboard the little steamers on Grand River. Officials estimated the number present during the day at almost two thousand individuals. The president of the Illinois State Spiritualists Association spoke both forenoon and afternoon, while Chairman Edgerly closed the latter with words of impressive appropriateness which were received by the campers with hearty approbation, and then the season for 1905 was declared formally ended.

In asking after the best known personalities met there during the last days of the meeting, Mrs. Abbie Sheets naturally comes first in the minds of The Progressive Thinker family. Only a single glance at her welcome face was necessary to tell that she has in the more recent months made real progress towards improved health. Still not strong enough for official burdens, or continuous speaking engagements, yet she is taking up the latter work by degrees and friends are hoping will ere long be fully equal to the labor she holds so sacred and for which choice forces have fitted her.

Mrs. Marian Carpenter, always a favorite here because of her personality and womanly worth, was credited with having outdone herself in the quality of her lectures and the merit of her messages during this year's engagement at Grand Ledge, while it is pleasant to also record that her physical health is apparently better than in past months. Many healing thoughts will go out to her from widely scattered friends.

Mrs. Russell, vice-president of the camp, and Grand Ledge's own medium, was in popular demand for private readings and made many new friends.

Mrs. Alex Caird, of Lynn, Mass., was present during the entire camp and gave marked satisfaction in her private work, while she was gladly welcomed whenever she lent her aid upon the platform. She may, with her earnest husband, Dr. Caird, soon return to their former love and take up residence in Chicago.

Mr. Comstock, residing near Marcellus, a farmer by vocation, gave the fire test often and very successfully without injury to either the mucous membrane of his mouth or the hair and cuticle of his hands. A minister tried to imitate his work at his closing seance, but burned his hand quite severely.

Mrs. C. Oswald of the Englewood Spiritual Union, Chicago, was a personal favorite with the campers and her mediumistic work, both public and private, was heartily commended. Old friends noted certain developments in her psychic powers.

Once again "The Expositor and Yearly Psychic Era and Hull Crucible" is being put in circulation—this time bearing the stamp of the Goshen, Ind., postoffice, instead of Chicago. It is the same in matter as last year. The sneaks back of this anonymous attack upon Moses Hull had better step to the front and assume public responsibility for it before it is forced upon them. Intervening time since its first appearance has not been lost. Financial backer, editor, distributers and the source from which it is supplied have been traced closely home. Its appearance savors of a Mafia-like assassination of character in which only cowards indulge.

Anonymous charges against the Morris Pratt Institute faculty are in circulation. The author of the foul slanders is known. Let the matter go at once to the United States postoffice inspectors. I am myself in receipt of a fresh communication of that character.

GEORGE B. WARNE.

A REAL SPIRIT AT WORK.

It Makes a Noise Which Can Be Heard a Block Away.

A special dispatch to the Chicago American from New York, says:

Strange raps, apparently the sound of a hammer, have upset the Marion section of Jersey City and plunged the residents into an excited discussion as to whether the noise is caused by ghosts. The noises can be heard nightly in the old-fashioned residence on Pavonia, near Giles avenue, where reside Charles William Meyers, his wife, his daughter, aged 19, and his two sons, Charles, 21 years old, and William, 14 years old. The younger boy is an epileptic.

Two weeks ago Charles was awakened by strange, hammer-like raps under the bed in which he and his brother slept.

Strange Noise Repeated.

The next night and following nights the strange noises were repeated.

The younger brother apparently slept through it all.

The next night Brother Charles tied William's hands and feet. But the old tap, tap, tap was heard. The neighbors were skeptical and all said:

"It's William."

And William it seemed to be, for, though tied hand and foot, the rapping would follow him around the house wherever he was carried at night. He was carried into the parlor and trussed up with ropes. The rapping still continued near him. The noise was as if made by a hammer and it could be heard a half block away.

Spirits Want to "Talk."

During the daytime Charles tore out the walls of his room and examined the gabled roof of the house without success. Charles Brown, a Spiritualist, sat through a session of mysterious knocking and announced that some spirit was trying to communicate to the world through the epileptic boy.

Nightly delegations of Marion residents crowd the Meyers home listening to the knocking spook and three of Jersey City's wisest policemen have sat in for a session. The mystery is unsolved and deeper than when it began.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Sunapee Lake Camp.

August 15 was a very rainy day. At 2:30 p. m., a lecture by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding, to a small audience. A good lecture and tests. We all learned something new.

August 16, at 2:30 p. m., lecture and tests. At 7:45 p. m., seance in hall, by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding. The tests were all recognized, and all were well pleased with the seance.

August 17, at 1 p. m., Ladies' Aid fair, which was well attended and was a success every way.

August 18, at 2:30 p. m., lecture and tests by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding. The subject was "Power and Force," and was well delivered, and was spoken well of by everyone.

August 19, at 2:30 p. m., a lecture by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding. Her subject was, "What Is God?" The audience was as good as any of this season. The audience spoke well of the lecture and the speaker.

August 20, at 10:45 a. m., it looked well for a cool day, the air very bracing and everything bid fair to be a good meeting. The president presented Annie Banks Scott of Boston. The speaker opened with a poem, and then with tests, and they all were recognized. At 2:45 p. m., singing followed by a poem written by Lizzie Doten, and music by Miss Ida Bond and Mrs. Millen. The subject, by Mrs. Harding, "What Has Spiritualism Done for Humanity?" There was a large audience and the speaker was very forcible. It was one of Mrs. Harding's best lectures, and this was her last day here.

At 4:30 p. m., the Ladies' Aid Association held their annual meeting for election of officers and the following were chosen: President, Mrs. Addie M. Stevens, Claremont, N. H.; first vice-president, Mrs. Hattie P. Burpee, Sutton, N. H.; second vice-president, Mrs. Susan E. Watson, Hillsboro Br., N. H.; secretary, Mrs. H. G. Newman, Washington, N. H.; treasurer, Mrs. Harriet C. Comstock, Newport, N. H. Business Committee: Mrs. H. C. Comstock, Newport, N. H.; Mrs. Hattie Burpee, Sutton, N. H.; Mrs. Susan E. Watson, Hillsboro, Br., N. H.; Mrs. C. C. Davis, Hartland, Vt.; Mrs. Caroline C. Lull, Claremont, N. H.; Miss Caroline Marcey, Hillsboro, N. H.

At the annual meeting of the Sunapee Lake Camp-meeting Association, Aug. 19, the following officers were elected: President, John Gage, Henniker, N. H.; vice-president, Isaac K. Connor, Warner, N. H.; secretary, Lorenzo Worthen, Hillsboro Bridge, N. H.; treasurer, Mrs. Harriet C. Comstock, Newport, N. H.

Business committee: Thomas Burpee, chairman, Sutton, N. H.; C. E. Gove, Riverdale, N. H.; Isaac K. Connor, Warner, N. H.

Auditors: C. C. Davis, Hartland, Vt.; Mrs. Harriet G. Newman, Washington, N. H.

LORENZO WORTHEN.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

August 20 dawned clear and beautiful, bringing to the camp many seekers after spiritual truths, as an expounder of which no one is superior to W. J. Colville, the speaker of the day. He began the services by singing a solo, "Angels Ever Bright and Fair." Mr. Hunger, the president, in his remarks spoke of the coming dedication of their temple in Cleveland the first Sunday in October. Mr. Colville gave an improvised poem as an invocation. His subject for the morning was "The Evidence of Spiritualism and the Practical Benefits of Spiritualism." He held his audience from start to finish as only he can, giving many points that suited his hearers, as the frequent applause testified.

In the afternoon he sang "The Prince and the Minstrel," then for an hour and a half he placed before his large audience the facts and evidences within his knowledge of individual Immortality. From four to five he answered any questions that were propounded and they were many and varied; his answers were to the point and clearly illustrated so as to be fully understood.

Mrs. Challen was message bearer after both lectures, her last appearance here for the season.

What might have been a serious accident occurred during the morning lecture. Mr. Hunger, our worthy president, sitting at the back of the rostrum, in some way lost his balance and he fell backward with head down between the tent and platform, only his feet remaining in sight. Several gentlemen ran to his assistance and helped to extricate him from his uncomfortable position. He arose smiling and debonair, seemingly none the worse for his involuntary acrobatic feat, which had not even caused a pause in the speaker's flow of eloquence. MARY L. BETTES.

Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

Ashley Camp, Ohio.

Everything is moving along lovely here. The park was never so lovely as now. "Lake Tiberias" is swimming full of fish; sometimes its banks are lined with men, women and children enjoying the fishing. One day last week Mrs. Kibby is reported to have caught one hundred fish. They are small, but make good eating.

The attendance at the meetings has been better than it has been for years past. The people seem to be renewing their interest and everybody is encouraged.

The talent employed are as follows: W. V. Nicum of Dayton, Ohio; Mrs. E. A. Kibby of Cincinnati; Mrs. Margaret Stewart of Piqua, Ohio, and Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, the N. S. A. missionaries, of Jamestown, N. Y.

Mrs. Kibby and Mrs. Stewart are employed for the season. Mr. Nicum has filled his engagement and gone, and Mr. and Mrs. Sprague are here. They held services in our fine auditorium last Sunday, speaking twice to the largest audiences that have been in attendance for years. To-night (Tuesday) Mr. Sprague will speak upon "Marriage and Divorce," and will compare the teachings of the Bible with the teachings of Modern Spiritualism concerning the subject. The Spragues have the rostrum this week and will close the camp next Sunday. They will be assisted by Mrs. Stewart and Mrs. Kibby from time to time.

It is a great pity that the people all over this country do not know of the wonderful mineral spring on this camp ground. It is called the Odovene Well. It is four hundred feet deep, and when first struck was a flowing well; it is pumped now. People come many miles to carry the water away in jugs and bottles. Its wonderful curative qualities have been demonstrated over and over again.

It is the hope of our camp-meeting association that they may soon be able to erect a fine hotel and start a sanitarium here. There is to be a trolley line built soon which will bring the people from Delaware direct to the camp grounds. This will make perfect connections by trolley from Columbus, Ohio and many other smaller towns both north and south. When it is completed then mineral water cures will be plenty, sanitarium, hotels, etc., will be built, the grounds extended and beautified, our large auditorium will be filled from day to day, and the great work of Ashley camp will be materially increased. For a good time, everybody come to Ashley next year.

IMPORTANT WORK.

"Official Register of the National, State and Local Spiritualist Associations of the United States and Canada, With Lyceums, Camp-Meetings and Mediums."

The above is the title of a highly important illustrated work, gotten up with painstaking care, by Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, the efficient vice-president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, 1047 Carmen Avenue, Chicago. It contains 100 pages and will prove of great value to those who wish to get information in regard to the different societies located in various parts of the country. It is gotten up in a most beautifully artistic style, and reflects great credit on its compiler. This long needed work will impress the casual observer with the extensive following we have, and the dignity due to the grandest and most important philosophy now before the whole civilized world. It leads off with a magnificent photo-engraving of Mrs. Abby Louise Pettengill, president of the "City of Light" Assembly, Lily Dale, N. Y., who is a prominent factor in the education process now going on in our ranks. This Official Register can be obtained by addressing this office. Price $1.

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

A POET'S VIEW.

Bishop A. Beals Offers Some Suggestive Thoughts.

The Progressive Thinker scintillates and glows with the rich and best thoughts of minds stored with knowledge, and from every subject pertaining to science, progress, philosophy, ethics and the soul embodied and disembodied, and no live thinker can peruse its interesting pages from week to week without feeling an awakening within him of latent possibilities making him stronger of purpose and will, and more keenly alive to the nearness of the spirit world.

The issue of August 19 is a very remarkable one, headed with the remarkable experiences with the medium Charles Bailey and before a learned body of men and women, and their testimony to show the crucial test conditions under which the phenomena occurred.

The article of Prof. James H. Hyslop is replete with interest, and the reports of his scientific experiences in psychic research, which must carry great weight on the side of facts going to prove the truth of the continuity of the soul.

The always interesting column of Hudson Tuttle's Answers to Questions, which throws so much light on all subjects pertaining to man and his relations here and hereafter, make that page replete with gems of thought and light, worth alone the price of the paper, and The Progressive Thinker the most important paper of its kind in the world.

But my special object in writing this article was to notice the interesting letter in this issue on the 8th page, from the pen of our veteran medium, speaker, poet and writer, Lyman C. Howe. If affliction, disease and old age have such an illuminating effect on the mind as it seems to in his case, and to quicken with flashes of wit, sarcasm and poetic imagery as flows from his inspired pen, one can almost wish to be afflicted that way if the disease could call out such genius of thought and give such undaunted courage and hope.

One cannot read this letter without seeing how closely allied is that will and mind to the eternal energies of the soul the indestructible mind and spirit of the man, and how unflinchingly brave and heroic he subordinates the pain and sorrow of the body to the will and higher upliftment of the spirit to do the bidding of his mediumistic thought. But it is comforting to see the rosy light of dawn just before, and these brave souls who have given their life energies to aid in the march of spiritual progress will soon feel the summer winds of immortal glory play through their souls where beauty-clouds are alight with the rainbows of joy and peace.

BISHOP A. BEALS.

BUTTE, MONTANA.

An Interesting Account of Special Exercises.

Through the instrumentality of Henry B. Allen, a physical and musical medium of rare merit, who has been with us for several months, and whom we hope to keep with us for several months longer, we have been fortunate enough to procure the services of the president of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association, Rev. Fred D. Dunakin of Cecil, O., who has been lecturing for us in the old Masonic Hall on West Park street, for the last six weeks, on various subjects relating to Spiritualism and its kindred sciences, demonstrating to the inquiring minds that from Sunday to Sunday came out to listen to the inspired teachings of this most gifted and eloquent lecturer, the facts of immortality and the continuity of life beyond the grave. Through our united efforts assisted by this able leader we were successful in organizing a very active working society named The Silver Bow Esoteric Association of workers and investigators along the line of psychic research both in the physical and spiritual.

Our brother, Mr. Dunakin, closed his appointment with us last evening by administering the rite of baptism upon a young lady of our order, Miss Hazel Logue, granddaughter of Mrs. M. E. Logue (Grandma Logue, as she is familiarly known). The ceremony, as given by our speaker, was something new to the people of Butte, and all pronounced it a grand success and a scene long to be remembered. The rostrum was beautifully decorated with flowers and palms, and the young lady, dressed in the richest attire of pure white, was seated in the center with her guardian uncle on one side (she being an orphan) and her grandmother on the other. Mr. Dunakin's discourse for the occasion was on the subject of baptism, showing that the baptism which is administered by the Spiritualists is a baptism of the spirit to unfold our spiritual natures and to bring out the latent spiritual forces within us. The speaker, after requiring the baptismal subject to answer a few questions pertaining to the Declaration of Principles of our philosophy, then said: "These flowers, (holding up a beautiful bouquet of roses and carnations) emblem and type of purity, love and virtue, I bestow on you, emblematical of our divine order and religion, and now in the presence of the witnesses, by the power vested in me as a minister of the gospel of Spiritualism, I baptise you in the name of Love, Purity and Virtue," followed by an invocation.

The ceremony was very affecting and all felt that the divine spirit of Light and Love was showering down benedictions for the occasion.

Mr. Dunakin returns to his home by way of Portland, Oregon, where he will spend a few days to visit the Lewis and Clark Exposition. Thence to Denver, Colo., where his wife is expected to join him, where they will spend some time during the Grand Army Encampment at that place.

We hope to be able to have our brother with us again at some time in the near future, as his work is calculated to build up the cause and add new recruits to our ranks by the plain philosophical statements that through his instrumentality the angel world bestows upon all who hear his eloquent discourses. MRS. MARY L. FIFER,

President Silver Bow Esoteric Association.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

THE SOUL: ITS NATURE, RELATIONS AND EXPRESSIONS IN HUMAN EMBODIMENTS. Third edition now on sale. Price $1.00. This is one of the best books given by the guides of Mrs Cora L. V. Richmond. They are really lessons, published primarily, as a book of reference for those who have been members of the classes receiving them. This volume is a careful compilation from reports of lessons, containing the bases of the teachings.

ROMANISM EXPOSED Is a pamphlet of 30 pages, in reply to Prof. David Swing, Priest Cashman and Dr. Withrow, and is principally in defense of Protestantism. A concise little pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

HELIOGENTRIC ASTROLOGY,

Or Essentials of Astronomy and Solar Mentality, with Tables of Ephemeris to 1910. By Yarmo Vedra. With 64 illustrations, 35 of which are original drawings by Holmes W. Merton, author of "Descriptive Mentality." A new system of personally determining the primary fund of Mental and Physical forces and their results in mental aptitudes that dominate the nature of the individual as based upon date of birth. Price, cloth, $1.50.

"THE DREAM CHILD,"

A Fascinating Romance of Two Worlds. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents. Books like "The Dream Child" spur humanity on to make more and more demands of this nature, and will open up new heights and depths of spiritual knowledge.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Will, I believe, take its place beside Bulwer's "Zanoni" and the "Seraphita" of Balzac.—Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. Although simple and unvarnished with any inflammable descriptions, enthralls the mind to the exclusion of other thoughts, until reluctantly the reader closes the last page.—Minneapolis Sunday Times.

HARMONIGS OF EVOLUTION.

The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science

As taught by modern masters of law. By Florence Huntley. An exceedingly interesting and distinctly valuable contribution to the literature of evolution, unfolding its laws from the deeper and clearer spiritual aspect, and indicating the defects of the Darwinian theory. Spiritualists and Materialists alike can gain much from its perusal. Price, finely bound in cloth, $2.

Discovery of a Lost Trail

BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,

Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by this wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail"

is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

SPIRITUAL HARP A collection of Vocal Music for the Choir, Congregation and Social Circles. By J. M. Peebles and J. O. Barrett; E. H. Bailey, Musical Editor. New edition. Culled from a wide field of literature with the most critical care, free from all theological bias, throbbing with the soul of inspiration, embodying the principles and virtues of the spiritual philosophy, set to the most cheerful and popular music (nearly all original) and adapted to all occasions, it is doubtless the most attractive work of the kind ever published. Its beautiful songs, duets and quartets, with piano, organ or melodeon accompaniment, adapted both to public meetings and the social circles. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 14 cents.

THE GOLDEN ECHOES:

A New Book of Inspirational Words and Music,

For the use of meetings, lyceums and home, by C. W. Tucker. These beautiful songs have already comforted many broken hearts, and it is hoped that they may be heard in every land. Price 15c; $1.40 per dozen. For sale at this office.

NOTES FROM G. H. BROOKS.

Explaining Apparent Lack of Activity in Field Work.

It has been a long time since I have sent any letter to the many readers of The Progressive Thinker, which makes its weekly visits to so many homes, and keeps so many posted of the work that is going on. During my long silence I have received a number of letters from my friends, asking me where I was, and what I was doing? As far as possible I have tried to answer them, but there are those who are still wondering why I am seemingly out of the work at least for the present. No doubt there are many who are also wondering why I am not at work. To one and all I will arise and explain. On the return of my wife last spring, I found she would need me at home, and my constant care of her and the home. While she was benefited by her trip to California, yet she was far from well. As soon as I discovered that I gave up all thought of going away, much as I might desire to, and much as I needed the work, and devote myself to my wife, boy and the home, and so I have remained. There has been much for me to do, and I have been more than busy in ways I cannot explain. Indeed I have been so busy up to within a short time, that I have had no time for letter writing, or if I had I should not have been in the spirit to write. Thus have I been busy not on the platform of Spiritualism, but doing as high and holy work, looking after the interest of my family, and aiding in every way I could to bring back the roses to my wife's cheeks.

She is not strong yet, but I believe she will gain, when the heated term expires. Soon I expect to return to my work, and have some one with my wife to care for her while I again go forth with the message Spiritualism has for the people. I consider it a blessed privilege to be blessed by this spiritual power, to be able to go forth trying to give comfort and consolation to a hungry people, who are in need of the great spiritual truths that Spiritualism has to offer. To impress if possible upon a materially-minded world the great fact of the continuity of life, of the law of spirit communion, which when rightly understood gives peace and joy to those who receive its teachings as they should.

This task may not be a pleasant one in one sense of the word, for there is so much to contend with in the presentation of these truths, yet they must be given forth for there are those who are ready for them, and will be blessed in the receiving. For those who are not ready, all there is for them to do is to wait until the soul is ready to receive. It may not be it will be on this plane, they may be obliged to pass through with much ere they can receive, but when they do, then comes the blessing. For over twenty-five years have I been busy in trying to do what I could to spread these truths. I have left no stone unturned, I have done all within my power to build up our societies, to unite them in one grand cause, to show to the world we are a power, and are trying to build up the great cause of truth, and have organized societies, lyceums, ladies' aids, young people's societies, and all things that tend to unite and cement our people in one common cause. I shall say nothing of the discouragements and obstacles to overcome, that belong to all phases of life. So when I am not able to be out and at work, one and all may know that there is a cause that holds me back. And when it comes to wife and family, I consider that a holy and precious charge. I have needed the work, the long strain on me from a financial point has been hard, but some way the way will open, and all will be straight in time. There are times in my life when everything goes against any undertaking I may have, or make. Thus it has seemed to be for my work for fall and winter, but in time that will be made clear, the clouds will roll by, and once more the sun will shine.

I send my love and greetings to one and all, and trust as the days roll into months and the months into years, we shall have all grown, grown into the great fact of spirit communion, of what it means, of where it leads, leading us away and out into new truths, new facts, and at last filling us with peace.

GRAND LEDGE CAMP.

Some Suggestive Items From One of the Visitors—The Infamous Attack on Moses Hull.

Sunday, August 20, was a day of ideal weather at Grand Ledge, Michigan. Strangers found there a camp having beautiful grounds, a commodious auditorium unsurpassed at any other of our western centers, a people, whether transient, or resident in the near-by city, of genial manner and winning sociability and an official board of substantial men and women. On that day the crowd came from near and far, afoot, in carriages which spoke of well-to-do conditions, or aboard the little steamers on Grand River. Officials estimated the number present during the day at almost two thousand individuals. The president of the Illinois State Spiritualists Association spoke both forenoon and afternoon, while Chairman Edgerly closed the latter with words of impressive appropriateness which were received by the campers with hearty approbation, and then the season for 1905 was declared formally ended.

In asking after the best known personalities met there during the last days of the meeting, Mrs. Abbie Sheets naturally comes first in the minds of The Progressive Thinker family. Only a single glance at her welcome face was necessary to tell that she has in the more recent months made real progress towards improved health. Still not strong enough for official burdens, or continuous speaking engagements, yet she is taking up the latter work by degrees and friends are hoping will ere long be fully equal to the labor she holds so sacred and for which choice forces have fitted her.

Mrs. Marian Carpenter, always a favorite here because of her personality and womanly worth, was credited with having outdone herself in the quality of her lectures and the merit of her messages during this year's engagement at Grand Ledge, while it is pleasant to also record that her physical health is apparently better than in past months. Many healing thoughts will go out to her from widely scattered friends.

Mrs. Russell, vice-president of the camp, and Grand Ledge's own medium, was in popular demand for private readings and made many new friends.

Mrs. Alex Caird, of Lynn, Mass., was present during the entire camp and gave marked satisfaction in her private work, while she was gladly welcomed whenever she lent her aid upon the platform. She may, with her earnest husband, Dr. Caird, soon return to their former love and take up residence in Chicago.

Mr. Comstock, residing near Marcellus, a farmer by vocation, gave the fire test often and very successfully without injury to either the mucous membrane of his mouth or the hair and cuticle of his hands. A minister tried to imitate his work at his closing seance, but burned his hand quite severely.

Mrs. C. Oswald of the Englewood Spiritual Union, Chicago, was a personal favorite with the campers and her mediumistic work, both public and private, was heartily commended. Old friends noted certain developments in her psychic powers.

Once again "The Expositor and Yearly Psychic Era and Hull Crucible" is being put in circulation—this time bearing the stamp of the Goshen, Ind., post-office, instead of Chicago. It is the same in matter as last year. The sneaks back of this anonymous attack upon Moses Hull had better step to the front and assume public responsibility for it before it is forced upon them. Intervening time since its first appearance has not been lost. Financial backer, editor, distributers and the source from which it is supplied have been traced closely home. Its appearance savors of a Mafia-like assassination of character in which only cowards indulge.

Anonymous charges against the Morris Pratt Institute faculty are in circulation. The author of the foul slanders is known. Let the matter go at once to the United States postoffice inspectors. I am myself in receipt of a fresh communication of that character.

GEORGE B. WARNE.

A REAL SPIRIT AT WORK.

It Makes a Noise Which Can Be Heard a Block Away.

A special dispatch to the Chicago American from New York, says:

Strange raps, apparently the sound of a hammer, have upset the Marion section of Jersey City and plunged the residents into an excited discussion as to whether the noise is caused by ghosts. The noises can be heard nightly in the old-fashioned residence on Pavonia, near Giles avenue, where reside Charles William Meyers, his wife, his daughter, aged 19, and his two sons, Charles, 21 years old, and William, 14 years old. The younger boy is an epileptic.

Two weeks ago Charles was awakened by strange, hammer-like raps under the bed in which he and his brother slept.

Strange Noise Repeated.

The next night and following nights the strange noises were repeated.

The younger brother apparently slept through it all.

The next night Brother Charles tied William's hands and feet. But the old tap, tap, tap was heard. The neighbors were skeptical and all said:

"It's William."

And William it seemed to be, for, though tied hand and foot, the rapping would follow him around the house wherever he was carried at night. He was carried into the parlor and trussed up with ropes. The rapping still continued near him. The noise was as if made by a hammer and it could be heard a half block away.

Spirits Want to "Talk."

During the daytime Charles tore out the walls of his room and examined the gabled roof of the house without success. Charles Brown, a Spiritualist, sat through a session of mysterious knocking and announced that some spirit was trying to communicate to the world through the epileptic boy.

Nightly delegations of Marion residents crowd the Meyers home listening to the knocking spook and three of Jersey City's wisest policemen have sat in for a session. The mystery is unsolved and deeper than when it began.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 100 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

"The Jesuits." By Rev. B. F. Austin, A. M., B. D. An excellent pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

Sunapee Lake Camp.

August 15 was a very rainy day. At 2:30 p. m., a lecture by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding, to a small audience. A good lecture and tests. We all learned something new.

August 16, at 2.30 p. m., lecture and tests. At 7:45 p. m., seance in hall, by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding. The tests were all recognized, and all were well pleased with the seance.

August 17, at 1 p. m., Ladies' Aid fair, which was well attended and was a success every way.

August 18, at 2:30 p. m., lecture and tests by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding. The subject was "Power and Force," and was well delivered, and was spoken well of by everyone.

August 19, at 2:30 p. m., a lecture by Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding. Her subject was, "What Is God?" The audience was as good as any of this season. The audience spoke well of the lecture and the speaker.

August 20, at 10:45 a. m., it looked well for a cool day, the air very bracing and everything bid fair to be a good meeting. The president presented Annie Banks Scott of Boston. The speaker opened with a poem, and then with tests, and they all were recognized. At 2:45 p. m., singing followed by a poem written by Lizzie Doten, and music by Miss Ida Bond and Mrs. Millen. The subject, by Mrs. Harding, "What Has Spiritualism Done for Humanity?" There was a large audience and the speaker was very forcible. It was one of Mrs. Harding's best lectures, and this was her last day here.

At 4:30 p. m., the Ladies' Aid Association held their annual meeting for election of officers and the following were chosen: President, Mrs. Addie M. Stevens, Charemont, N. H.; first vice-president, Mrs. Hattie P. Burpee, Sutton, N. H.; second vice-president, Mrs. Susan E. Watson, Hillsboro Br., N. H.; secretary, Mrs. H. G. Newman, Washington, N. H.; treasurer, Mrs. Harriet C. Comstock, Newport, N. H. Business Committee: Mrs. H. C. Comstock, Newport, N. H.; Mrs. Hattie Burpee, Sutton, N. H.; Mrs. Susan E. Watson, Hillsboro, Br., N. H.; Mrs. C. C. Davis, Hartland, Vt.; Mrs. Caroline C. Lull, Charemont, N. H.; Miss Caroline Marcey, Hillsboro, N. H.

At the annual meeting of the Sunapee Lake Camp-meeting Association, Aug. 19, the following officers were elected: President, John Gage, Henniker, N. H.; vice-president, Isaac K. Connor, Warner, N. H.; secretary, Lorenzo Worthen, Hillsboro Bridge, N. H.; treasurer, Mrs. Harriet C. Comstock, Newport, N. H.

Business committee: Thomas Burpee, chairman, Sutton, N. H.; C. E. Gove, Riverdale, N. H.; Isaac K. Connor, Warner, N. H.

Auditors: C. C. Davis, Hartland, Vt.; Mrs. Harriet G. Newman, Washington, N. H.

LORENZO WORTHEN.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

August 20 dawned clear and beautiful, bringing to the camp many seekers after spiritual truths, as an expounder of which no one is superior to W. J. Colville, the speaker of the day. He began the services by singing a solo, "Angels Ever Bright and Fair." Mr. Hunger, the president, in his remarks spoke of the coming dedication of their temple in Cleveland the first Sunday in October. Mr. Colville gave an improvised poem as an invocation. His subject for the morning was "The Evidence of Spiritualism and the Practical Benefits of Spiritualism." He held his audience from start to finish as only he can, giving many points that suited his hearers, as the frequent applause testified.

In the afternoon he sang "The Prince and the Minstrel," then for an hour and a half he placed before his large audience the facts and evidences within his knowledge of individual Immortality. From four to five he answered any questions that were propounded and they were many and varied; his answers were to the point and clearly illustrated so as to be fully understood.

Mrs. Challen was message bearer after both lectures, her last appearance here for the season.

What might have been a serious accident occurred during the morning lecture. Mr. Hunger, our worthy president, sitting at the back of the rostrum, in some way lost his balance and he fell backward with head down between the tent and platform, only his feet remaining in sight. Several gentlemen ran to his assistance and helped to extricate him from his uncomfortable position. He arose smiling and debonair, seemingly none the worse for his involuntary acrobatic feat, which had not even caused a pause in the speaker's flow of eloquence. MARY L. BETTES.

Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

Ashley Camp, Ohio.

Everything is moving along lovely here. The park was never so lovely as now. "Lake Tiberias" is swimming full of fish; sometimes its banks are lined with men, women and children enjoying the fishing. One day last week Mrs. Kibby is reported to have caught one hundred fish. They are small, but make good eating.

The attendance at the meetings has been better than it has been for years past. The people seem to be renewing their interest and everybody is encouraged.

The talent employed are as follows: W. V. Nicum of Dayton, Ohio; Mrs. E. A. Kibby of Cincinnati; Mrs. Margaret Stewart of Piqua, Ohio, and Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, the N. S. A. missionaries, of Jamestown, N. Y.

Mrs. Kibby and Mrs. Stewart are employed for the season. Mr. Nicum has filled his engagement and gone, and Mr. and Mrs. Sprague are here. They held services in our fine auditorium last Sunday, speaking twice to the largest audiences that have been in attendance for years. To-night (Tuesday) Mr. Sprague will speak upon "Marriage and Divorce," and will compare the teachings of the Bible with the teachings of Modern Spiritualism concerning the subject. The Spragues have the rostrum this week and will close the camp next Sunday. They will be assisted by Mrs. Stewart and Mrs. Kibby from time to time.

It is a great pity that the people all over this country do not know of the wonderful mineral spring on this camp ground. It is called the Odovene Well. It is four hundred feet deep, and when first struck was a flowing well; it is pumped now. People come many miles to carry the water away in jugs and bottles. Its wonderful curative qualities have been demonstrated over and over again.

It is the hope of our camp-meeting association that they may soon be able to erect a fine hotel and start a sanitarium here. There is to be a trolley line built soon which will bring the people from Delaware direct to the camp grounds. This will make perfect connections by trolley from Columbus, Ohio and many other smaller towns both north and south. When it is completed then mineral water cures will be plenty, sanitarium, hotels, etc., will be built, the grounds extended and beautified, our large auditorium will be filled from day to day, and the great work of Ashley camp will be materially increased. For a good time, everybody come to Ashley next year.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

THE SOUL: ITS NATURE, RELATIONS AND EXPRESSIONS IN HUMAN EMBODIMENTS. Third edition now on sale. Price $1.00. This is one of the best books given by the guides of Mrs Cora L. V. Richmond. They are really lessons, published primarily, as a book of reference for those who have been members of the classes receiving them. This volume is a careful compilation from reports of lessons, containing the bases of the teachings.

ROMANISM EXPOSED Is a pamphlet of 30 pages, in reply to Prof. David Swing, Priest Cashman and Dr. Withrow, and is principally in defense of Protestantism. A concise little pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

HELIOGENTRIC ASTROLOGY,

Or Essentials of Astronomy and Solar Mentality, with Tables of Ephemeris to 1910. By Yarmo Vedra. With 64 illustrations, 35 of which are original drawings by Holmes W. Merton, author of "Descriptive Mentality." A new system of personally determining the primary fund of Mental and Physical forces and their results in mental aptitudes that dominate the nature of the individual as based upon date of birth. Price, cloth, $1.50.

"THE DREAM CHILD,"

A Fascinating Romance of Two Worlds. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents. Books like "The Dream Child" spur humanity on to make more and more demands of this nature, and will open up new heights and depths of spiritual knowledge.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Will, I believe, take its place beside Bulwer's "Zanoni" and the "Seraphita" of Balzac.—Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. Although simple and unvarnished with any inflammable descriptions, enthralls the mind to the exclusion of other thoughts, until reluctantly the reader closes the last page.—Minneapolis Sunday Times.

HARMONICS OF EVOLUTION.

The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science

As taught by modern masters of law. By Florence Huntley. An exceedingly interesting and distinctly valuable contribution to the literature of evolution, unfolding its laws from the deeper and clearer spiritual aspect, and indicating the defects of the Darwinian theory. Spiritualists and Materialists alike can gain much from its perusal. Price, finely bound in cloth, $2.

Discovery of a Lost Trail

BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,

Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by this wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail"

is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

SPIRITUAL HARP A collection of Vocal Music for the Choir, Congregation and Social Circles. By J. M. Peebles and J. O. Barrett; E. H. Bailey, Musical Editor. New edition. Culled from a wide field of literature with the most critical care, free from all theological bias, throbbing with the soul of inspiration, embodying the principles and virtues of the spiritual philosophy, set to the most cheerful and popular music (nearly all original) and adapted to all occasions, it is doubtless the most attractive work of the kind ever published. Its beautiful songs, duets and quartets, with piano, organ or melodeon accompaniment, adapted both to public meetings and the social circles. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 14 cents.

THE GOLDEN ECHOES:

A New Book of Inspirational Words and Music,

For the use of meetings, lyceums and home, by S. W. Tucker. These beautiful songs have already comforted many broken hearts, and it is hoped that they may be heard in every land. Price 15c; $1.50 per dozen. For sale at this office.

A POET'S VIEW.

Bishop A. Beals Offers Some Suggestive Thoughts.

The Progressive Thinker scintillates and glows with the rich and best thoughts of minds stored with knowledge, and from every subject pertaining to science, progress, philosophy, ethics and the soul embodied and disembodied, and no live thinker can peruse its interesting pages from week to week without feeling an awakening within him of latent possibilities making him stronger of purpose and will, and more keenly alive to the nearness of the spirit world.

The issue of August 19 is a very remarkable one, headed with the remarkable experiences with the medium Charles Bailey and before a learned body of men and women, and their testimony to show the crucial test conditions under which the phenomena occurred.

The article of Prof. James H. Hyslop is replete with interest, and the reports of his scientific experiences in psychic research, which must carry great weight on the side of facts going to prove the truth of the continuity of the soul.

The always interesting column of Hudson Tuttle's Answers to Questions, which throws so much light on all subjects pertaining to man and his relations here and hereafter, make that page replete with gems of thought and light, worth alone the price of the paper, and The Progressive Thinker the most important paper of its kind in the world.

But my special object in writing this article was to notice the interesting letter in this issue on the 8th page, from the pen of our veteran medium, speaker, poet and writer, Lyman C. Howe. If affliction, disease and old age have such an illuminating effect on the mind as it seems to in his case, and to quicken with flashes of wit, sarcasm and poetic imagery as flows from his inspired pen, one can almost wish to be afflicted that way if the disease could call out such genius of thought and give such undaunted courage and hope.

One cannot read this letter without seeing how closely allied is that will and mind to the eternal energies of the soul the indestructible mind and spirit of the man, and how unflinchingly brave and heroic he subordinates the pain and sorrow of the body to the will and higher upliftment of the spirit to do the bidding of his mediumistic thought. But it is comforting to see the rosy light of dawn just before, and these brave souls who have given their life energies to aid in the march of spiritual progress will soon feel the summer winds of immortal glory play through their souls where beauty-clouds are alight with the rainbows of joy and peace.

BISHOP A. BEALS.

Summerland, Cal.

BUTTE, MONTANA.

An Interesting Account of Special Exercises.

Through the instrumentality of Henry B. Allen, a physical and musical medium of rare merit, who has been with us for several months, and whom we hope to keep with us for several months longer, we have been fortunate enough to procure the services of the president of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association, Rev. Fred D. Dunakin of Cecil, O., who has been lecturing for us in the old Masonic Hall on West Park street, for the last six weeks, on various subjects relating to Spiritualism and its kindred sciences, demonstrating to the inquiring minds that from Sunday to Sunday came out to listen to the inspired teachings of this most gifted and eloquent lecturer, the facts of immortality and the continuity of life beyond the grave. Through our united efforts assisted by this able leader we were successful in organizing a very active working society named The Silver Bow Esoteric Association of workers and investigators along the line of psychic research both in the physical and spiritual.

Our brother, Mr. Dunakin, closed his appointment with us last evening by administering the rite of baptism upon a young lady of our order, Miss Hazel Logue, granddaughter of Mrs. M. E. Logue (Grandma Logue, as she is familiarly known). The ceremony, as given by our speaker, was something new to the people of Butte, and all pronounced it a grand success and a scene long to be remembered. The rostrum was beautifully decorated with flowers and palms, and the young lady, dressed in the richest attire of pure white, was seated in the center with her guardian uncle on one side (she being an orphan) and her grandmother on the other. Mr. Dunakin's discourse for the occasion was on the subject of baptism, showing that the baptism which is administered by the Spiritualists is a baptism of the spirit to unfold our spiritual natures and to bring out the latent spiritual forces within us. The speaker, after requiring the baptismal subject to answer a few questions pertaining to the Declaration of Principles of our philosophy, then said: "These flowers, (holding up a beautiful bouquet of roses and carnations) emblem and type of purity, love and virtue, I bestow on you, emblematical of our divine order and religion, and now in the presence of the witnesses, by the power vested in me as a minister of the gospel of Spiritualism, I baptise you in the name of Love, Purity and Virtue," followed by an invocation.

The ceremony was very affecting and all felt that the divine spirit of Light and Love was showering down benedictions for the occasion.

Mr. Dunakin returns to his home by way of Portland, Oregon, where he will spend a few days to visit the Lewis and Clark Exposition. Thence to Denver, Colo., where his wife is expected to join him, where they will spend some time during the Grand Army Encampment at that place.

We hope to be able to have our brother with us again at some time in the near future, as his work is calculated to build up the cause and add new recruits to our ranks by the plain philosophical statements that through his instrumentality the angel world bestows upon all who hear his eloquent discourses. NOTES FROM G. H. BROOKS.

Explaining Apparent Lack of Activity in Field Work.

It has been a long time since I have sent any letter to the many readers of The Progressive Thinker, which makes its weekly visits to so many homes, and keeps so many posted of the work that is going on. During my long silence I have received a number of letters from my friends, asking me where I was, and what I was doing? As far as possible I have tried to answer them, but there are those who are still wondering why I am seemingly out of the work at least for the present. No doubt there are many who are also wondering why I am not at work. To one and all I will arise and explain. On the return of my wife last spring, I found she would need me at home, and my constant care of her and the home. While she was benefited by her trip to California, yet she was far from well. As soon as I discovered that I gave up all thought of going away, much as I might desire to, and much as I needed the work, and devote myself to my wife, boy and the home, and so I have remained. There has been much for me to do, and I have been more than busy in ways I cannot explain. Indeed I have been so busy, up to within a short time, that I have had no time for letter writing, or if I had I should not have been in the spirit to write. Thus have I been busy not on the platform of Spiritualism, but doing as high and holy work, looking after the interest of my family, and aiding in every way I could to bring back the roses to my wife's cheeks.

She is not strong yet, but I believe she will gain, when the heated term expires. Soon I expect to return to my work, and have some one with my wife to care for her while I again go forth with the message Spiritualism has for the people. I consider it a blessed privilege to be blessed by this spiritual power, to be able to go forth trying to give comfort and consolation to a hungry people, who are in need of the great spiritual truths that Spiritualism has to offer. To impress if possible upon a materially-minded world the great fact of the continuity of life, of the law of spirit communion, which when rightly understood gives peace and joy to those who receive its teachings as they should.

This task may not be a pleasant one in one sense of the word, for there is so much to contend with in the presentation of these truths, yet they must be given forth for there are those who are ready for them, and will be blessed in the receiving. For those who are not ready, all there is for them to do is to wait until the soul is ready to receive. It may not be it will be on this plane, they may be obliged to pass through with much ere they can receive, but when they do, then comes the blessing. For over twenty-five years have I been busy in trying to do what I could to spread these truths. I have left no stone unturned, I have done all within my power to build up our societies, to unite them in one grand cause, to show to the world we are a power, and are trying to build up the great cause of truth, and have organized societies, lyceums, ladies' aids, young people's societies, and all things that tend to unite and cement our people in one common cause. I shall say nothing of the discouragements and obstacles to overcome, that belong to all phases of life. So when I am not able to be out and at work, one and all may know that there is a cause that holds me back. And when it comes to wife and family, I consider that a holy and precious charge. I have needed the work, the long strain on me from a financial point has been hard, but some way the way will open, and all will be straight in time. There are times in my life when everything goes against any undertaking I may have, or make. Thus it has seemed to be for my work for fall and winter, but in time that will be made clear, the clouds will roll by, and once more the sun will shine.

I send my love and greetings to one and all, and trust as the days roll into months and the months into years, we shall have all grown, grown into the great fact of spirit communion, of what it means, of where it leads, leading us away and out into new truths, new facts, and at last filling us with peace.

VOL. 32. CHICAGO, ILL., SEPT 9, 1905. NO. 824

A Slice of Paradise.

LILY DALE CAMP.

The City of Light Assembly at Lily Dale, N. Y., and the Great Spirit of This Unique Enterprise.

Half-way between Jamestown and Dunkirk, N. Y., a slice of Paradise was dropped to gladden the heart of man. It was named Lily Dale, and here in the young days of Spiritualist camp meetings Marian Skidmore and a host of earnest workers, most of whom have now gone home, thought and plodded and toiled to make this beauty spot the great center of Spiritualism of this country. The workers carried out the noble plans of its founder as near as human fallibility could, but Marian Skidmore found no successor to correctly interpret her ideas, as indeed what great leader does?

Three years ago a new genius presided in the chair, another woman, another prophet, who had a still greater vision.

Who is competent to interpret the lofty conceptions in the mind of Abby Louise Pettengill, the anointed priestess of this enchanted spot? Only as from year to year we read the records of work accomplished can we conceive what her advanced mind has mapped out, the large meaning back of what appears insignificant perhaps. The name was changed to conform to the new enlarged scope of the work, and the City of Light Assembly, a school for psychic fact and phenomena, stands as a beacon light to teach all the world the largest truths of most vital importance which have so far dawned upon humanity.

As in all successful enterprises one supreme mind lays out the work and designs the pattern and then with care chooses the workmen to carry out the ideal, so has this remarkable woman drawn around herself a company of workers, who for adaptability, intelligence and spirituality combined I have not found equaled in any board, be the work for industrial, political or reform purposes.

Perhaps there is no one of these who has the personal interests of Mrs. Pettengill any nearer at heart nor would work any more hours out the twenty-four to serve her than Albert C. White, the treasurer, who has for years lived at Lily Dale, and with Homer Todd, another trustee, has become imbued with the everyday life of the place. These gentlemen are better acquainted with the needs for the comforts of residents at Lily Dale than the rest and have a large share in the essentials to its best progress, and furnish most desirable qualities needed for the perfect completeness of the whole.

New York is not the only state, however, which has furnished material for this board; several states have been called upon to supply clear brains, warm hearts and busy hands to evolve the ideas matured by its chieftain.

Mrs. Annette J. Pettengill of Boston, is a most valuable member of this board. She possesses that most enviable quality of having everybody like her on sight, and to know her better but strengthens your first impression. She is a woman of refinement and culture, with excellent judgment, fine perceptive qualities, quiet in her strength, persistent in her gentleness, with a highly developed mediumship of rare discernment and a spiritual clairvoyant. All honest mediums coming to Lily Dale find in her another friend and a strong ally.

Mrs. Esther C. Humphries of New York City enriches the board with her valuable experiences gathered as the very successful president of the Willing Workers.

Everybody likes to work with her. To harmonize ten dozen women from as many states and imbue them with a steady purpose for the success of a common cause is no light task.

Mrs. Humphries assumed this mission with the apparent ease of the natural leader. The rocks upon which many womans' societies have split, she gently pushed to one side as if they were but pebbles. She adds dainty artistic qualities to a genial inspiring presence which cannot fail to enthuse those with whom she labors.

Mrs. Eulalie Evstaphieve of Buffalo, the secretary, is a splendid addition, although not a member of the board. Early and late she is at her post, everlastingly keeping at it; the books of the association are kept as carefully as those of a bank and more correctly than some. I have met secretaries whose work was a labor of love and others whose salaries were thousands of dollars, secretaries who could not decipher their own writings and others whose chirography was as steel plate, but in all my experiences with secretaries I have yet to find one whose uniform courtesy and never-ending patience can compare with these valuable qualities as exhibited by Mrs. Evstaphieve. She is a treasure in that office, and the country visitor who wishes to borrow a pencil in order to send an important postal home, telling the "folks" she has arrived, receives a seat and a nicely sharpened pencil with the same sunny smile and affability with which the seeker for a lost umbrella or the donor of $50 for the cause are welcomed, while the inquirers for a time table or program are furnished with these necessities as courteously as were they indeed diplomats representing a foreign nation.

The great mainstay of the business affairs of the assembly is Henry A. Everett, of Cleveland, the son-in-law of Mrs. Pettengill, whom the papers laud as the most successful and popular millionaire of the Buckeye State. He has something much better than money—good manners—and is every inch a gentleman. Frankly admitting that he is no Spiritualist, he wishes it understood that he is in the board to help "mother" carry out her high ideals. He knows her heart is set on the success of the City of Light, and because he loves "Mother" he steps in with his wide business experience, keen sagacity, strong helpfulness and push, and adds a large share to its success. His clear vision is not clouded by prejudice, and while with practical common sense he guides the business affairs, he leaves it for the rest to dictate the policy of this the largest and most advanced center of Spiritualism and higher thought in the world.

And what of its president? Who can delineate her lofty aspirations or in justice describe her many noble qualities?

She simply cannot be described, and it is only as you can "sense" her that you can comprehend or in a measure follow her. The secular press has spent ink by the bucket lauding her beauty, her queenly bearing, gracious manners and perfect fitting gowns; this is all but too apparent to the most casual observer. She is indeed an ideal woman. But the real source of her power lies within.

The spirit world in selecting her as the guiding star of the Assembly chose a finely attuned instrument to carry out their lofty plans,

She is wise to choose, strong to build and unerringly keeps the standard aloft.

She is a peer of her sex which arrogates to itself the larger share of the world's sweetness and purity and spirituality.

She has helped broaden the path and made it easier for weaker ones to follow. Abby Louise Pettengill stands today as a towering leader of progressive thought. What dreamers hope for, she make a reality—with the leadership of a Joan D'Arc, the executive ability of a Queen Victoria, she sails among the stars with Tycho Brahe yet has the altruistic love for all creation of a Frances Willard; like her no financier, but a free spender of heart, of time, of strength, of money, all she has and all she is, for the cause.

Is it to be wondered at that I look forward with anticipation to the new experiences and added blessings which will come to me in working with such chosen women and men as these? With my best efforts and most faithful endeavor I could never hope to return to them in kind what I am sure I shall receive, but must pass it on.

The City of Light has a glorious future before it. Nature has here lavished her richest treasures and here the horticulturist has exhausted his art trying to outdo himself.

It has the largest number of residents, the most cottages, finest hotels, amplest auditorium, purest water and best sanitary system of any Spiritualist assembly ground in the world—with a woman at its head and women predominating on its board.

The greatest intellects of the age have expounded from its rostrum, and yet it is only in the morning of its infancy, a greater power and a larger splendor will be revealed with each succeeding year. It is the imperishable heritage of this assembly whose cornerstones are Unity, Wisdom, Peace and Love; her work the upliftment of humanity and the enlightenment of the race.

INSPIRATION.

I walked out in the early morn,
The dew was on the flowers,
The sun had kissed the waving corn
In the golden morning hours.

I heard the zephyrs softly sigh,
I felt their friendly play,
I saw the white ships of the sky,
As they peacefully sailed away.

I heard the birds' good morning lay,
I heard the bees' reply,
My soul breathed of that perfect day,
And to nature I drew nigh.

And then it seemed as though I heard,
A wonderful melody,
For every tree and flower and bird
Sang a great doxology.

It spoke to me, that song so great,
My soul took up the strain,
I think that unto heaven's gate
Was carried the glad refrain.

I do not know how long we sang,
I know but the song's great power,
Deep to my soul that music rang
In that consecration hour.

That song for me will never die,
Its strains I sometimes hear;
And then my soul is lifted high,
And to heaven I seem near.

Its music oft is brought to me,
In the laugh of a child—
Again that happy morn I see
When all seemed undefiled.

I hear it in the lullaby
Sung to the little one,
I hear it in the powerful cry
Of a nation's rising son.

Some day that song I'll sing again,
And then my heart shall flow
To all the weary hearts of men,
That their souls with song may glow.

MARGARET.

A tiny shoe lies on my stand,
A wee bit worn, but precious still;
I lift it with a tender hand,
And at its touch I feel a thrill;
My earthly cares all fade away,
My weary eyes with tears are wet;
Though years have flown and I am gray,
I see again my Margaret.

Her angel face is bright and fair,
Her lustrous eyes like bright stars shine;
My fingers feel her golden hair,
I press her spirit lips to mine;
Her spirit form has larger grown,
My eager arms enfold my pet;
I feel a pleasure long unknown,
I clasp once more my Margaret.

Sometimes in happy dreams I see
Her smiling face beside my bed;
Her loving spirit comes to me,
And on my bosom rests her head;
She is more beautiful and fair
Than when on earth she was my pet.
New life is mine since I know where
To always find my Margaret.

THE BORDER LAND.

The Border Land, how near it seems,
How oft we visit it in dreams,
To mingle with the friends of yore,
Who dwell upon that fadeless shore.
It is not far to the Beyond,
To loving thought spirits respond,
As guardians they hover near,
To watch and help frail mortals here.

That mystic realm, how near, how far;
We know its portal is ajar,
Our spirit friends return again,
To linger in the homes of men.
Love and affection still hold sway,
Attraction's law spirits obey,
The subtle veil that intervenes,
Conceals from man life's inner scenes.

Man's an infant on this plane,
To greater growth he will attain,
The man-made gods to whom he prays
Will vanish like the sunset rays.
Man's spirit seeks a high ideal;
In spirit life exists the real;
Man's finite mind can't comprehend—
Spirit and matter interblend.

MEDITATIONS

Engendered by the Falling of a Leaf.

Here I am sitting on the side of one of the great mountains in Santa Cruz, Cal. The air is filled with fragrance from the trees and foliage, and as I lay down to drink in the life-giving draught, a leaf dropped upon my hand, from the swaying branches above me as I lay there on this beautiful July morning. I picked it up wondering why it had fallen. What had broken the connection between it and the parent tree thus early and sent it down to wither and decay, when it should have danced in the sunlight through all the long, bright summer days? And lo! as I looked, there upon the stem I found a dark spot which told the story of the broken connection, the early fall; and I thought how like the life of man it is! Some little defect, some fault, slight in itself, but weighty in its consequences, breaks the vital connection between the conscious life of man and the great Father, and all becomes withered and barren. Lift up your eyes and behold the heavens bright with promise because of the strength, the beauty, of individual life.

Keep the life lines up between your soul and the Over-soul, and no effort for right shall fail. Wrong may seem to triumph for a day, but the eternal years are God's, and naught shall prevail against him. He has planted the instinct for right, the desire for holiness—wholeness—within each soul, and through Him we shall conquer.

Remember this, ye who are downcast and disheartened. Not surer is the coming of to-morrow's sun than that the Right shall win. We make no compromise with evil; we strike not our flag or surrender. A glorious future awaits the race—a future of deep and holy living. Its coming may seem slow, but does not all that is lasting come slowly? Weeds grow to maturity almost within a day, but they fade as quickly and are gone. The mighty oak takes many years to grow, through the heat of one hundred winters it comes slowly, steadily to perfection, and stands at last broad-spreading, deep-rooted and majestic; a million leaves are within its branches, a million hopes grow and blossom beneath its shade. The years pass over it in their progress, generation after generation of man succeeding each other—doing each their work and passing on to higher spheres.

While yet it stands firm and undaunted in its appointed place, one little leaf will not be missed from the luxuriant foliage of the tree. But 'tis not so with man; for each human soul there is an appointed time and place—a work that no other can do, and oh, the pity, the anguish of his fall.

But there is hope, beautiful, God-given hope standing over at the gate of life and pointing steadily onward—upward. All the strength, all the wisdom, all love of God are ours if we will but keep the life-line up, and so put ourselves in condition to receive freely. According to our needs, so shall it be with each of us. Does one lack healthy strength for the work before him? Let him ask God and he shall receive. Does he lack in love and wisdom? God is love—all wisdom, and whatsoever ye ask shall be granted unto you. God's own angels watch over the fallen man, and will not rest until he be restored to his own. The leaf falls to earth, crumbles slowly back to dust, and, by the mysterious alchemy of nature, of which we know so little, it enriches the soil from whence it came, but does it ever rise again as a leaf? Does it ever again regain its place and go on with its glad dance in the sunlight? Who shall say? Yet it could not be the same leaf; only one like unto it in form and structure.

But man must be true to himself ever—once a man, always a man. He does not lose his identity, for he is a part of God that changeth not. He may fall ever so low, but the vital spark never quite goes out, it burns—albeit but feebly—through all, and will some day reclaim him. The work set for him to do must be done or Here or There—in time or in eternity, and all the good in the universe conspires to help him. The connection between his soul and the great Oversoul can never be wholly broken. He may, by his own act, never by act of God, loosen the tie and fail to draw upon the resources of God, as is his privilege to do, even as a child may turn from his earthly parents and fail of the good that awaits him from his loving care and help, but the connection once made is never unmade. The very life of God flows through and animates the soul of man—and this cannot fail of its purpose. God will reclaim His own everywhere—not in any arbitrary way, but by the might of that which is within us—which must, and will return to its own; as all the rivers of earth run to the sea, so the rivers of life in all its ramification runs to the Great Sea and finds rest, completion there.

But, oh, the joy, the strength of which we so needlessly deprive ourselves when we do not hold close to our Father and draw daily, hourly from the fountain of love and life. Why do we do it? Is it pride—the pride of a strong man who cannot bear to own his need of help? Is it vanity which prompts one to be sufficient unto himself? Or is it ignorance which knows not the joy of reciving from the tender All-Father? Whatever it may be, it is one of the saddest—I may indeed say the saddest fact of human life that we thus deprive ourselves of that which would enrich and glorify all life if we each lived, as we might, in close and vital union with the author of our being. It comes upon me with mighty force to-day how God respects the individual. Nothing is forced upon man. He is not compelled to anything by any outside force. The table of the Lord, laden with the riches of earth and heaven, is spread before him—all that his soul needs for food and development, for present needs or for eternal use, is there, and he may take or leave it as he will. His free will, his individuality is respected to the utmost. He is left to decide for himself—to "work out his own happiness" in his own way and time.

The thought thrills me! The beauty, the solemnity, the unchanging need and importance of individual life presses upon me. I remember reading years ago of how the once celebrated lecturer, Anna Dickinson, standing in the beautiful Yosemite Valley, with the grandeur of the mountain and plain about her, was almost overwhelmed by it all, and then suddenly the thought comes to her, "I am greatest of all! When all this wondrous scene has perished and is forgotten, I shall live—because I am an individual part of God, and was not born to die."

So it comes to me, and my soul bows down in wonder and adoration, in unspeakable gratitude for the gift of life. To stand alone and undaunted in such strength as one has in and of himself; because of his kinship with God to so live "That the great light be clearer because of our light, and the great soul be stronger because of our soul"—what could be greater or better than this? It is a mighty thing to be an individual, and calls for more strength and courage than the majority are in the habit of exhibiting to live this life truly. I will not say more strength than man possesses—for who is so silly as to think that the Creator would fail to give us the strength necessary thus to live? We have within us, or at our command all that is needed for success if we will but learn to take and use it rightly. To each one a place, a work is given that is for one's self alone—no other can fill that place, or do that work. We grow by what we use, by what we do, by what we are. By the use of strength, strength comes—loving we gain love.

Each soul is complete in itself—each a thought of God the culminating point of the universe living at the center of all good—beautiful in a world of beauty. The trees of the forests, the flowers of the field, do not miss of perfect living nor despoil their happy beauty, and shall man do less? expect less? have less?

MUSICAL VIBRATIONS.

Nature Is Established on a Musical Basis.

To the Editor:—In your most estimable paper of August 12, we find in the article deaded "Harmony With Natural Law," an interesting classification of vibratory frequency and velocity, taken from an address of Sir William Crookes, when elected to the presidency of the British Association of Sciences. In this tabulated classification we find errors that must not pass unchallenged, and we shall from our standpoint of view attempt to give a logical correction.

It is stated in the very beginning that at "32 vibrations per second we reach the region where atmospheric vibration reveals itself to us as sound." But the fact is that sound is manifested long before the 32 vibrations point is reached. But at 32,331 vibrations per second sound may be clearly defined and its relative position on the scale correctly ascertained as low C on the first octave on the musical range or field of vibrations, and that the high C on the seventh octave must end this field with 4,138,440 vibrations per second, because sound above that point can not be clearly defined or classified by the ordinary physical sense of hearing, since the 32,768 vibrations per second according to Crookes' table must be incorrect, besides it would give us three more octaves in music way above the capacity of the human ear to classify.

The next field above or beyond the musical range of vibrations we classify as the electrical field, commencing with low C on the first octave with 4,138,440 vibrations per second and ending with 529,664 per second (in this field we drop decimals) on the high C of the seventh octave, which again becomes the bridge over which we may enter yet higher frequencies of vibratory motion which we designate as the magnetic fields, which ends on high C on the seventh octave with 65,796,992 vibrations per second.

However, it becomes necessary to understand that these fields of vibratory forces and motions overlap each other, and some system must be employed to determine the average line of demarkation, or else our figures would greatly overreach the facts when we get up in the higher fields where figures become incomprehensible to the human mind. This we claim can only be accomplished by following the rule and the law that governs the relative increase and decrease on middle or fourth octave with low C as a starting point with 258,652 vibrations per second according to the Obenchain dissonance system. The law that governs in this octave must hold good in all octaves in all the different fields of vibratory powers and forces above and below.

Now if the student wants to ascertain the number of vibrations per second of any point on the microcosmic scale of vibration, just apply the rule governing on the middle or fourth octave of sound vibrations and go through field after field as per following classification:

First, field of sound vibrations.
Second, field of electric vibrations.
Third, field of magnetic vibrations.
Fourth, field of thought vibrations.
Fifth, field of mind vibrations.
Sixth, field of will vibrations.
Seventh, field of soul vibrations.

This constitutes the grand octave of seven fields on the microcosmic scale in which each note represents a divisional octave which gives 49 octaves of the invisible forces and powers operating in the human being; this we call the invisible realm of the human being, which has its correspondence or multiple relation to the visible realm—the physical human being—and we have reason to believe that a corresponding multiple relation exists between the macrocosmic scale and the microcosmic scale of vibration, and is exemplified in the relation existing between the different octaves in the musical range of vibration, hence, "as it is below, so it is above."

In conclusion let us remark that when the student with figures and calculations arrives at high C on the 49th octave on the scale of being, do not think that you are at the end of the string of vibratory motion, that evolution stops right there, for you have only reached another jumping-off place, another bridge over which evolution carries you into a yet grander series of octaves in realms beyond our present understanding, which we can only dream of as octaves or kingdoms of the Gods, where evolution in yet greater measures becomes manifested in the construction of solar systems forming constellations of endless variety of splendor and immensity.

When casting a sweeping glance over the star-studded heavens at night, we can but silently dream about the multiple relation each star, system and constellation holds to the all-embracing musical scale, and that the law of harmony governs everywhere, hence we may rightfully say that nature is established on a musical basis, that human beings are at all times subject to musical laws, which when fully understood will give that true knowledge of ourselves that will redeem humanity.

SOME SEARCHING QUESTIONS.

By One Who Wants Truth Though the Heavens Fall.

To the Editor:—I have been reading your incomparable paper for a number of years, and I find food for thought in every one of them. But on page five of No. 819, your quotations from Herbert Spencer, "Whoever hesitates to utter that, which he thinks is the highest truth," etc., leads me to make a few remarks at the present time. In the article by Dr. Peebles, the Swami Abhedananda thinks and writes of Spiritualism. He says, "I have asked them about the life after death, the origin of the soul, the true nature of the soul, its relation to the Universal Spirit."

And he says they (the Spiritualists) cannot answer these questions. Can he answer them himself, or anyone give a truthful answer to any one of these questions? Many of the egotistic know-it-alls, whom it is blasphemy to question, will give wise and learned answers, but when you ask for the proof, they scorn to give anything but their belief or say-so.

Some one has said, "It is not good to be wise above that which is written." But not all things that are written are wise. Neither are all the wise things written, nor will they be until minds cease to record their thoughts. Among the things that are written that are not wise, is the wonderful claims of Swami's vedantic societies. They may get a truth here and there, as well as some of our mediums, but none of them is perfect. For instance some locate heaven above us, which is very indefinite, as any direction from the earth is above. Others locate it in the immediate vicinity about us, others in the "spheres" with various numbers attached. Andrew Jackson Davis, whose ability none will deny, located our heavly homes, some thirty-five or forty years ago, in the "milky way," regardless of the fact that it is a mighty long journey thither, and when there you would be in space as much as here. Still others locate us on some of the planets, which, it seems to me, would be a wild race to attain a location, on account of their and our movements through space or ether.

But, to come down to "business": Who can demonstrate whence anything originated? Is it not time to put away childish things, and to stop babbling about gods, demons and obsessions, or possessions? Who knows anything about them? If any one knows, stand up and explain; and if all that don't know will keep silent, there will be a silence that can be felt.

Do not bother us with what you "believe," but tell us of what you know. I will give a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker (and that is worth more than a carload of Bibles) to any two of them that will give an independent account of the origin of any or these things, that will agree with each other.

I admit there are many excellent seers, but no two of them see alike, and that shows that they are not perfect seers. Notice the difference in their accounts of what they see in regard to the future life of the soul. One describes it as in Revelations. Others as a beautiful place where no evil thing exists. Some have birds, fruits and flowers, and all sorts of animals that they like. They forget that what is lovely to one is hideous to another. Now it is in order to explain how it can be beautiful to all, and who makes this radical change in the likes and dislikes of each of us. If there is a miracle to be wrought, why was it not wrought before, and everything made lovely here? If there is any one that can make a heaven of the next world, they could have made one of this.

But enough for the present. If I have started some live thinking minds enough to have them ask themselves or me some questions, I will have accomplished my object. By the way, let some of these wise ones explain how they feed any live thing except upon the dead bodies of their predecessors.

Yours for truth, though the heavens fall.

Wins Fame as Miracle Worker by Fixing Windows—An Unfrocked Priest Paints Crosses in a Cottage Formerly Occupied by Cardinal, Attracting Crowds.

To the Editor:—According to a special dispatch from Naples, Italy, Father Stefano, an unfrocked priest, was arrested at Beletri, near Palermo, on charges of fraud and inciting a riot.

A few days ago people passing the cottage where the late Cardinal Antonelli was in the habit of spending his holidays, were surprised to see three immense crosses appearing on the window panes.

Within an hour the crosses were mysteriously transformed into three faces of the Virgin Mary.

The report of a miracle soon spread through the town and into the surrounding country, and Stefano, who is the present occupant of the cottage, reaped a rich harvest in basketfuls of victuals, poultry, and well filled purses, which he took from the pilgrims who came to view the miracle.

Latterly, he organized a procession of young girls, who walked barefooted and carried lighted tapers seven times round the cottage by way of penance for the sins of the town. The parents of the girls paid Stefano 25 cents each for this privilege.

While one of these processions was in progress a party of free thinkers tried to storm the cottage, but were assailed with stones by the pilgrims, between whom and the free thinkers ensued a desperate hand-to-hand fight, in which over twenty were seriously injured.

Finally the rioters were dispersed by a force of gendarmes, who forced their way through with the bayonet, removed the curious window panes, and took the enterprising ex-priest into custody.

Water, soap, soda and other means were employed to efface the pictures, but all to no purpose, for they were evidently the result of chemical preparation.

Thus it is that "miracles" are made in the Catholic church.

NATURAL LAW.

THERE IS NO DEATH.

The laws of spirit life we do not know;
Each is a living soul, is truly so;
So in God's love the spirit shall be free
To know what that transcendent life may be.

A SUCCESSFUL LIFE.

It Is Graphically Illustrated and Portrayed.

Everyone is wishing and looking for happiness. But there are so many things to mar our happiness in this life—sickness, sorrow, death and a thousand and one trivial perplexities that come crowding into our lives, that I sometimes wonder if there is one really happy person.

O yes! I am reminded of one woman who says, "My own life is perfectly happy. Life is full and overflowing with interest for me."

I asked her the secret of her happiness: "Is it money and all the good things money can buy?"

"Ah, no!" she replied. "Money has nothing to do with my state of mind. My house is old and rickety, my furniture is not nice and I am often very limited in money. But the secret is, the blessed consciousness of living not for myself alone, but to help others."

She fills up her life with good deeds and kind words, which are the only treasures we can lay up on earth that will not rust and decay.

Oh, the joy of it! To feel to say day after day: O, it is so good to be alive in this beautiful world with the opportunity to help others.

And this is the secret of not only a happy life but a successful one. We may be successful in everything we undertake. We may gain everything we desire in life materially—money, houses, and fine clothes; but we cannot take these things to the higher life. We can carry nothing with us but the records of our own lives. So to be really successful in life, which means our existence both here and in the life to come, we must guard ourselves against that most formidable foe—selfishness.

I remember a conversation with a lady who had been in spirit life but a short time. She came to me and said, "Emma, I did not go to a far-away heaven, as I had been taught to believe, but to a beautiful natural world with all the comforts of life."

I said, "Are you happy?"

She answered, "No, I am very miserable and unhappy, for I am very selfish. My whole aim in life was to dress well, but when I got here I found life was not for that."

"What is life for?" I asked.

"To do good," she replied.

"But you belonged to church and Sunday-school and usually attended the services," I said. "And did not that help you?"

"No," she replied, "it did not help me, for I did not care much for the church; it was really to display fine clothes that I went. I lived a very selfish, frivolous life, and now I am so unhappy. I paid ten dollars for a hat when my grandmother had none to wear."

I sensed her conditions and feelings, and unhappiness does not express it. O, such remorse! Such self-reproach! For a few seconds I seemed to be this unhapy spirit; I could feel God's great love, I could see the beautiful existence that stretched before me in the realms of the spirit, and then I looked back upon the mean, narrow life I had lived on earth.

She controlled me but a few moments, but I could hardly bear the unhappiness. And this is the hell we are to shun. No judge or jury to condemn us. Nothing but our own conscience to accuse us. We see ourselves as we really are. Our lives are before us like an open book; and we cannot go on and enjoy the beauties of spirit life until we are out of these bad conditions of sin and evil habits, and it is then we must "work out our own salvation."

So let us watch ourselves, for habits grow quickly. Cultivate the good ones and stamp out the bad that will one day surely destroy our happiness.

And above all let us pull out the bitter weeds of selfishness which seem so thickly sown in our natures. Don't let an opportunity pass to help others along life's pathway. Then, dear friends, when we enter that higher life we shall have nothing to regret, only a sweet backward glance over a Successful Life.

THE GOOD TIME COMING.

There's a good time coming, boys,
A good time coming:
We may not live to see the day,
But earth shall glisten in the ray
Of the good time coming.
Cannot balls may aid the truth,
But thought's a weapon stronger;
We'll win our battles by its aid—
Wait a little longer.

There's a good time coming, boys,
A good time coming:
The pen shall supersede the sword,
And Right, not Might, shall be the lord,
In the good time coming.
Worth, not Birth, shall rule mankind,
And be acknowledged stronger;
The proper impulse has been given—
Wait a little longer.

There's a good time coming, boys,
A good time coming:
War in all men's eyes shall be
A monster of iniquity
In the good time coming.
Nations shall not quarrel then,
To prove which is the stronger;
Nor slaughter men for glory's sake—
Wait a little longer.

There's a good time coming, boys,
A good time coming:
Hateful rivalries of creed
Shall not make their martyrs bleed
In the good time coming.
Religion shall be short of pride,
And flourish all the stronger;
And Charity shall trim her lamp—
Wait a little longer.

There's a good time coming, boys,
A good time coming:
The people shall be temperate,
And shall love instead of hate,
In the good time coming.
They shall use, and not abuse,
And make all virtue stronger—
The reformation has begun—
Wait a little longer.

There's a good time coming, boys,
A good time coming:
Let us aid it all we can,
Every woman, every man,
The good time coming.
Smallest helps, if rightly given,
Make the impulse stronger—
'Twill be strong enough one day—
Wait a little longer.

Have a heart that never hardens, a temper that never tires, and a touch that never hurts.—Charles Dickens.

I could never think well of a man's intellectual or moral character if he was habitually unfaithful to his appointments.—Emmons.

SOURCE OF ALL JOY IS INVISIBLE.

Keep on Good Terms with Your Higher Self and You Will Be Happy.

Have you today committed an act that was not in accordance with your better impulses, your finer convictions? Have you been deaf to the promptings of your higher nature, willfully pursuing a selfish desire, an unworthy purpose?

Have you been unkind, or unloving, or uncontrolled; intemperate, or insincere, or inconsiderate of others? Have you in any way weakly yielded to temptation, heedless of the still voice within that strove to restrain you?

Then already you are aware of punishment. Already an invisible barrier has risen between you and your happiness. A shadow has fallen upon the face of the earth; a cloud has come between you and your soul's sunlight.

The world which yesterday glowed with magic is unillumined today. There is no more meaning in music and love and truth. Sunsets and stars and winds bear no message. Nature is a candle that is snuffed.

This is the real penalty for sinning. This is the inevitable punishment that comes when you refuse to obey the still voice, when you ignore the higher vision. No matter if you are immune from external punishment. No matter if none but yourself is aware of your transgression.

You may pass freely before the eyes of others, knowing that none will condemn. There may be no human voice raised in accusation, no glance of reproach to be seen on any side. Yet within yourself you are condemned. Your punishment has come and you know it. There is no denying the darkness that blots your soul's landscape.

You are no longer on terms with your higher self; you no longer touch hands with happiness; you have lost the companionship of radiant ideals.

Yesterday, perhaps, you read a book that thrilled you with a sense of undiscovered joy regions in your soul. To-day you read the same book and in it find no charm. It has no message of beauty, no magic, or power for you.

Yesterday you may have found in your neighbor a quality of mind that refreshed and stimulated you. Today you wonder how you ever found inspiration or delight in his presence. Even in the smiles of children you find not the glimpse of heaven you once perceived.

The secrets in your surroundings, the faults of your associates, stand out glaringly to your vision. You no longer feel the tolerance, the good will, the sweetness of heart that once made the world a good place to live in, despite its imperfections.

What has happened? This is no visitation of an angry God who seeks to avenge his wrath by punishing you for your error.

No one but yourself has brought this darkness. By your own acts you have shut yourself off from the radiance. You have cut yourself off from the rapture that lives in wide, sweet spaces of your being. You have dropped a thick veil between your eyes and heaven.

Is not this punishment, after all, worse than any penalty of human reproof or disgrace? To lose the approval of your soul—is this not to be dreaded more than any rebuke of man?

To forfeit the sense of keen delight in living; to lose the consciousness of joy that springs clear and pure in your soul when you are true; to find heaviness and blankness where before you found buoyancy and magic, is this not the sorest punishment of all? And can any selfish indulgence, any greedy taste of material pleasure, compensate for this loss?

Learn to be strong. Learn to be controlled. Learn to see that the source of all joy is invisible and that happiness does not inhere in material things.

Live the true, clear, unselfish life. Cherish no weakness that cuts you off from your soul's glory. Tolerate no fault that dulls your consciousness of heaven, or blunts those sensibilities that have roots in the invisible.

Keep on good terms with your higher self and all the forces in the universe will be with you to approve your course.—Angela Morgan, in the Chicago Evening Journal.

COMMENDATORY.

Suggestions for Applying Tests to Would-Be Public Mediums.

To the Editor:—Your magnificent premium books received during my absence from town, and I hasten to thank you for the precious gifts, and to add my little testimonial for your powerful efforts in behalf of Spiritualism and freedom of thought and speech. The platform you are standing for in the exposing of the fake business in the Spiritualistic ranks, deserves the support of all Spiritualists wherever they may be. It seems to me there ought to be no trouble in regard to this affair. If mediums wish the support of the public, let them be examined under conditions that make fraud impossible and certified to by a committee from the principal societies in the state, and put a notice in the daily papers that the association does not guarantee mediums uncertified, and furthermore why not eliminate all those from the public work who because they get a shiver and a shake, think they are irresistible before the public, and pose as leaders in our cause. Their presence affords no proof to anyone of the truth of spirit return, but on the contrary, as I have seen for years on the coast, only tends to make a laughing-stock of the cause to a lot of unthinking people, who, after the performance, laugh and think it fake.

No person should be allowed to pose as a test medium that cannot give positive facts such as full names, dates, etc., of former events in one's life.

The claim that they see the spirit of a man or a woman and give it a first name is no argument for the fact of spirit return, and that is about all that the majority of public mediums can do.

In regard to materialization, I have tried to get a private seance from nearly all the so-called mediums that have visited the coast for years, but cannot get them to allow me my own conditions, so my verdict is—fake.

That materialization is possible, I know, because through my own organism, parts of bodies form, at times, and I know that I could get full form manifestations if I had the leisure to develop.

Your paper to me is indispensable and the fact of its popularity is that I see people reading it on the cars and trains out of here continually.

Willis Miller and His Spirit Playmate--"Raymond."

The Two Worlds Are United

Once Again Through a Little Child the Seen and Unseen Realms Are Interlinked.

"When Willis wants Raymond (his little spirit playmate) he goes to a door or window and calls, as any boy would another, "Come on, Raymond, I'm ready," and their play begins at once. They indulge in all childish sports, which is conducted exactly as if two real children were at play, and at times Willis' enjoyment is so keen, and his excitement runs so high, that it is difficult to realize that, to appearances, at least, he is alone.

"Then his conversation with strange little Raymond! Those who listen can hear nothing, of course, but Willis' voice, yet his words, his mein, his earnest manner, all indicate that he is really taking part in a genuine conversation. At times he engages hotly in controversy; then again, after listening intently, he will display the greatest surprise at what he has evidently been told, and his questions or comments evince interest, wonder and excitement."

Spirit Return is a truth—an absolute truth!—and the one who denies it, only exhibits his own ignorance. He is to be pitied for his crass intellectual condition. Some most impressive, startling and conclusive manifestations of Spirit Return occur outside the ranks of Spiritualism. In the following narrative there is evidence of that fact. On all sides there is a Spiritual awakening. The denizens of spirit life are exerting themselves as never before, and the results are most astonishing. In the following narrative, detailing the experiences of a little boy, Willis Miller, we have some pregnant truths in reference to Spirit Return, that will excite widespread interest. His allusion to animals on the spirit side of life is unique, but in harmony with the experience of many seers, who say that the spirits of animals survive the death of the body, and may be sustained for a long time if efforts are made in certain directions.

BY MRS. RENO.

Willis Miller, who plays with invisible companions, all the time, to the exclusions of living children, is the 6-year-old son of Capt, and Mrs. Wilson Bryant Miller of McKenzie, Tenn., and is beyond question the psychological marvel of the age.

He is a wee, winsome, lovable child, so slight and small as to seem younger, by two years, than he really is, and looking at him, it is difficult to realize that he is the center round which circles a mystery, a metaphysical enigma which challenges the interest of the scientific world. He is a pretty child of an ethereal blond type, golden-haired, and with that exquisite blending of pink and white flesh tones which render Bougereau's children peerless.

His eyes are marvelous! They are blue—a blue which unites the tints of pansies, violets, bluetts, forget-me-nots and hyacinths, with the azure jewel glints of turquoises, sapphires and lapis-lazuli and the matchless hues of sea and sky. They are large and soulful, and as they gaze at one, a sudden flame blazes within their depths and instinctively one feels, one knows, that Something, a Presence sweet, silent but potential, has revealed itself for an instant of time.

Then like a flash it is gone, and the happy, graceful child, who is instinct with life and ambition, bounds off, and as his nimble feet seem scarcely to touch the earth in their light, swift motion, one wonders if he, too, like Mercury, has wings at his heels.

This, then, is the pen picture of the little child whom I went on a journey to study and whom I found interesting beyond my expectations. Although a stranger, he met me with an entrancing grace and courtesy which surprised as much as it pleased me. His manners are perfect and his mien is replete with poise and confidence.

So might a little Crown Prince, trained in the ways of courtiers, receive a guest. But it was remarkable for a tiny child—the son of simple country people—who had been purposely kept from intercourse with strangers.

I found him, also, precocious to a degree. He is keen and quick of perception, uses absolutely correct grammar and converses fluently and intelligently on themes beyond the mental grasp of many men and women. He reads remarkably well, too, and he brought out a book of natural history and read several pages for me.

In answer to my surprised query, his mother assured me that she had discouraged all his early efforts at reading, for she dreaded the effect of so much mental strain, but that the child could not be dissuaded, and he finally taught himself by a system evolved from the letters on his building blocks.

Fond of Natural History.

At this point Willis brought his natural history to me, explaining that he had "such a joke on papa, who didn't know that there was a 'rhinoceros bird' till I read about the rhinoceros hornbill to him."

"Read to me about it, Willis, please," I said. He gave me a quick, quizzical glance and said, "certainly," and I was truly surprised at his pronunciation, modulation and enunciation. But all this had been of his own choosing, and might, therefore, have been studied for the effect. So I said: "Let us select something for you to read to me, Willis," and with silent dignity he turned to the index and handed the book to me.

I avoided the word index as I said purposely: "Read about the rhinoceros Indian."

Again he gave me that quick, quizzical glance as he exclaimed: "It is bad enough to have to explain to papa. But I certainly thought you would know things."

"Know what, Willis?" I questioned.

"Well, I thought you would know that an index should be read from right to left and not from left to right, so you should have said the Indian rhinoceros."

"Thank you," I answered, and as I found a genuine pleasure in watching the changing expression of his face, the flash of his wonderful eyes, I said: 'But tell me about the Indian rhinoceros, instead of reading about it," for instinctively I knew he could read it.

"There is little to tell," replied this small baby boy, "for it is the same as any other rhinoceros, only it lives in the land of the Indians."

"You mean," I questioned, "the North American Indians?"

"Certainly not,' came the quick rejoinder, "I mean the East Indians, the Indians of the Orient."

"Willis," I asked him, then, "do you know why I came all the way from Nashville to see you?"

"I suppose," he answered thoughtfully, "you want me to tell you about Raymond."

Raymond the Child Friend.

"Raymond is my companion and my only child-friend. If you like I will go out to the garden to tell him that you are here and to ask him to send a message."

With these words he ran swiftly across the lawn, and vanished through the garden gate. And during his brief absence, I ascertained from his mother and father the interesting story of the little fellow.

Willis is the child of their old age, for Capt. Miller was 61 and Mrs. Miller nearly 50 when the child was born. He is very plainly the very light of their quiet homely lives, the exquisite flower in the garden of heir hearts.

Capt. Miller is entirely self-made, and he lives quite simply with his family on his small farm, known as the Brown Place. He is the father of three children, all grown, the youngest of them being 16 years older than Willis.

Mrs. Willis was Miss Ella Briggs and is connected with the family of the late Dr. T. W. Briggs, a famous Tennessee surgeon, and the father of distinguished surgeons. Therefore, it will be seen that the child has inherited intellectual strength through his mother's family.

Both Captain and Mrs. Miller assured me that the very remarkable conditions which surround Willis have always been a source of grief and trouble to them, and they feared at first a terrible menace to their child's mental strength. They have sought by every means in their power, to convince him that his belief in his invisible companions, was only imaginary—a creation of his own too active brain.

But to no purpose. The boy has remained unmoved, either by entreaty or threat, and at times, he would become furiously angry at the mere suggestion that Raymond was a myth. When Willis was old enough to play with other children, his parents encouraged him to do so, hoping that such association would wean him from his uncanny friends.

But they were doomed to disappointment. Willis not only did not enjoy them, but when his little playmates, in actual life, ventured to ridicule Raymond, or to question the reality of his presence, it threw loyal little Willis into such a tempest of grief and rage that finally, if reluctantly, the unhappy parents concluded it were best for their child to remain alone, with his own unseen playmates, with whom he was invariably happy.

The strangest and most remarkable part of Willis' peculiar history is that it began with his infancy and has developed with his growth. The very first words he ever uttered were "Miss Green," and his eyes frequently glanced about as if following the movements of some person, invisible to all others, and he would stretch forth his baby hands in welcome and evince every indication of delight as he would cry, "Miss Green."

The Unseen Presence.

This surprised, but did not especially impress his parents, who were quiet, unemotional people, and who certainly were not anticipating unusual things in their baby. But uneasiness gradually took definite form when they realized that, as the child grew older his belief in Miss Green's presence and his love for her grew steadily.

It frequently happened, after Willis learned to walk, that he would run forward with a glad cry of "Miss Green, Miss Green," and would nestle down, apparently on an invisible presence's shoulder or knee, where he would remain contentedly for hours.

When he was ill, no one could soothe nor quiet him as his mysterious Miss Green. As he grew older and his power to express himself in words developed with amazing rapidity, his parents were astounded to hear him prattling in his baby way of his great love for Miss Green and his intention of building a house for her, and marrying her.

"A baby prattling of marriage!" Then the parents asserted themselves and insisted that the child should cease talking such nonsense as love and marriage and assured Willis that Miss Green did not exist.

At first he was furiously indignant and then, he grew inconsolable. After a time of exhaustless grief he came to his parents and told them that Miss Green said that they were right. That he was too young to marry her, and that she was going away to remain till the time was ripe for their union. Then she would come back to him and claim him, but in going, she would not leave him him lonely nor desolate; that she would bring him a companion, a little boy child like himself, whom he was to call "Raymond;" that Raymond would amuse and divert him, that he would always come, instantly, when Willis wished for him, even if the desire were not formulated into speech, and they would become devotedly attached to each other, united by a stronger, if stranger tie, than that of blood.

The remarkable prophecy of the mysterious "Miss Green" has fruitioned. Since Raymond was brought to Willis he has not grieved for Miss Green, whose name he never mentions, and when asked about her, the child's face changes, becomes almost transfigured, and his eyes sparkle and glow with tenderness as he answers: "No, I cannot forget her. We are simply waiting. She is very beautiful."

Willis' belief in Raymond is quite as remarkable as his affection for Miss Green. He began to speak of his little invisible friend when he was less than three years of age, and up to that time he had never known anyone by the name of Raymond, nor had he ever heard of the name. And since then, they have been or, at least, Willis asserts that they have been, daily and almost hourly companions.

His parents assured me that Willis is happiest when he is playing undisturbed with Raymond. The presence of living children annoys him, for, he says, "they cannot see nor understand that Raymond is real, and we often talk about things of which they know nothing, which is very stupid."

"Come On, Raymond."

When Willis wants Raymond he goes to a door or window and calls, as any boy would call another, "Come on, Raymond, I'm ready," and their play begins at once. They indulge in all childish sports, which is conducted exactly as if two real children were at play, and at times Willis' enjoyment is so keen, and his excitement runs so high, that it is difficult to realize that, to appearances, at least, he is alone.

Then his conversation with strange little Raymond! Those who listen can hear nothing, of course, but Willis' voice, yet his words, his mien, his earnest manner, all indicate that he is really taking part in a genuine conversation. At times he engages hotly in controversy; then again, after listening intently, he will display the greatest surprise at what he has evidently, been told, and his questions or comments evince interest, wonder or excitement.

He shares all his treasures with Raymond and exactly divides all candies, fruits, et cetera with his little friend. These he usually places under a certain tree on the lawn; they never disappear, and sometimes Willis will, after a while, eat them himself. He seems to think the act of offering is the essential courtesy and there can be no question of the child's fair play.

The singular thing is that Raymond will never enter a room in the Miller homestead if anyone is in it beside Willis, and the child frequently, but always courteously, requests his family to leave, saying simply: "Raymond wants to come in." When the weather is fine they invariably prefer to play in the open.

I had been so interested in the child's strange history, told by his parents, that I quite forgot he had gone out to bring me a message from Raymond, till he stood at my knee saying:

"Raymond thinks it quite nice of you to have come so far to see us and we both thank you for it."

"But isn't Raymond coming in to see me, Willis? I wish he would! Tell him so, please."

Like a flash the child was gone, and Capt. Miller said to me: "Go to the end of the porch and watch him."

I saw Willis run across the lawn, pass through a gate, and throw himself face downward in a field of daisies.

"Raymond," he said, "Raymond, she wants to see you. Come with me, Raymond, you won't mind her. I don't."

Then followed a silence and Willis' voice saying finally: "I'm sorry, Raymond." The child arose and coming to the gate, he saw me on the porch waiting for him, and he called:

"He won't come in to see you, but he is sorry."

"Ask him, then, Willis, if he thinks it gallant to decline the request of one who has come so far to hear about him."

I returned to the gallery and almost instantly Willis joined me, exclaiming: "Raymond says you didn't mean that message, that you know very well why he cannot manifest himself to you."

"Do you know, Willis, why he won't manifest for me?"

In the Spirit World.

"Certainly," the child replied. "It is because Raymond does not live in the real people's world. If he did, then you could see him as you see me. But he doesn't. He lives in the spirit people's world and the conditions are not right for you to see him—yet."

"You live in the real people's world, Willis, then why can you see him and I cannot?" I contended.

The child turned large, questioning eyes on me as he exclaimed: "I never thought of that before, but I will ask 'Raymond.'"

He was gone sometime, and in his absence I asked his mother if she could, in any way, explain her child's strange life and beliefs.

She assured me she could not and that it was, and had ever been, a mystery to herself and to her husband, and a source of anxiety and sorrow to them both. However attractive and interesting it rendered Willis to others, they wished with all their hearts that he was just like other boys.

"Prenatal influence is complex and far-reaching," I said to the mother of Willis. "Prior to the child's birth, do you recall any incident or experience which might have produced these conditions in his brain?"

"No," she said, thoughtfully; then positively, "no."

He Is Simply Ignorant.

"The man who denies the Phenomena of Spiritualism to-day is not entitled to be called a skeptic; he is simply ignorant; and it would be a hopeless task to attempt to enlighten him."—T. J. Hudson, "Law of Psychic Phenomena," p. 206.

"Did you read much at that time?" I asked.

"Yes," she said, "I read a great deal."

"What?"

"The Bible—I studied it constantly and with deepest interest," Mrs. Miller replied.

"May I ask why?" I ventured.

"I had always been a consistent member of the Christian-Baptist church," she said, slowly, "but just about that time I became interested, through the conversion of a relative, in the Brethren, a new religious sect in Texas, who held that salvation lay in being born of the Spirit. Therefore I read the Bible and prayed constantly to be born again of the spirit. Could that have had such an effect on Willis, you think?"

"The psychologists must answer that," I said, smiling, as just then Willis returned, and looking at me gravely he announced:

"Raymond thinks you probably understand why I can see him and you cannot when he says the conditions or vibrations are just right for me and are not at all for you. But you will excuse, I hope, my long delay in returning, for Raymond and I became absorbed in a race, and I forgot to come back."

I looked at the child with vivid interest as I said: "What kind of a race do you mean?"

"A rabbit hurdle race. It was the most exciting race in the world. There is no sport to equal the hurdle leaping of those wonderfully trained rabbits of Raymond's."

"Has Raymond any other animals besides rabbits?"

Raymond's Animals.

"O, yes, indeed," cried the animated child. "In his world, his father has charge of all the animals and there are many, many strange creatures there. He gave Raymond all the finest tigers and elephants in the collection, because they are Raymond's favorites. One, a tigress, is the most magnificent creature in the lot. When she gets enraged it takes six hundred men to throw her."

Capt. Miller drew the tiny child to his knee and began to stroke his hands gently, as looking at me he said:

"It always excites him thus to speak of Raymond's animals."

I looked on in amazement. The child was trembling and flushed with the keenest excitement, and there could be no question that to him, at least, his remarkable statements held the essential quality of simple truth. But such statements! That "there was no sport to equal the hurdle leaping of those wonderfully trained rabbits of Raymond's," and "a tigress, the most magnificent creature in the lot, requires six hundred men to throw her when she gets enraged."

It was evident, too, that the child was not acting a part. For almost an entire day he was under my calm, keen, critical espionage, and any contradiction of facts, or any attempt at deception, I should have detected instantly. But absolutely, I discovered nothing in Willis' simple, sweet, perfectly natural and childish manner to challenge criticism or distrust, and I believe him to be an honest, straightforward and lovable little fellow.

Besides, he is too young to sustain so difficult a role, faultlessly and permanently, unless, indeed, he were the most marvelous actor the world ever saw, and even were that true, he would require the most skilled training and coaching, which are naturally impossible in this case. For the child lives alone with his aged parents, who not only do not encourage him in his strange tendencies, but they have done all in their power to check their development, and, failing in that, they are resigned, but still grieved and mystified. Indeed they would give much if their youngest born were an ordinary little fellow just like other children. Nevertheless they are very proud of his remarkable mental qualities, and beyond doubt, they worship him.

When the child's excitement abated, and wishing to keep him with me for the remainder of my visit, I said: "Willis, I will have to leave you soon, so won't you ask Raymond to come nearer so that you can talk with him here instead of running out into the garden to take messages to him?"

For answer, the child merely raised his head from his father's shoulder, where he had been resting, and beckoned in the direction of the garden. Then he said: "Raymond does not object to be near real people in the open air, and he may come here on the gallery with us. But if we were in the house, he would not come into the same room where anyone is except me. 'Hello, Raymond,'" and Willis' voice vibrated with a peculiarly tender and happy tone, "sit on the step there."

"You did not answer the question, Willis, which I sent you to ask Raymond some time ago. "Don't you remember," I continued, "you went to ask him to explain why you can see him, while others in the 'real people's world' cannot?"

"Raymond says," cried the child, "now that he is here near you, that you may speak to him and he will answer through me."

"No, Raymond must excuse me; since he will not speak directly to me, I also prefer to speak through you."

"All right," responded Willis from his perch on his father's knee. Then, after a moment, when he seemed to be listening intently, he said: "Raymond thinks that anyone who has given the thought to psychic phenomena that you have, should understand that. He says you know that there are certain people whose natures are so finely, so strangely attuned that they are the real connecting links between the seen and the unseen, between the physical and psychical worlds, just as the twilight, partaking of the characteristics of both day and night, unite the two, or as night is merged into day through the dawn. Raymond says my nature, being highly sensitive psychically, renders me such a link, therefore I can see him when you cannot."

This, of course, was a remarkable conversation for a 6-year-old child, but its most singular feature was the fact that he, a mere baby and until a few hours before an utter stranger to me, should have known of my interest in psychology. There was, positively, no way in which he could have known, and babies do not, usually, "guess" at such things. But whether he knew, or hit on it as a mere coincidence, how could a boy of 6 discuss such an abstruse question so clearly?

Raymond's Appearance.

"Tell, me, Willis," I said after a while, "how does Raymond look?"

"He is very much like me. He has blue eyes, pink cheeks, and golden hair, and he is just my height, but he is fatter than I am. And he wears much prettier clothes than I do. He has on now a Russian blouse of white linen."

At these words a new thought struck me, for Willis was dressed in a Russian blouse of white linen, banded with Yale blue. Could it be that this little child possessed the singular power of projecting his own astral body at will? If so, of course he used the law unconsciously, and therefore failed to recognize that the person he saw and called "Raymond" was his own, unknown self. This unknown self of each and all of us possesses all knowledge and with a child of Willis' imaginative type the whole story of Raymond might be easily explained. For the astral form is the exact reproduction of the physical body, even in the smallest detail of attire, and to test my theory, I said:

"Then you and he are dressed alike, for you also have on a white linen blouse."

"O, but mine is not at all like Raymond's, for mine is trimmed with blue and his is all white, such soft, fine white."

As my theory was proved false by the child's words, I asked:

"Did Raymond ever live in the 'real people's' world?"

"Yes, ever so long ago, and he has often told me about it. When he lived here his home was a large, white stone house. It was a real house, you know, and one day real lightning struck it and it was burned down. Wait a minute—that's so, Raymond, of course stone houses can't burn. Raymond says, the lightning, real lightning, struck it and tore out the doors and part of the walls."

I was busy with my notes, and I was startled by Willis, who was still on his father's knee and at some distance across the porch from me, saying, in his musical voice:

"Raymond is laughing at you, for he says you have written that wrong."

"What is wrong, Willis? I don't understand you?" I replied.

Willis Miller and His Spirit Playmate--Raymond

"Raymond says look at your notes and you will see the mistake. He told you, through me, 'that real lightning struck the house in which he lived and it tore out the doors and part of the walls.'"

"Yes?" I said.

"Well, Raymond says you have written windows instead of doors, and he is amused at the error."

I remembered perfectly that Willis had said doors, and I had thoughtlessly scribbled windows instead, as a glance at my note-book proved. But how could the child have known that when he sat so far from me, and had not seen my notes at all? For they, positively, were in my hands all the time.

"Is Willis talking too much?" I asked his mother, whom I saw was glancing anxiously at the child's bright eyes and flushed face.

"I am always afraid of fever, brain fever," she replied in a low tone. Then she smiled, for the little lids closed suddenly over the wonderful blue eyes, and she motioned for Capt. Miller to be very still while their child slept.

"He will not rest long," the mother said, turning to me; "but it will refresh him greatly."

"Is he delicate? Is he ill often?"

"No," replied Mrs. Miller. "He looks more delicate than he really is, and yet, I am always most anxious about him. Not long ago he was taken ill with high fever from the very first. When the physician came he made me depress Willis' head below the level and keep it immersed in a bowl of water. Finally Willis said:

"How long are you going to keep this up, doctor? I can't stand it. Raymond says if you will let me lie comfortably in bed and put ice poultices on my head, that I will be well in a few hours."

"The physician then ordered the ice poultices, which reduced the fever rapidly and the child was quite well in the afternoon," Mrs. Miller said, with a smile.

"Tell her," said the Captain, in a half whisper, "about the car tracks."

Mrs. Miller nodded and said: "Not more than ten days ago Willis exclaimed: 'Papa, what keeps two trains of cars, going in opposite directions, from running into each other when they meet, for I know that there are not double tracks all the way to the big cities?'

"Capt. Miller then tried to explain to him the system of switches," continued Mrs. Miller, "but Willis could not grasp the idea. Finally he cried, 'Never mind, papa, Raymond says I will understand perfectly the next time you take me to see the car tracks.' A few days later Capt. Miller took Willis down to the tracks," Mrs. Miller explained, "and the child cried, 'Don't say anything, papa; let me see if I can get it by myself, as Raymond told me I would,' Suddenly he looked up exclaiming, 'Certainly, I see it all now. I would have understood before, papa, had you told me it worked automatically.'"

A few moments later it was time for me to catch my train, and before saying good-bye to the family, I asked Willis what he liked best in all the world.

"Books," answered the child promptly.

"Well, and what next to books?"

"Mechanics," was the surprising reply. "If you are going now, I will walk to the station with you and papa."

The station was not more than three city blocks away, and between it and the Miller homestead is a grove of magnificent forest trees. As Willis came near this bit of woods he suddenly threw back his head and gave forth a peculiar sound, half song, half whistle. Instantly the cry was answered in exactly the same tone by a chorus of birds in the trees.

I betrayed no surprise as I said to the child: "What did you do then, Willis?" for I had observed that the strange act was done carelessly and with no thought of effect.

"Do you mean when I got on the fence," he said.

"No, just after that."

"O, when I jumped up on the telegraph pole?"

"Just after that," I answered.

"O, then, you mean when I talked to the birds?"

"Yes. Will you talk to them again?" And once more the child gave vent to that strange musical call.

It was answered instantly by several hundred little feathered throats in the splendid oaks above us.

"Don't stop, Willis! Keep it up," I pleaded, for the strange chorus and the charming little leader fascinated me. And all the way past that grove of oaks, the child continued to "talk to the birds."

"Does Willis talk to anything else except birds?" I asked Captain Miller.

"Yes," came the Captain's reply. "I don't understand it any more than any of the other strange things my child does, but he certainly can make all the animals and fowls at home answer his calls at any time, and Willis calls it 'talking.'"

After I had parted with the fascinating and strangely interesting child, I gave myself up to speculation about him. What is the mystery surrounding him? Can it be that he is a psychic of so fine a fibre that both his clairvoyant and clairaudient powers put him in instant touch with the astral form of some living child, between whom and Willis, exist not only a strong psychic affinity, but a great physical resemblance as well? Or, does it go deeper, is it more far-reaching, more strange, more mysterious still? Can little Willis Miller really stand for one of those wonderful metaphysical marvels which have occasionally startled the world?

These questions, wide and deep as they are, may never be answered satisfactorily. Nevertheless the remarkable child, Willis Miller, will challenge the keen, close and subtle investigation of the psychologists of the age.

Having heard and read of several remarkable feats in photography recently where faces of invisible presences have appeared in the most inexplicable and mysterious manner on certain photographs, I desired to test if the case of Willis and Raymond held similar opportunity.

I wrote to Willis to this effect and his printed reply—he cannot write—is appended:

"DEAR MRS. RENO.
YOU. ASKED. ME. TO. SEE. IF. RAYMON. WOULD. LET. HIS. PICTURE. BE. MADE. IN. WITH. MINE. HE. SAID. HE. WOULD.
"YOUR. LITTLE. FRIEND.
"WILLIS."

If the test should be verified—but as Kipling would say, that will be a story in itself.—Nashville Banner.

BODY THE INSTRUMENT OF SPIRIT

Some Trenchant Reflections by Dr. H. V. Sweringen, in the Record-Herald.

I noticed a recent article in the Battle Ground from the pen of Dr. G. Frank Lydston in which he proposes in one fell swoop to obliterate and annihilate the spiritualistic idea of the day.

Dr. Lydston advances in opposition to the spiritualistic hypothesis the well-worn materialistic argument: "A blow upon the head, and presto, change! the spiritual quality departs and leaves but a groveling clod, lower, perhaps, in instincts, lower, far lower, in its actions than the most degraded animal."

But is this argument conclusive? As well conclude that because the batteries, wires and instruments of a telegraphic instrument were disabled and powerless to transmit intelligence the intelligence was not there to be transmitted.

I have observed a number of cases of fracture of the skull with resulting coma from compression, and in every case wherein the damage done to the brain was not too great the elevation of the depressed fragments of bone by the operation known as trephining was followed promptly by the return of consciousness—the mind, the soul, the mentality, the conscious ego, the spirit, again resuming the use of its tool, the brain.

The mere fact that the expression of mentality was entirely suspended during the period of pressure upon the organ through which that mentality is expressed in this case is no evidence at all that when the brain dies the mind, soul or spirit dies also. How shall we account for the return of consciousness when the brain by which it is expressed is repaired? What was the condition of the spirit or soul during the period intervening between the receipt of the injury and the relief of the resulting brain pressure? It certainly did not absolutely cease to exist, else it would not have manifested itself by returning consciousness.

Suppose nothing had been done for a curable case of this character, and death of the whole body had supervened? If death ends all, at what time did the mind, soul or spirit die? Immediately after the coma supervened, or not until the whole body died, twelve, twenty-four or forty-eight hours later?

Is it not just as philosophical to say that the mind or spirit uses the brain as a tool as it is to say that the brain uses the spirit or mind as a tool, or that the brain secretes thought as the liver secretes bile? Is it not just as rational to conclude that the brain is a battery in the employ of the "spiritual body" and subject to the environments of the physical "natural body," its imperfections, accidents, etc., until it is no longer fit for use? Are not inequalities of mentality explained by the inequalities of the brain structure through which it is expressed? Would not the immortal spirit, the essential life principle of the idiot and imbecile, express itself as intelligently and forcefully as that of the highest intellect if his brain were fit for such expression?

Is it the brain or is it the spirit that uses the eye to see, the ear to hear, the nose to smell? Does the destruction of the eye destroy also the mental capacity to hear? Are not the organs simply media, tools in the employ of the mental "spiritual body?" If so, then why should a total destruction of the material brain totally destroy thought, mind, spirit, intelligence? May not the "spiritual body" spoken of by Paul be composed of matter so subtle, so delicate, so fine as to be entirely invisible and unrecognizable by any of the senses in our present state of being, and thus prove the truth of immortality or a future existence from the materialist's own point of view?

The atmosphere we breathe does not impress us with any very great materiality, and yet we know it exists. "The wind bloweth where it listeth," but we cannot tell by its sound whence it cometh or whither it goeth. The perfume of a flower we do not see, hear, taste or feel, being conscious of its presence by a single sense only, that of smell; the more we destroy the integrity of the flower, its materiality, its organic structure, by crushing, the greater is the manifestation of the presence of its fragrance.

If, as the doctor seems to acknowledge, telepathy is possible between embodied spirits, may it not be just barely possible that disembodied spirits may thus communicate with embodied ones?

Beautiful Words of Advice.

On "How a Boy Should Treat His Mother."

I am so touched with the following splendid thoughts from the pen of the Rev. Thos. B. Gregory, in the Chicago Examiner, that I deem them well worthy of reproduction in The Progressive Thinker, and I feel sure they will be heartily appreciated by every reader.

I also wish to append one of my fitting poems to the same as my soul's endorsement of Mr. Gregory's words of advice:

Mr. Gregory's Words:

The subject of this article is suggested by the following letter received at this office:

Toronto, Canada, Aug. 9, 1905.

My Dear Sir: Please tell me through the "Examiner" how a boy should treat his mother, and be kind enough to send me a marked copy to Thomasville, Ga. What books could I read to help me to treat my mother right? More than one boy is in need of this information. Very truly yours,

Robert E. Williams.

Mr. Williams is quite right in saying that more than one boy (and he might have added girl) is in need of the information specified.

Disregard for Parents

One of the most alarming, as well as one of the most shameful signs of the time in which we live is the growing disregard of children for their parents.

There were never so many ungrateful, disrespectful children in the world as there are today, and the number is steadily on the increase.

In far too many instances "Father" and "Mother" are being succeeded by "The Old Man" and "The Old Woman," for whom the "kids" seem to have but little of the warm, filial love and beautiful filial respect that used to characterize the child's feeling toward the parents.

I am very glad, therefore, of the opportunity of speaking a word or two upon so vital a subject as that of a son's or a daughter's duty to Father and Mother.

Should Be Kind to Mother.

"How should a boy treat his mother?" Is that the question I am to answer?

Then I answer it quickly and unhesitatingly, without a moment's halting or doubting:

A boy should treat his mother with a heartfelt, uniform kindness. He should strive to love her with all his heart, and soul, and mind, and strength, and to love her that way right along.

It would not be a bad thing if every boy in the land, upon getting up in the morning, were to say solemnly to himself: "This day, O God, help me to dearly love my mother."

I say a boy should love his mother "right along," continuously, always.

"Once a mother always a mother" is the word that every son should thoroughly believe in.

No matter what the mother does, no matter how low she may fall, no matter what clouds may settle upon her, she is your mother, and it is your duty to stand by her.

In fact, the greater her distress, the direr her troubles and misfortunes, the more firmly should you dedicate yourself to her service.

Nothing Should Change Love.

Even though it should come to the point where you could no longer respect her, you should keep on loving her and protecting her.

The mother may sin, for she is human; but she can commit no sin so rank and monstrous as would be committed by the son who, in her sin and sorrow, should desert her.

In saying that a boy should love his mother, I say all that it is possible to say; for to love one's mother is to be kind to her, to be respectful to her, to study her comfort and peace, and, in every way, to be true and faithful to her.

And surely, is there anything in this world that is grander or more beautiful to behold than the sight of a grateful child—a son or daughter true to mother, true to father, loving them, devoted to them, living to make their old age comfortable and happy?

Sees No Nobler Sight.

As God looks down upon the ways of men He sees no nobler sight.

And the reward of it! Ah! There is nothing like it under the sun!

To know that you love father and mother; that you have ever treated them with perfect respect; that you have always tried to make them glad and that you have never failed to do what you could to promote their peace and happiness—to know this is to know the richest joy that life affords!

When the great Mirabeau was dying he called for flowers and music, desiring to die in the midst of sweet odors and rich melodies.

I am sure that the sweetest fragrance, the richest music that any one can have about him in the solemn death hour is the memory of filial gratitude, the recollection of the fact that he was always true to father and mother.

Be Patient With Your Mother.

Do not speak cross to your mother,
though your angry heart may break,
For you do not know the hours she has suffered for your sake,
And you cannot tell what moment that her earthly sun may set,
Then for every cross word spoken you will carry a regret.

Her old heart is often breaking and her eyes oft filled with tears,
While her thoughts are for her children in the coming of the years.
Her kind spirit knows no falter in the duty of her own,
And her bosom covers sorrows by her children never known.

All grandchildren are her idols, aye, far more to her than gold,
And though sometimes while correcting
she may get real cross and scold,
There is always warm and tender in her voice's undertone
That deep feeling of affection that true mothers only own.

Oft her language may be cutting when her nerves are all unstrung,
But be patient, she's your mother, and her nerves are not so young.
She was patient, kind and gentle to her children in the past,
And it is a bounden duty that they love
her to the last.

She may scold you as she used to in the days that are gone by,
Till it wounds your very spirit and you feel that you must cry,
But be patient with your mother, yes,
be calm e'en then and smile,
For she loves you and can linger with you but a little while.

Kindly make her life a heaven while she stays upon the earth,
If you have the kind of spirit to appreciate your birth.
Through the sunshine and the shadows of this life she guarded you,
And your love and sweetest kindness to your mother is now due.

DR. T. WILKINS.

HERE'S A DADDY'S SONG.

Must all thy songs be mother songs,
My bonny baby boy?
Do poets write no other songs,
That father's name employ?
Why, then, I'll right the monstrous wrong;
Come, boy, and hear thy daddy's song.

But first a toss high in the air,
To hear his merry shout,
And then a tickle here and there,
To bring the dimples out,
And then a romp upon the bed,
Oh, precious little tousle-head!

Now, then, wee barefoot boy, take care!
Run swiftly o'er the floor,
And father'll be a bruin bear,
And growl and bite and paw!
Why, bless us, boy, what flimsy stuff!
Dad's song is rag-time, sure enough.

There, now of play we've had our fill,
'Tis cuddle-time, I know.
(How very bright his eyes are still!)
"Hush, baby mine, by-low!"
Come, come, you little rascal, you,
Dad's had enough of peek-a-boo!

Hush, hush, my boy, to sleep with thee!
(I wish his mammy'd come!)
Thy father'll turn into a bee
If longer he must hum.
Ah, well, to lull a child to rest,
A mother song, perchance, is best.

SWEET PINKS FROM TACOMA.

(G. E. K.)

Fragrant and beautiful, dear little flowers,
Laden with perfume from Coma's fair
bowers,
So long imprisoned in darkness and gloom,
Drooping and dying in your fullness of bloom.

Come out from thy prison-house into the light,
And whisper sweet messages cheery and bright;
Speak low all thy secrets, tell me of the one
Who sent thee so far from thy dear
Washington.

Look up, little flowerets, abide for a day;
Your mission fulfilled must you now pass away?
See, in the blue heavens the bright stars abound,
They twinkle and smile as on fair
Puget's Sound.

Ah, dear little flowers, so pure and so fair,
Still wafting sweet perfumes far out on the air;
Like you may I bring to some heart a bright ray
Of sunshine and gladness and then—fade away.

THE RELIGION OF A SCIENTIST.

The Universe Is the Visible Manifestation of an Underlying Omnipresent and Omniscient Mind.

Professor Dubois' subject was "The Religion of a Scientist." It was attentively listened to by a large congregation.

Continuing he said: "Such observation and study have led us everywhere and always to recognize what is known in science as the law or principle of the uniformity of nature. This is the accepted basis of all the conclusions of science. Upon it we daily risk our lives and our fortunes. Without it no science is possible. Without it the simplest experiment loses its force and value and the whole structure of science falls to the ground. The man of science, therefore, accepts it to the uttermost.

The Creed of Science.

"This is the creed of the man of science which he cannot renounce without mental suicide—briefly, the same causes must always produce the same results.

"The will that sways the universe is not only omnipresent but also omniscient, and because omniscient, uniform in action. Hence we observe such uniformity of action in nature.

"Our human wills may or may not be free at all. By the freedom here I do not mean absence from restraint, but absolutely self-controlled, not affected by exterior circumstances.

"Now, to such a will as we speak of there can be no exterior circumstances, because all circumstances are due to it.

Three Great Facts.

"There are three great facts universally accepted by science as unquestionably true, viz.: the fact of universal gravitation; the fact of human volition as conditioning the motion and state of aggregation of matter; and lastly, the fact of the uniformity of nature.

"The direct and unavoidable conclusion from these three facts, is that the universe is the visible manifestation to us of an underlying omnipresent and omniscient mind guided by intelligent and conscious purpose. In science we deal with related phenomena.

"The laws of thought are found to be embodied in the visible results of nature. We know nothing absolutely. Ideals alone are exact.

Religion and Science.

"As science is the verification of the ideal in nature, so religion stands fast as the verification of the spiritual, both in nature and in life. In days long past science and faith went hand in hand, and there was peace. Then came an hour when they lost step. We all know the sad result.

Today's Liberalism.

"The 'new theology' is more liberal, the 'modern science' less intolerant. Religion thus appears, not as an antagonist of science, not as contradicting, but as supplementing science, in perfect harmony with the rest of our knowledge and in full accord with the purpose which runs through the whole mighty plan.

"Thus once more, as in times long past, may faith and science once more walk hand in hand."

"Materialization." By Mme. E. d'Esperance and B. F. Austin. Excellent. Price 10 cents.

The Great Secret.

Life Remains an Unsolved Mystery.

The question of the origin of life is one that appeals strongly to the mind of the learned and the unlearned, the scientist and the most unthinking and untaught man of the wold woods.

Whether life is, ab initio, in the very primal essence of all things, matter and spirit, and always was there, from beginningless eternity, and therefore is without origin from or at any definite point in the duration of eternal being or existence—whether its primal selfhood (so to speak) is in a God-Source of all that is, an essential principle of Being—or whether it be a product of pre-existent forces and elements that conjoined and combined, are its formative factors—who shall tell?

Deepest inquiring minds in all ages have sought to solve the problem; philosophers, Materialist and Spiritualist, ancient and modern, have delved deep and soared high, to search out the mystery.

Recently Dr. Littlefield, of Indiana, declared that he has disvovered nature's method of producing life. "From minerals subjected to chemical action he has produced microscopic plant forms, and from the decomposition of vegetable matter he has evolved distinct types of animal life," he states.

The question is: Did his methods originate life, or merely produce certain manifestations of a life principle that already existed in the elements he manipulated?

Another scientist, Prof. Jacques Loeb of the University of California, is said to have fertilized the eggs of the sea urchin by immersing them in a salt solution. But was there not already life in the egg, and in the salt water? When he shall have produced a fertilized egg without the use of pre-existing life material, he will have come nearer to the great secret.

Prof. Burke of Cambridge University, is said to have produced "a primitive form of life" by subjecting bouillon in test tubes to the action of radium. Did not the vital principle already exist in the radium and the bouillon?

And now comes Prof. Metchnikoff of the Pasteur Institute of Paris, who insistently declares that his researches prove that there is no God!

Some years ago in Chicago, at a meeting of a Liberal League, a young man declared: "I KNOW there is no God."

Being of a modest disposition, the present writer did not, as he felt like doing, arise and declare: Mr. Chairman, I have found God! It is the young man who just declared he knows there is no God. To know there is no God, one must be omniscient and omnipresent; and as this young man positively knows there is no God, he must be God, himself.

The process that hatches sea unchins' eggs does not create the egg and its fertilizable principle.

If life can be produced by the action of radium, the vital principle must have existed in the radium; otherwise it could not produce life; and the old axiom, "ex nihilo, nihil fit," "out of nothing, nothing comes," would be proven false. Radium cannot give what it does not possess. Unless the rays have life, they cannot produce life. The thing produced must exist potentially in that which produces it.

Originating life is one thing; producing living forms, or manifestations of life, by the conjunction or blending of molecules or atoms in which life already exists, is quite another proposition.

What is life? Herbert Spencer says: "Life is a definite combination of heterogeneous changes, both simultaneous and successive, corresponding with external co-existences and sequences."

When we think of the marvelous, the wonderful exhibitions of spirit and intelligence, Spencer's definition seems wofully barren and deficient. And so, too, the definitions of other materialistic and semi-materialistic philosophers—for Spencer disclaimed that he was a materialist.

To maintain that life is simply a manifestation of chemical affinity, falls short of accounting for spirit and intelligence.

Life is that wonderful mysterious principle which organizes matter into living beings. It is not evolution, for evolution is not the cause of life but simply the method of life's operations.

The index of material and spiritual science, and metaphysical and philosophic thought, points to one conclusion: that life is inherent in matter and in spirit, in the physical atom and in spiritual substance, in organic forms and in the eternal primal essence, substance or principle, that underlies and is immanent in all existence.

Chemists in their laboratory investigations and manipulations speak of eliminating or destroying all life in their test preparations—but it is far from proved that there can be any substance without life, that life does not inhere in the essence of all substance, whatever the process to which it may have been subjected.

When scientists talk of producing life in dead matter they are simply begging the question; it remains to be proved that there is really any such thing as dead, lifeless matter. As the poet says:

* * * "The whole boundless universe
Is life—there are no dead."

After all our deepest study and thought, man is forced to confess; How little we know!

The great secret ever remains undiscovered—the great problem unsolved—so that finally with Dante one is impelled to exclaim:

* * "One doubt remains,
Which wrings me sorely if I solve it not."

Thus had I written, when in the Chicago Daily News appeared the following, which will be read with interest:

The Living Universe.

A new "Principia," that is, a new statement of the science of today as monumental as the great work of Newton, is demanded by a writer in the Scientific American, who says in part: "When gravitation was discovered and its phenomena reduced to rigid law all men saw at once that it was part of the base of the existing order of things. But Crookes' first vacuum tube made us aware of the existence of phenomena equally important. Radiation is as basic as attraction. And it may easily be imagined to be actually of greater use in the sidereal structure, if one mode of activity can be more potent than another. Every nook and corner of the universe must be, and in the very nature of things is, saturated with radiations and of many kinds of phases. Is it not as great to find that there is a flux everywhere within the universe as to detect the laws of gravitation? It may prove to be greater. The sun may not be required to shrink in diameter nine inches daily to maintain its present rate of radiation. The process of receiving and sending out corpuscles is competent to supply all its radio-activity. And it can issue many kinds of radiance, so long as the interchange with other suns is maintained. The problem here now is so much larger than any ever presented to man before that all others appear to be childlike in comparison. It is to discover, rescue from space, and use these obscure radiations from our own and other suns.

"Arrhenius shows that many particles balanced by radiance and attraction, 'swim in space' in regions adjacent to suns; but vast quantities not in the clutch of critical forces escape and dart into space. These are surely the corpuscles of electricity exploited by Thomson. For three years the floods of mail received here, letters, essays, pamphlets, books, everything, have one inevitable trend and tendency, and that is: The universe rests on an electrical base. In other words, nothing exists but electricity. This doctrine comes here from all directions. This universe is now maintained by 'action at a distance'; that is, radio-activity is its sole support. There is not a trace of a new idea in this. It is exceeding familiar. All have heard of it thus: 'Action and reaction are equal.' This is flux and flow of radiance in a nutshell.

"Then the universe is alive, is a living organism. This is familiar also; it was said in India many thousands of years ago, and has teemed on the pages of all Aryan literature since. None gave it attention, thinking it to be a vagary of some poet. The reception and emission of electrical corpuscles by every sun in existence are the causes of every conceivable phase of radiance. These two combined constitute the life of nature."

LETTER FROM AN OCTOGENARIAN

In Which He Details His Remarkable Experiences—One Thousand Words Written in a Minute by Materialized Spirits—Remarkable Spirit Paintings Executed in a Very Brief Period of Time.

To the Editor:—I was educated in the State University of Michigan and at the age of sixteen attended its first sessions. I will soon be 85 years of age, and I retain my mental powers as clearly as ever. I was an early student of Spiritualism. I have given it a great deal of attention; as my father's family, with the exception of one brother, have passed to the higher life and all of my family, nearly forty years ago, with all of whom I have often conversed in visible materialized form.

Paine's Age of Reason was put into my hands at the age of 14, and I have never been influenced by religious emotions, and consequently have no early teachings to combat, which is usually the case.

While some of your correspondents are very zealous on both sides of the questions discussed, as a silent spectator I can see how they feel in the matter.

Their zeal sometimes runs away with their discretion, and what seems to them true, to them is true.

I was more amused than surprised in reading in No. 822 the words of President Barrett, where he says: "There are those who are writing to me, asking of me what shall be done?" Many write to me what shall be done? And I answer: "Go and see for yourselves. I have but little faith in those who take the advice of anyone in matters of this kind."

But to proceed. He answers: "I can see but one thing to be done. Declare in positive terms to the world the demonstration of Sir William Crookes in regard to materialization, then honestly admit that as Spiritualists, we have not added an iota of evidence to his conclusions in thirty years; that we have nothing to offer the world to-day in this respect, and that we advise all investigators outside of the scientists in their laboratories, to let materialization alone—that is, the materialization as practiced by the so-called physical mediums of to-day."

When I consider the long and intimate acquaintance I have had with materialization in hundreds of seances, and have seen the medium cheerfully submit to the most crucial tests imposed by judges, lawyers, physicians, editors, ending without the least suspicion of trickery or fraud; when I have seen at least a thousand visitors recognize their relatives and friends, converse with them in the native language of the visitors, write in legible hand on tablets at the rate of one thousand words in a minute, draw life-size portraits in a minute of the visitors, friends or relatives, in a deep twilight, without brush or pencil, some of these in a locked box; and oil paintings of portraits equal in beauty and execution to any that I have ever seen in picture galleries (and I have seen some valued at $20,000), done in five minutes without brush or pencil in the visible form, of all present. And I was well acquainted with Prof. Denton, who took an active part in these seances.

Mr. Barrett is mistaken. He has never seen these phenomena; I have; so have thousands of others; and a witness who has seen is better than one who has not seen.

I have not, nor ever have had one cent of pecuniary interest in this matter; but when I see men making such statements as I have quoted, I feel like correcting them. I make no comments on Mr. Barrett's motive. He is perfectly honest and conscientious, and is doing what he feels it to be his duty.

I write this in the spirit of kindness and fraternal regard, and I want you to accept it in the same spirit which I trust you will.

KIND WORDS ARE BEST.

Through this mystic space called "life,"
Filled with daily joys and strife,
Kind words are best.
They will soothe the weary heart;
Take away the poisoned dart;
They will do the better part;
Kind words are best.

Though at times we strongly feel
To utter words like polished steel,
Kind words are best.
They leave no bitter sting behind,
Those words so gentle, calm and kind,
That but our hearts the closer bind,
Kind words are best.

Where'er we are, whate'er our lot,
Unkind words are dearly bought;
Kind words are best.
As angel touch, they softly greet;
Cause other hearts with love to beat;
They'll make our spirit life complete;
Kind words are best.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.
600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C.

Mrs. E. V. Wilson Gone Higher.

Through her granddaughter, Mrs. H. A. Born, we learn that the wife of E. V. Wilson, that grand old pioneer worker in the cause of Spiritualism, passed to spirit life, August 28, at 5:45 a. m., at the home of Mrs. Jellis, of Valparaiso, Ind. No particulars have been received regarding her death at present writing, but we are moved to say, one by one time removes the old workers, the old landmarks, and soon there will be none of the original workers to tell the tale of persecution, struggle and bitter denunciation encountered for Spiritualism at its birth; but the truth they so heriocally battled for has come to stay, and that must be gratifying to the spirits of those old pioneers in the cause.

Great is Humbuggery.

"There are tricks in every trade but mine," says the honest toiler. Whilst the adage may seem true with the mechanic, we apprehend it is also true with the professions, of which even the clerical is not exempt, and the medical need not be excused. We beg pardon of the latter if we accidentally tread on the toes of the M. Ds., many of whom we are proud to hail as personal friends, but "a good story," we are told, "should not be spoiled for relationship."

A gentleman in great physical distress, tears in his eyes, told of the agony he was suffering, giving the location of his ailment.

"Have you consulted a doctor?" we inquired.

"Yes," he replied.

"What did he call the disease?"

"Gastralgia. He said it was a very serious matter, but he hoped with care to pull me through all right."

Poor fellow, the doctor had told him truthfully he had "pain in the stomach," from the Greek gaster, stomach, and algos, pain, whether that pain arose from overloading the stomach, a malignant tumor, or one of a score of other causes he failed to inform his patient; probably did not know himself.

A lady, poor, dear creature, said the doctor had just pronounced the terrible agony she was suffering, ceph-a-lal-gia. She wanted to know if there was any cure for it. Here was the algos again, preceded by the Greek kephale, head; meaning simply, headache; but a very formidable ailment in its Greek disguise.

To tell a blind person he has amaurosis is only telling him in Greek, he is blind.

Thus we might go through the medical nomenclature, and show that much of the four years' course of the medical student spent in acquiring names of diseases, names of remedies etc., really do not add one particle to his success as a medical practitioner. Let us illustrate, and laugh. A medical professor gave his own experience before his class:

A lady had some ailment of the eyes, and called to her aid one of the college professors. He prepared a solution, directing her as to its use, and called daily to watch its effect. At his fourth visit, he found the good woman much improved. He congratulated her on her early recovery, when the following colloquy:

"Doctor, what is this medicine you have given me for my eyes?"

"It is a solution of chloride of sodium, madam; a most excellent remedy, as your own experience will attest."

"By what other name is this valuable remedy known?"

"It was formerly known as muriate of soda."

"Yes, I see, and it is better known to all of us as common table salt. Doctor, what is your bill?"

"Our regular fee is $2 a visit. We will call it $7."

"Here is your money, doctor. Hereafter I will endeavor to salt my own eyes."

With these simple facts who has the effrontery to deny the value of humbuggery?

It is said: "Two of the same trade can never agree." Is that the reason the old school doctors war on eclectics, homeopathists, magnetic healers, osteopathists, etc? each of whom, it is presumed, has tricks peculiar to his own craft.

Spiritualism as a Cult or Organization.

Spiritualism as a cult or organization may not be making notably rapid progress, but Spiritualism proper, the truth underlying it, the principles for which it stands and the knowledge of a conscious future state of spiritual existence are expanding and have advanced to that proportion where it is hard to determine the full extent of its movement.

THE WORLD IS AGLOW WITH ITS LIGHT. Science has felt the effect of its coming; the churches and the common, non-religious human beings, are set to thinking, and to investigating its phenomena, which in reality, belong to no cult, and cannot be controlled by any organization.

This advanced world; this advanced age; this advanced human mentality, betokens an underlying force that is impartial, universal, in its intents and purposes, if there be such. It betokens what we call design, backed by intelligence, that has no prejudices, no preferences, no special channels through which to express; only those, by law of adaptation, best fitted for use.

AS ITS GUIDE SPIRITUALISM CLAIMS NOTHING BUT THE RIGHT TO MODERN DISCOVERY OF AN OLD TRUTH, and the privilege of presenting it to a modern world in its modern way.

Organized, it has a personnel and becomes an institution to take its place among the similar institutions of the world.

Unorganized (and that means a large majority of the Spiritualists of the world) it is working its way through every conceivable avenue of receptivity and acceptance into the minds and souls of all peoples.

IT IS A GREAT MOVEMENT UPON THE EARTH, and all the more important by having come at a time when the world was groping in the black fog and darkness of ignorance, superstition and blind faith, with no real foundation upon which to rest any kind of belief, any kind of religion.

While Christianity, in its envy and jealous madness was burning witches at the stake it was destroying all the evidence it had of a future life,, aside from the records handed down in the bible, which could then only be considered "hearsay."

BUT IT WOULD NOT DOWN! It was left to be re-discovered by honest, unsuspecting, innocent little children. It rapped at the door and the children heard, and after testing its veracity, and knowing it was not evil, they let it in. THEY TOUCHED THE BUTTON THAT LIGHTED THE WORLD. They were not Spiritualists, they were just children; curious, questioning, inquiring, honest little children. They had not done anything that should make them fear an evil one, and as they could see no one, just out of childish curiosity they asked questions and got their answers in noises wherever they designated, on the head of their bed, the wall, the ceiling, the floor, etc., and their curiosity opened the door between the world mortal and the world immortal, between the spirit of man departed and man on earth. People investigated; people wondered; people called it the works of the Devil; people finally gathered about in homes, formed circles, got communications through the same and other means, and the discovery naturally took on the name of Spiritualism, a name ever dear to all who have found its truth.

But this is no reason for the permanence of the name. Age follows age; as generation follows generation, the name that sounds so good, the name that stands for so much to many of the present century may lose its inspiring attraction and be laid away forever in the next.

It matters but little by what name the rose may be known, the fragrance is there. It is the value to the world a thing or an institution is that makes it endure, not the name.

SPIRITUALISM MUST BE CLEAN AND PURE, AND MEAN SOMETHING, to have long life as an institution. It must stand squarely for a principle that appeals to the world of intelligent beings as "the thing they have been looking for;" the knowledge they have hoped for and prayed for.

Truth, in some age or other, will find her witness, and shall be justified at last by her own children.—Milton.

Custom without truth is but agedness of error.—Milton.

To smart and agonize at every pore.—Pope.

On the Road to Heaven.

Rev. Dr. McConnell, of the Clifton Heights Presbyterian Church, Des Moines, surprised everybody recently by the following announcement:

"To the Members of Clifton Heights Presbyterian Church:—Please note, persons attending service are hereby requested to wear inexpensive clothing, in order that no one, however humble, may be embarrassed."

Interviewed, the Doctor said he was convinced poor people did not attend church, for want of ability to dress as well as the wealthy. He said he would be glad to see men in denim and women in calico. For himself he would throw aside collar and cravat if the working classes will attend church.

The Progressive Thinker congratulates that church on having a sensible preacher. We beg leave respectfully, to suggest to the Doctor, to discard that part of his mythological creed that teaches of the fall of man, of total depravity, an angered God, a blood atonement, an eternal hell, and a final judgment, then the clothes question can be compromised. While amending his creed let him add: "No day is too good to do right; all days are too good to do wrong," then he will be far advanced on the heavenly road.

Worthy of Imitation.

The librarian of the Imperial Library of Tokio has lately made a report, which puts to shame the libraries of Christian nations. The simple facts are all the thinker needs:

There were 12,486 works relating to theology and religion called for during the year, one sixth of one per cent of the total books in the library. Of works classified as mathematics, science and medicine, there were 166,677 volumes, or 21-6 per cent of the total. Of works on literature and language 152,711 books, that is 20 per cent of the whole; whilst treatises on history and geography equaled 18 per cent. Works on art, productive industries, engineering, military and naval science are prominent on the list of new books added to the library in recent years.

Contrast this showing with the great libraries of America, where fiction is largely in the lead, then take a lesson from a nation missionaries are so anxious to Christianize.

Founding New Religions as a Business Enterprise.

"Public Opinion," in a late issue under the head of "Wealth of New Religions," by Louis Paul Kirby, seems to show that love of God and His anointed are not the only motives for founding the new faith. The writer sets out with the proposition—

"It takes no capital to start a new religion, or a get-rich-quick enterprise. Both fields of activity are crowded with needy adventurers. Those who become inventors of new religions, and founders of queer communities sometimes meet with storms; but oftener enter placid waters, and their guerdons surpass the dreams of avarice. * * America has always had a weakness for fantastic religions. Millions of dollars, amassed by thrift, industry, and self-denial, are swallowed up every year by schemers masquerading as prophets or inspired teachers; and the strangest part of it all is, the men and women who thus yield up their savings are hard-headed enough to defy all work-a-day assaults on their pocket-books."

The writer then introduces a series of wealth-producing founders of new religions, only one of which we introduce this week, but will try and make room for the residue in the near future. He begins with the founder of Christian Science, and says:

"In the beginning Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy opened a sort of 'faith cure' boarding house, which she called by the grandiloquent name of 'Massachusetts Metaphysical College.' That was thirty years ago. Mrs. Eddy was then an attractive young woman who had been twice married, and was seeking a pleasant means of earning her bread and butter. She, probably, had no idea at that time that great riches would be poured into her lap, or that her 'Church of Christ, Scientist,' would cause such numerous desertions from the older congregations of the land as to alarm the clergy.

"For fourteen years Mrs. Eddy plodded along with her 'faith cure' boarding house. Then, sixteen years ago, she opened her first church of Christian Scientists in Boston, with twenty-six members. It had taken her all those years to gather together that little band of followers. After that things went with leaps and bounds. 'The Mother Church' in Boston now has 15,000 members and there are more than 500 Christian Science congregations scattered throughout the country. They are increasing every year. Some of the Christian Science temples are structures of great architectural beauty. In New York the two churches facing the west side of Central Park are regularly visited by sight seers.

"The immense profits that accrue through the invention of a new religion are made clear by the admission of Mrs. Eddy, that she abandoned her 'Metaphysical College,' although her income from it was $40,000 a year, to devote her time exclusively to the upbuilding of Christian Science. That this step was not in the nature of a sacrifice is shown in still further admissions—made by her secretary—that it is her custom to give away in charity more than $2,000 every year, and that she began this liberality as far back as 1895, when her church was only six years old. If it were not ungallant it might be added that these figures would indicate that Mrs. Eddy's nest must have been well feathered at the beginning of these disbursements, for she is a woman who believes that charity begins at home.

"During the past ten years Mrs. Eddy's profits, including bequests, are said to have amounted to fully $1,000,000. When the $200,000 Christian Science church was built in Boston the congregation offered to give her title to the property. She refused the offer. This was hailed as a sign of unworldliness, but the truth was, Mrs. Eddy had become glutted with wealth. Money flowing to her from a dozen sources, she had no desire for the deed to a paltry $200,000 church."

From this presentation of Mr. Kirby it would appear the founding of Christian Science has been a pecuniary success. Next week we will copy his "Dowie and His Millions," and there learn how "Tall oaks from little acorns grow."

A Fact, With Questions.

Statistics show that since 1810 the American Board of Missions has spent $36,000,000 in its propaganda work, and has sent 2,000 missionaries into the field. Has the world been bettered, or the truth advanced by the expenditure? Is not commerce the great civilizer? Was it not the Mediterranean that made all nations bordering on its waters akin, and established a common faith on every shore? And the different gods worshiped, were they not names in different languages, and of different attributes of the same God still adored? These are questions for thinkers only.

J. J. Morse and the Banner of Light.

To the Editor:—I desire to thank The Progressive Thinker for so kindly printing my letter in its issue of August 26, as it was the means of securing me a necessary solution of an important issue, viz., a vindication of my personal veracity.

After the arrival in Boston of the issue of The Progressive Thinker above referred to, I was able to have a personal interview with the manager of the Banner of Light, to— in his own words —"adjust your (my) claim for salary," the said interview occurring on Friday afternoon, August 25. The "adjustment," when effected—my claim not being disputed—leaving the proprietors of the paper 388.45 my debtors, and I copy herein the form of receipt which has passed, from which it will be seen that I have obtained $47.61 in cash, and three notes at 4, 8 and 12 months for the outstanding amount of $340.84. The receipt reads as follows:

"Dartmouth Company (Successors to Banner of Light Publishing Co.) 204 Dartmouth Street, Boston, Mass., Aug. 25, 1905. Received of Irving F. Symonds, treasurer of the Dartmouth Company, and treasurer of the Banner of Light Publishing Company, forty-seven and 61-100 dollars in cash, and three notes of one hundred and thirteen and 61-100 ($113.61), each payable in four, eight and twelve months, in consideration whereof I hereby release and discharge said Dartmouth Company and said Banner of Light Publishing Company of and from all claims and demands I now have against either or both, for salary or otherwise. Signed. J. J. Morse."

As I am upon the eve of departing for England and have no time for a longer letter, I content myself for the present with the above bare statement of fact, the greatest merit of the situation, in my estimation, being that it entirely relieves me from the suspicion of preferring a false claim that had no basis in fact. The nature of the settlement requires no comment.

With many thanks to the editor for his kindness, which will ever be most appreciatively remembered, I remain, your friend and co-worker,

J. J. MORSE.

Boston, Mass., August 27, 1905.

SOUND FORMS ILLUSTRATED.

For Good or Evil, Every Spoken Word Goes Forth and Carries Its Waves of Motion Into the Atmosphere—Facts Worthy of Attention.

By scientific experiments [as set forth in the Message of Life] it has been found that the vibrations which produce musical sounds emerge and travel as figures of great beauty and variety. Various attempts have been made to render the sonorous vibrations visible. Chladni succeeded in his experiments by scattering powder or sand on plates of glass and then drawing a violin bow across one of the edges of the plate, when many varied and lovely figures, star-like and geometrical, were produced according to the note played. Mrs. Watts Hughes, an English lady, has lately been experimenting in this field of research, and has invented an instrument which she calls the eidophone, for the transmission and expression of the sonorous vibrations. It consists simply of a kind of speaking trumpet with an upward bend in it, the top of which is carefully covered with a well-stretched membrane of India-rubber. The membranes used are of different degrees of thickness, and the discs over which the membrane is stretched also vary in size according to the powder or liquid used in the experiments and the lung capacity of the voice, and also according to the figures required. Upon the membrane fine sand or lycopodium is sprinkled, or prepared watercolor, such as flake white, is placed upon it, and upon the singing of any note through the trumpet a figure is produced upon the sensitive surface of the membrane. These figures are wonderfully varied, and most of them very beautiful, consisting of geometrical patterns, crystals and shell forms, flowers, leaves, and even trees and beautiful landscapes.

Besides sand and lycopodium figures Mrs. Hughes experimented with water or milk, with which she flooded the disc; and then, when a note was sung through the tube, the liquid surface became at once covered with regular wavelets in beautiful patterns, the wavelets varying in size according to the number of vibrations of the notes sung. When flake white or red lead was added to the water many of the curves of the liquid became more definite and spread out into forms suggestive of roots, branches and foliage.

In experimenting it has been found that the figures produced bear a strict relation to the pitch and intensity of the notes sung into the trumpet. It would seem, then, that the vibrations of the air forced from the larynx are sent forth in rhythmical waves which take shape in perfect accord with the note and its density. Every note has a corresponding form which has a distinct individuality, any slight variation of pitch or intensity from the original note altering the form in some way.

In order to produce any particular figure, the note must be sung with the exact amount of intensity, and in the exact pitch by which the form was originally produced; certain figures, in fact, will only form under the influence of simple tones.

That a single note sung into a tube should, on a simple membrane, be translated into a figure so involved, so exquisite, so full of meaning, as most of these pictures are, must, indeed, "give us pause," and carry our thoughts to that which lies in the realm of the unseen, for these figures reveal what hitherto has been unseen—something of that tremendous ocean of voice-vibrations which flood the world with their million myriads of forms, in the midst of which we live and move and have our being.

For good or evil, every spoken word goes forth and carries its waves of motion into the atmosphere. To do what? Who can say? All we know is that those waves go forth and take their place and exert their influence upon the sum total of vibrations that pulsate everywhere upon the brain or the finer self within.

Registered in the surrounding atmosphere, every cadence tells. The utterance of impatience and of anger as well as the expression of kindness and affection, are sent forth into that invisible world where all the subtle causes are. Who can tell what influences the forms produced may have upon the feelings and thoughts of others? We are assured by science that every vibration set going, travels throughout space, and plays some part in the tremendous whole. What if the vibrations we send forth are discords, ugliness, sources of irritation? Who knows the mischief they may do when received upon the sensitive brain or more sensitive spirit of one in a condition to receive them? on the other hand, if the vibrations we set going are melodious, beautiful, and sources of joy, who can tell what ministries of good, what suggestions of soothing may go with them?

In John Ruskin's "Time and Tide," there is a passage of profoundest significance. He said: "I called on Mr. H. C. Sorby, to see some of the results of an inquiry he has been following all last year, into the nature of the coloring matter of leaves and flowers. * * * My friend showed me the rainbow of the rose, and the rainbow of the violet, and the rainbow of the hyacinth, and the rainbow of forest leaves dying. And, last, he showed me the rainbow of blood. It was but the three-hundredth part of a grain, dissolved in a drop of water; and it cast its measured bars, forever recognizable now to human sight, on the chord of the seven colors."

If sound vibrations fill the air and take on form, what beautiful pictures we should see if we had eyes refined enough to behold them. Is it too large a speculation that this unseen universe of exquisite vibrations does convey delight to unseen beings adapted to receive and comprehend them? If we are to believe what clairvoyants tell us, they hear the thrilling harmony and get glimpses of the beauty of the unseen world. They testify to the creation of form by the sweet music of the spheres. We are surrounded and enveloped by mysteries. Man knows little of the vibrations of thought, of voice, of song. The colors of the rainbow and the notes in music run from one to seven, and so far as has been observed every musical sound takes on form, creating shells, snowflakes, flowers, trees, ferns, mosses, crystals, feathers, and microscopic objects. The Greek idea of the "harmony of the spheres" was more than a poetical expression, and we have, as yet, learned literally nothing of the finer forces of nature.

A Gross Libel on God.

"If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou, nor thy fathers; * * * thou shalt surely kill him; thy hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people."—God, Deuteronomy 13: 6, 9.

Here was Bible authority for the inquisitors, and right zealously they obeyed the command, using stake and fagot in place of stoning; while "other gods" were interpreted as other faiths than that entertained by the church. The Christian system drew its inspiration from passages like the quotation, hence its bloody character in the past.

A COMPARISON.

Christian Russia and Pagan Japan.

To the Editor:—Mr. James Sargent practically opposes peace between Russia and Japan until the former triumphs over the latter. He has issued a three column address to the Russian people, which is printed in full in the "Los Angeles Times," of August 13, 1905. The original copy has been delivered to Paul Kesakevitch, Russian Consul at San Francisco, to be forwarded to Russia for distribution among that people. A copy has also been sent to Sergius Witte, Russia's chief envoy to the Peace Conference. The following is the concluding portion of the address:

"Are we, for the first time, to see the pages of history draped in black recording the fall of Christianity before Paganism? O, Russia; rise up in thy might, awake, shake off thy lethargy; Remember the centuries of war you waged for God and Christianity. Remember the wars of Napoleon's time; how they brought you down, how thy soil was desecrated by the footprints of thy enemies, how even thy holy city, Moscow, and the sacred Kremlin, fell in the hands of thy foes. Job, with all his successive calamities was not as hopeless as you were then, and you rose out of the ashes like a sphinx, stronger and more mighty than ever. Does history record in those trying times a single individual who wanted peace with his foes? No, a thousand times no. Your fathers fought like heroes, sacrificed all they possessed, and gladly offered their lives as a last token of love for their fatherland. And now comes a proposition for peace suggested in such dishonorable terms, that one's blood boils at the very thought of it. Peace, no; War! War! Send forth thy sons, O, Russia, avenge thyself, saturate the soil with the precious blood of thy youth, though they fall by thousands, and hundreds of thousands. Give in to the Heathen; Never; Fight on! Do not surrender on the first reverse. Show thy grit! Fight on! Do not stop because you have been scratched, but fight on, with your last breath, for it becomes a true Christian. O, Russia; dost thou not read history? Have not legions of our martyrs died upholding the cross, and through their death the cause of Christianity grew stronger and stronger? What will thy children and children's children say, when they turn back the pages of history and see the black spot of Russia's ignominy? It is not Russia and Japan. It is Christianity against Paganism, the Cross of Christ against Idolatry, the white against the yellow."

The Russian brand of Christianity may suit Mr. Sargent, but will not commend itself to the average American. It will be remembered that during the bloody massacre of the Jews within the past five years, the "Christian Cossacks," beat the brains out of old crippled men and women, outraged girls, tossed little babies from one to another from the points of their bayonets, and committed all sorts of outrages. During the present year, a great unarmed crowd of half-starved working men, women and children, led by Priest Gopon, attempted to call on the Czar and ask him to try and ameliorate their condition. The Russian Christians shot them down like dogs, pierced them through with bayonets, and hewed them unmercifully to pieces. It is a common practice in "Christian Russia" to knout prisoners to death for trivial offences, such as being a Jew, or for favoring a constitutional government or failing to take your hat off when meeting an officer.

The humanitarian societies of Europe, have, for years, been trying to secure better conditions for women in Russia, but without avail. A writer, at Rome, as published in the "Denver Daily News" of August 6, says, M. Pobiedonosteff, the Procurator of the Holy Synod of Russia, is so malicious against the Jews as well as against the education of women in general, that he has had laws enacted that "no girl of Jewish descent is allowed to reside outside of the Jewish zone unless she agrees to become a prostitute. All girls who enter the University are required to receive a yellow passport the same as the common prostitutes are compelled to wear. This method was adopted to deter women from entering any institution of learning. This policy of the government of the "holy church" was adopted for the sole purpose of keeping women in the densest ignorance, and they have succeeded in creating a nation of mothers but little removed above the animal in intelligence. They are in a condition of deplorable ignorance and superstition.

Japan may be a "pagan nation," and its people may be historically ignorant of the cross of Christ, but her ancient and illustrious religious teachers, Buddha and Confucius, taught their followers the Golden Rule, the respect and obedience of children to their parents, kindness to animals, as well as to humans, and to be gentle and courteous to all, and refrain from drunkenness. During the present war Japan has elicited the unstinted praise of the civilized world because of her humane treatment of prisoners of war. American writers who have traveled extensively in that country bear testimony to the cleanliness, intelligence, sobriety, and high morality of the inhabitants of Japan. At the risk of being called a heathen I am willing to be put down as having a much greater admiration for the religion of Japan than for the Christianity of Russia.

BEAUTIFUL PHENOMENA.

Strange and Wonderful Sunsets Beheld.

If any of the readers of The Progressive Thinker have ever witnessed a phenomenal sunset like the following, please report.

In the year 1893, my wife, Mrs. Ellen O. Sweet, commenced her development in mediumship. She was then an invalid, and her guides said that her physical was in such a bad condition it would be necessary for them to almost build a new body; which promise has been fulfilled.

One evening of the year 1894, as Mrs. Sweet stood looking at a clear sunset, fully enjoying the sight of the beautiful tints cast upon the fleecy clouds near the setting sun, a voice said to her, "You shall yet see a far more wonderful sunset."

In the spring of 1903, Mrs. Sweet's sister, Rebekah Owen, then living at Fleetwood, Eng., was preparing to come to America, and in one of Mrs. Sweet's letters to her sister in England she described the colors of the steamer Rebekah would sail on in coming to America. When Rebekah came to the wharf she said she "was very particular to note if the steamer was painted as Mrs. Sweet had described it," and to her surprise, it was exactly as described.

After Rebekah arrived at our home she said to Mrs. S., "How could you tell the color of the boat?"

"Why, I could see it."
